West of these Selebes, lyeth B O R N E O, of more note and greatness, than any hitherto described, in these Indian Seas. In compass after their account who speak most sparingly, 2200 miles; but as some say, no less than three months sail about. Situate under the Aequator, which parteth the Dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Laus: opposite on the North to Camboia; on the South, to Java; on the East, to Selebes on the West, unto the Isle of Sumatra. The Inhabitants of this Island are so curious to have a lawful Heir upon the Throne, that the Husband not being certain the Children which he has by his Wife are his own, but she is certain they are hers, therefore they rather chuse to be Governed by a Woman to whom they give the Title of Queen; her Husband being only her Subject, and having no power but what she gives him. Tavernier, Part 2. Pag. 140. In this Island there is a River called Succadan, in the Sand of which are found Diamonds, but the Queen will not suffer them to be exported. Whether this Custom of being always Governed by a Queen is taken up since this Author wrote, or that there is more Kingdoms than he reckons in this Island is not known to me.

But

but some years since there was in our Gazette a famous controversy mentioned between one of these Sovereign Queens and her Rival, who pretended to be the true Heness, and that the Reigning Queen was a Counterfeit; this came to a civil War, and several Battels were fought between them. It may be here observed, That all these female Kingdoms are in the hot Countries, and seem to be an effect of the Raging Lust of the Men, who overvaluing the soft Sex not onely call them, but really make them their Mistresses; whereas our furious Lovers can very hardly submit to the Goddesses they adore for any long time: in Ancient times many parts of Ethiopia, and Arabia Felix were ever Governed by Women, some of which are mentioned in the Sacred Scripture.

The Country said to be provided naturally of all things necessary; yet said withal to be unfurnished of Asses, Oxen, Herds of Cattel, except onely Horses, and these but small of stature neither: the greatest riches of it being Camphire, Agarick, and some Mines of Adamants; erroneously conceived by Mercator to be the Insula bona Fortuna, spoken of by Ptolemy; that being seated opposite to the outlets of Ganges, in the Latitude of a hundred forty five Degrees, and fifteen Minutes; this Eastward some degrees of the Golden Chersonese, and consequently twenty Degrees distant at the least from that Island in Ptolemy.

The people generally more white than the rest of the Indians; of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans, or Gentiles. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions; the King of Borneo and his subjects being all Mahometans, those of Laus still remaining in their ancient Gentilism. These think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their children; ascribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun especially; whom they salute at his first rising with great Reverence, saying certain Verses. Their publick busineses are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Counsellors of State meet, and ascend some tree, viewing the Heavens till the Moon rise, and then go to the Senate-House. The same Apparel generally of both Religions; but thin, by reason of the great heat of the Air: a shirt of Silk; or of Calicoe, or some such slight stuff, worn more for modesty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Borneo, situate in the North-West part of the Island near a goodly Bay, but in the middle of the Fens like the City of Venice, and seated as that is, on Piles; the building sumptuous, of hewed stones, covered with the leaves of the Coco-tree. The Town so large as to contain 25000 Families. 2 Taiopura, 3 Tamaoratas, 4 Malano, all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodious Havens. 5 Sadana, a Factory of English. 6 Lavi on a large Bay in the South-East part of the Island, the ordinary Seat of the King of Laus. 7 Paro, on another capacious Bay, not far from Lavi, and directly opposite to Borneo: that being seated on the North-West, and this on the South-East of the Island. Betwixt these two Kings is the whole divided; but so that he of Borneo hath the greatest part of it, and therefore keeps the greater State: not to be spoken with, but by the mouth of some of his own Interpreters; and in his Palace served by no other Attendants, than Maids or Women: A manifest token of their Effeminacy.

7. J A V A.

Opposite to Borneo towards the South lie the Isles of J A V A, two in number; both situate South of the Equator, both of great Circumference, and commonly distinguished into Major and Minor, or the greater and the lesser Java.

1. J A V A M A J O R, the More Northward of the two, and by much the bigger, is said to be in compass 2000 miles; and that by them who reckon elsewhere Borneo for the biggest of these Seas. But the truth is, That the South parts of this Island not being perfectly discovered, make the admeasurements thereof to be very uncertain, Conceived most properly to be the Aladin of Ptolemy, the most Northern part whereof is placed by him in the eighth degree of Southern Latitude: said by him to afford much Gold and Silver, to be exceeding fruitful of all other necessaries; and finally, that the name did signifie zeibis mōr or the Island of Barley. All which agreeth punctually with the present Island, the word Java, signifying a kind of grain much like our Barley; and Dia in the Persian and Indian Tongues signifying an Island. And so in Java, we have found the Island of Java, the mutation of B. into V. being ordinary.

Then for the riches and fertility of it, it is said to yield great plenty of Fruits, and Corn, but of Rice especially: flesh of all sorts, salted and sent from hence into other Countries; great store of Fowl, both wild and tame, plenty of Gold, some precious stones, and the best kind of Brass; Silks in abundance, and great quantities of Pepper, Ginger, Cinnamon, and some other Spices. In a word, so befriended by the bounty of Nature, that Scaliger calleth it Epitome Mundi, or the whole World contracted in a lesser Volume. But withal it is much exposed to storms and tempests, from which seldom free.

This Island lyes 200 Leagues in Length. On the West it has Sumatra another Island, on the East it has some other small Isles; on the South the vast Ocean Plays full upon it, and on the North it has the Island of Borneo at the distance of 45 German miles. In the year 1591. Odericus a Frier minor was in this Island, and calls it Java; though he gives other names to all the other places he was in, than they now have. He saith it was in circuit 3000 miles, divided into 8 Kingdoms, but all subject to one Supreme Prince, full of People and one of the Richest Kingdoms in the World; the Palace Royal being paved with Bricks of Gold and Silver chequered. And that this Prince always beat the Tartars when they invaded him Hackluit. T. 2. p. 45. This Frier I believe was the first European that Pierced into India, and came back. It is divided into 9 Kingdoms the greatest of which is the Kingdom of Bantam. The whole Island produceth great quantities of Spice, and is on that account much frequented by the English and Dutch; which last had heretofore only the Fort or City of Batavia in this Island, and not contented with this neither, about the year 1684 Joyning with a Son of the King of Bantam, who was then in Rebellion against his Father, upon pretence of assisting of him; they Seized the City of Bantam, and kept the old King a Prisoner in the Castle of Bantam. But finding there were several attempts to restore him to his former Possession, in the year 1686, the young King by the Advice of the Dutch removed his Captive Father to Batavia. The Dutch have yet left the Son to Govern the Kingdom as a vassal to them, they regarding nothing but the trade and City; and the English have erected another Factory in the other parts of the Island, that in Bantam being Seized by the Hollanders. It lyes between 130. and 140 Longitude, and 5 and 10 of the Southern Latitude.

The people of a middle stature, corpulent, and of broad Faces, most of them naked, or covered onely with a slight silken stuff, and that no lower than the knee; accounted the most Civil people of all the Indians, as fetching their descent from China: but withal treacherous, very proud, much given to lying, and very careless of their words, to which so used, that they count it not amongst their Faults. And therefore when a King of theirs had broke promise with the Hollanders, and was challenged for it, he answered, That his tongue was not made of bone. Cruel they are also said to be, and implacable, if once offended: accustomed of old to eat the bodies of their friends; accounting no burial so honourable, nor obsequy so applaudive. This also a custom amongst many of the rest of the Indians, and so hath it been ever since the beginning of the Persian Monarchy. Herodotus reporteth how Darius Hystaspes understanding of this custom, and without knowing how the Gracians use to burn their dead; sent to the Greeks; that it was his pleasure they should eat the bodies of their dead. But they used all kinds of devices.

sion and intreaty, not to be forced to so brutish and barbarous a custom. Then commanded he the Indians to conform themselves to the fashion of the Gracians; but they all more abhorred to burn the dead, than the Greeks did to eat them. So impossible it is for a custom either to be suddenly left off, or to seem undecent and inconvenient if once thoroughly settled.

In matter of Religion they are all Mahometans, or Gentiles, according to the fancy of their several Kings, whereof in this Island there are very many; one for every great Tribe, or more powerful Family. Zealous in their Religion whatsoever it be, as appears by the sad story of the Daughter of the King of Balambua, murdered by her Husband the King of Passarua, the second night after her Wedding, with all her Attendants; because they would not be Mahometans, which was his Religion. Yet in some common Principles they agree well enough, punishing Adultery with death; in which case the Woman chooseth her nearest Kinsman for her Executioner: but otherwise spending the Day and Night in much Sloth and Dalliance. Of the two, Gentilism is the more diffused, because most ancient; the Sect of Mahomet not being introduced till the year 1560. though of a very swift growth, and of a great increase for so short a time.

Their chief Towns, 1 Panarucan, near a burning hill, which in the year 1686. broke forth exceedingly, oppressed infinite numbers of Men, and cast great stones into the City for three days together. This lyes 30 miles from Passarua to the East, and 45 from Balambuan to the North, on the East side of the Island. 2 Fortam, a Town of a 1000 Households, the Inhabitants whereof are Gentiles, and have their Temples in the Woods: the Chief-Priest of whose superstition hath his dwelling here of great authority and power over all the Island. There is also a River of the same name. 3 Ballambua, 4 Passarua, 5 Taban, 6 Matara, This is a great City on the South-side of the Isle of Java, one hundred Leagues from Bantam to the East, 120 from Ballambuan and only 40 from Japara. This is the Capital of a Kingdom of the same name, which is of great extent from East to West, and was once the Capital City of the whole Island of Java; Longitude 135. 40 South Latitude 8. 20. 7 Daunia, 8 Taggal, 9 Surrabea, 10 Gatabaon; the seats of so many of their Kings: some of them also furnished with convenient Havens. 12 BANTAM, the seat also of a King, but of most trade in all the Island, seldom without the company of English, Portugals, and Hollanders; the principal Factory of the English in all the Indies, though they have many besides this. The Town unwholsomly seated in a moorish ground, and much subject to fire. This City is seated at the foot of an hill 18 Leagues from the City of Batavia towards the West, upon a Narrow Passage called the Straights of Bantam and was at first subject to the Emperour of Japar Prince of Java, but rebelled against his Master and was therein upholden by the Hollanders, who reap the Advantage of Joyning with one of these Princes against the other, as occasion serves till they can ruin both, as in effect they have ruined the King of Bantam. This City stands right over against the Island of Sumatra. It has a very good harbour belonging to it, called the Sound, and was much frequented by the European Merchants, especially the English and Dutch: the Kingdom of Jacatra was subject to this Prince, and he had often made War with the Dutch, and had reasonable good Success in it; till about the year 1684. a Son of the King of Bantam, rebelling against his Father, called the Dutch to his Assistance, by which means the Dutch possessed themselves of Bantam, Seized the English Factory and their effects, and made themselves sole Masters of that Trade; the Controversy between them and the English not being determined to this day. 12 Sunda, situate in a place abounding in Pepper. 13 Agracan, a convenient Port. Here was also in the time of Ptolemy a Town called 1 Argyropolis or the Silver-City, long ago destroyed. And now here is, 15 Sura, a new Town in the Territories of the King of Bantam, built by some of the Subjects of the King of Passarua; who being oppressed by their own King, came into this part of the Country, where they got leave to build this City. The people whereof live quietly according to their own Laws, follow their Husbandry abroad, but never marry; and yet do not want a constant Succession, adopting some of the other Javans into their Society, as they find their number to diminish.

16 Jacatra one of the Royal Cities of Java which had a King of its own when the English first came thither; the English took the Town from the King, burnt it and built a Fort in the place where it stood; but in the year 1619. the Dutch by treachery Surprized this Fort, cut off the English, and have since built the Capital City of their Trade in the East-Indies in the same Place and called it Batavia; by this means they are become the Masters of the Island of Java to a great Degree.

Of the story of this Island I can say but little. Divided into many petty and inconsiderate Kingdoms; and those divided too by Mountains, crossing the Island in the middle from West to East, which cut off all commerce and correspondence betwixt one another. Some of these Kings Mahometans, some Gentiles, as before was said; all subject or homagers at least to one of the Kings of the Gentiles, who hath his dwelling in the midst of the Island. Next him, the King of Tuban was conceived to be richest, and the King of Ballambua of the greatest Territory; whose Family after long war and blood-shed, begun in the murder of his Daughter, is said to be wholly rooted out by the King of Passarua. These Kings much revered by their subjects, and so well obeyed, that whatsoever they command, is done, be it never so dangerous.

2. JAVA MINOR, situate on the South of the other, is said to be 2000 miles in compass, and to be very near the firm Lands of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent. Not very well known to any of our late Adventurers; but generally affirmed (not so much on certain knowledge as uncertain conjecture) to be of the same nature and condition with the greater Java. The Inhabitants hereof in the time of Paulus Venetus, who had travelled in it, reported to be Cannibals, Idolaters, devourers of their Parents and dearest friends; and to worship all day whatsoever they saw first in the morning. Divided then into eight Kingdoms, distinguished by the names of their principal Towns. Six whereof he had seen, which are these that follow. 1 Felch, where the Townsmen were Moors, and the Peasants Gentiles. 2 Basma, which did acknowledge the Great Cham of Tartaria for Lord in chief; but without paying of any tribute. 3 Samara, where none of the North-stars could be seen. 4 Sambri, in which some Men were said to have tails like Dogs. 5 Fansur, in which they have a Tree, the wood whereof put in water, will sink like Iron; of which they use to make Launces that will pierce an Armour. And 6 Dragorian, of which there is nothing memorable or prodigious, but that the people of it use to eat their nearest Kinsmen; and that no Prodigie at all, because used by others.

To these two we may joyn MADURA, on the North of the greater Java, fertile of Rice, but otherwise of so waterish and moist a Soil, that Men and Cattel use to go knee-deep when they sow it. The chief Town whereof is called Arosbay. And on the East the same Java the Island Baly, exceeding populous for the bigness, supposed to contain 600000 Inhabitants; and very well provided of Bulls, Buffles, Goats, Horses, Swine, many kind of fruits, and some store of metals.

8. SUMATRA.

SUMATRA lieth on the North of the greater Java, betwixt it and the Strait of Sincapura, the most Southern Town of the Golden Chersonese. The Strait in that place so straight and narrow, not above a Musket-shot in breadth, that some conceive this Island to have been formerly joyned unto it by some little Isthmus; since worn away by the violence and working of the Sea; and that that this Island, and not the Land of Malaca, was that Golden Chersonese, which we find in Ptolemy. More probably by far than that we should run after it to the Isle of Japan, situate on the East of China, so far from any part of India, where it is placed by the Author of the Atlas Minor.

The length hereof, extended from the North-west to the South-east, is said by some to be 900, by others but 700 miles, the breadth 200, and the whole compass 2100. Strangely affirmed by some Writers to be the biggest of all the East; who yet assign a greater circuit unto Java, and as great to Borneo. Situate under the Equator, which divideth it into two parts very near an equality: that on the North-side reaching unto five degrees, that on the South-side but to seven degrees from the Line it self. By which account there is little difference betwixt the length of a day and a night; both much at one in all times of the year whatever.

The air hereof by consequence must be very hot, but withal unwholsome: not so much in regard of the extreme heats, as by reason of the gross vapours drawn from the many Fens and Rivers which are found to be in it; and the thick Woods which intercept the free course of a purging wind. The Soil not capable of such grain as in other places, except Rice, and Millet (for I know not otherwise how to render the Latine, Millium) but yielding Ginger, Pepper, Camphire, Agarick, and Cassia, in great abundance. It affordeth also great plenty of Wax and Honey, store of Silks and Cottons, rich Mines, not only of Tin, Iron, Sulphur, and other Minerals, but of Gold such quantity, that some conceive this Island to be Solomon's Ophir. And if Pedruca Siric, one of the Kings of this Island, in a Letter Written to King James I. did not brag too impudently; it may be probable enough. For by that Letter it appeareth, That all the furnitures of his house, and trappings of his Elephants and Horses, with all his Armour, were of pure Gold, and that he had in his Dominions a whole Mountain of Gold; King of which Golden Mountain he entituled himself in his Regal Style. The Gold is thus found: After the Rainy Season, when the Torrents are Wasted, they find veins of Gold in the Flints, which the Waters wash down from the Mountains, which lye Towards the North-East, but it is very Course: Tavernier p. 2. p. 156.

The Inhabitants are many of them good Artificers, cunning Merchants, or expert Mariners. All of them Gentiles till about two hundred and thirty years since, at what time by the diligence of some Arabian Merchants trading to this Island, Mahometanism began to spread upon the Coasts. But in the In-land parts of the Country they are Gentiles still, and still retain amongst them their old barbarous customs. The most loving Men unto their Enemies that were ever known; for otherwise they would never eat them. Having eaten, they use their skulls instead of Money, which they exchange or barter for such necessities, as their wants require: and he is thought to be the wealthiest Man amongst them, who hath most of this coyn. Those of the other Religion, though in most points and customs they agree with the rest of the Mahometans, have this one singular to themselves: which is, that once every year on a certain day, they go solemnly unto their Mosquits to see if Mahomet be come, leading a spare horse for him to ride upon: which (missing him) is mounted at their coming back, by the best Man in the company. Of any great Progress that Christianie hath made here, I have no good evidence.

That here are many and great Rivers, hath been said before, but their names I find not. Here are also many Mountains, and those great and high; that of most note called Balakuanus, said to burn continually, out of which, or not far off do arise two Fountains, of which the one is said to run pure Oyl, and the other the best Balsamum: which I bind no Man to believe, but such as have seen it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Achen, the Seat-Royal of that Kingdom, beautified with the Regal Palace, to which they pass thorough seven Gates one after another, with green Courts between the three outermost; those three continually guarded with Women expert at their weapons and using both Swords and Guns; the only ordinary guard that he hath for his Person. The materials of this Palace mean, but the furniture costly, the Walls thereof being hanged commonly with Muske and Damask and sometimes with cloth of Gold. The King of this City is in League with the Dutch, who export from hence many rich Commodities and rich Spices, 1 Pepper, 2 Cambar, 3 Menantabo, 4 Aura, and 5 Indragie, the seats of so many of their Kings. 6 Passaman, a Town of great Trade, but situate in a Moorish and unhealthy place; found so experimentally by too many of the English, who have there their Factory. 7 Priamon, and 8 Tecoo, of a more healthy air, but not so commodious in their Havens as is that of Passaman: these three Towns standing in that part of the Country where the Pepper groweth.

All that we know touching the story of this Country is, That the Portugals when they first came hither, found in it nine and twenty Kings; reduced since to a smaller number. For Abraham sometimes a Slave, afterwards King of Achen, having turned Mahometan, by the help of the Turks and Arabians, subdued the Realms of Pedir and Pacem. Aladine who succeeded him, being once a Fisherman, and grown famous for his exploits at Sea, was by this King preferred to the marriage of one of his Kinswomen, made his Lord Admiral, and by him trusted with the protection of his Son and Heir: of whom instead of a Protector he became a murderer, and usurped the State unto himself. When King, he added to his Crown the Kingdom of Aru, or Aura, and Manucabo: and almost all the rest on the North part of the Island. In this King's time, the English were first settled in their factory there: Grown old (a hundred years at the least) he was imprisoned by his eldest Son, impatient of a longer stay, alledging that his age had made him unfit for Government Anno 1604. The name of the new King Sultan Pedruca Siric, who in his Letter to King James I. spoken of before, styles himself the sole King of Sumatra: either with greater brags than truth, or else became the Kingdoms of Tecoo, Priamon, and Baronje, being conquered by him, all the rest were become his Tributaries. Associated with the Forces of the King of Jor, or Jabor, who had married his Sister, he besieged Malaca, and distressed it; but being beaten from it by the Portugals, he turned the tide of his displeasure upon his Confederate, and subdued that Kingdom; who with the King of Siak (some other petty Prince near Jor) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1613. brought Prisoners to Achen.

The Government of this King is absolute, and meerly arbitrary, executing what he hath a mind to, without form of Law. So cautelous, that without his Placard no stranger can have Ingress into his Dominions, or free Egress out of them. Nor is admittance to his presence granted unto any whom he first sends not for by an Officer with a Gilded Staff. He is conceived to be strong, both by Sea and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained, able to put to Sea 120 or if need be 200 Gallies and Frigats fit for any service, most of which carry Demie-Cannon, Culverin, Saker, Minion, and other the like Ordnance of Brass: So great a Master of his Subjects, that in 21 daies he had a goodly Channel drawn about his Palace, from a River which was eight miles off. Of his Revenues, I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden Furnitures which he hath about him.

And now I am fallen on this King's Gold, I cannot but take notice of some Islands on the West of Sumatra, called Auræ Insule, or the Golden Islands; the chief of which named Andromania, is possessed by Camels, or Man-eaters. Opposite unto which on the East side of this Island, are those called Linga, Bunta, and Buntan. which last is said to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for shipping. The houses built built of Stone, but thatched, except that of the King (for even these sorry Islands love to have a King of their own, as the far greatest part of the Earth doth; this most Ancient form of Government having spread it self with Mankind round the Globe) whose house more eminently reared, is more handsomely covered.

2. ZEILAN.

West of Sumatra, somewhat inclining to the North, is the Island of ZEILAN, ten degrees distant from the Equator, and near adjoining to the Promontory in the Indian Indi which Ptolemy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only, the whole circumference at 700 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the situation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the ancient Writers. Ocellus and most other intelligent Men of these latter times are of that opinion. Only Mercator who hath carried the Golden Chersonese to the Isle of Japan, and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which last I must confess he hath many Partners) will have this Island to be that which Ptolemy calls Nanigeris, though that be four Degrees more West than the Promontory of Cory, to which this Isle in former times seems to have been joyned. This Island produceth Spice in great abundance, which has drawn the Dutch to settle here, and they have possessed themselves of Columbo and Negombo, which belonged before to the Portugueses. There is lately published an exact account of this Island in English, by a Person who lived there many years. For Zeilan see Hicklutt. T. 2. p. 225. especially for the Cinnamon-Tree.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, That this Zeilan or Ceilan is the Taprobane of the Ancients, we will a little look on the state of that Island, with reference to the times when those Authors lived. By Ptolemy affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, and all kind of Metals. By Pliny, That the Gold is purer, and the Gems rarer than any in India; that there were also Groves of Palm-trees, and great store of Elephants, is declared by Ælian, and some others; watered with many fair and pleasant Rivers, viz. 1 Soana, 2 Azanus, 3 Baracus, 4 Gandes, 5 Phasis: the Hills in many places having a full prospect over the adjoining Valley; the chief of which were Matra, and those called Calibi; the Vallies perpetually enriched with the choicest fruits. Exceeding populous for the bigness, and stored with many Towns of note. Of which Metropolitum only hath the name of a Metropolis, 1 Margana, 2 Jogana, 3 Sindocanda, 4 Hodoca, 5 Nabartha, 6 Dogana, 7 Dionysopolis, 8 Bocana, 9 Abaratha, 10 Pso-curum, 11 Nagadiba; and 12 Anubingara, have the name of Cities, 13 Meduttum, and 14 Talacorum, noted for the Towns of Traffick. 15 Priapæ, 16 Mardus, 17 Rhizala, 18 Spatana, and 19 that of the Sun, for commodious Havens. 20 Anurogrammum, being honoured with the title of Regia, or the Royal City. As for the name, it is said by Ptolemy to have been first called Taprobane, then Simondi Insula, and finally in his time Salice, and the People Sale; from whence the name of Selan or Seilan seems to be derived.

To take a view of it at the present, I find it said to be of an Oval form, divided from the main Land by a narrow Channel; the Heavens refreshing it with their Dews, the Air with a fragrant freshness, and the waters with their many Rivers and Fountains: the Earth diversified into lofty hills, and lowly valleys; her inward Chambers filled with Metals, and Jewels; her outward Coat of the pleasantest colour, stored with whole Woods of Cinnamon, besides Fruits, Lemons, Oranges, &c. bettering those of Spain. Of Fowls and Beasts great plenty both wild and tame: and the best breed of Elephants in all the World. Destitute only of the Vine, the want of which supplied with a pleasant drink made of the juice of fruits, more natural to them than the other, and so preservative of life, that the people are reported to be longer lived than in any other parts. In a word, so abounding in all contentments, that the Indians hold it to be Paradise, and take upon them to find out some of Adam's footings, left for a memorial in some parts of it. And to confirm them in their Error, they have an Hill there which the Spaniards call by the name of Pico de Adam, affirmed to be seven Leagues in height, from whence Adam ascended into Heaven; for that cause visited by the Moors or Arabians with continual Pilgrimages.

The people for the most part are tall and straight of body, naked from the girdle upwards, unwarlike, and much given unto ease and pleasures; So queasie stomached that the poorest of them will not eat that meat which another hath touched; inclined to bravery, and therefore make wide holes in their ears, which they stretch out with Jewels to their very Shoulders. Cunning Artificers in all Metal, one of them making a Crucifix of such exquisite workmanship, that it seemed to give life to the dead; and was sent by the Archbishop of Goa to the King of Spain, as the rarest Jewel which had ever graced his Royal Cabinet. They are also very active, and well skilled in Juggling, both Men and Women, travelling thorough India with their tricks and Hobby-horses, by which they get themselves both delight and money. In the matter of Religion, they are generally Idolaters, especially the Natives, whom they call Cingalas, that live in the In-lands; the Sea-coasts (as in other Islands) being filled with Mahometans. No Christians that I hear of but in Columbo, a Town of the Portugals.

Cities of most repute amongst them, 1 Candie, the seat of one of their Kings, supposed to be the Sindocande of Ptolemy, memorable for the Statute of their supposed Adam, most artificially wrought, of five or six Fathoms high, Symmetrically proportionable to the print of his foot, which they conceive to have amongst them. 2 Ventane, of great renown for an Idol-Temple, in compass 130 paces, of great height, and all white except the top, which hath the Spires thereof so gilded, that when the Sun shines, Men are not able to look upon them. 3 Fanasipatan 4 Triqui Lemale, (supposed to be the Tarichi of Ptolemy) 5 Batecolom, 6 Vilassam, 7 Tanamaca, 8 Laula, 9 Galle, the seats of many of their Kings; 10 Nagarita, conceived to be the Nigari; as 11 Agana, the Iogana of Ptolemy; 12 Colmuchi, the seat Royal of the chief King of this Island, situate on a capacious Bay on the South-west of it; and of most trade in all this Country: many great Ships laden with Cinnamon, Gems, Elephants, and other Indian Commodities going yearly hence. Fortified by the Portugals (by whom called Columbo) with a very strong Castle, built with the King's leave at first, to secure their trading, but since used by them as a curb to hold him in with, and to compel him to pay Tribute. now Possessed by the Hollander.

This Country first discovered to be an Island by Onesicritus, Admiral of Alexander's Fleet, was in the time of Ptolemy inhabited by several Nations. The principal of which were the Galthi, and Muduttæ dwelling in the North, the Rhogandani and Nanigeris in the South; the Sindocandæ in the West, and the Tarachi in the East, the middle parts being taken up by the Anurogrammi, Magabdi, Soani, Semni. But little or nothing is said of them in the way of story, but that they were good Mimicks, did imitate the tunes of birds, and could speak to two at once, as if double-tongued; that they were very studious of Astrology, and worshipped the Sun and the Host of Heaven; that some of their Ambassadors coming to Rome, in the time of Claudius Caesar, Solem à læva oriri mirati sunt &c. admired to see the Sun rise on the wrong side of them, and finally, that the King was chosen by the people with respect had to his age and clemency; who being enthroned, appointed thirty Judges to administer Justice to the Subject, without the Major part of whom, sentence of Death was to pass on no Man. In following times this Monarchy (for such it was in the time of those Authors) was broken into many Pieces: the Portugals finding nine Kings in it, at their first coming hither, all Homagers Homagers or Tributaries to the King of Colmuchi. After that, this their chief King was wickedly murdered by his Barber, who drove the other Kings out of the Country, and for a while usurped the Monarchy to himself. Since which time, having once again recovered their Kingdoms, six of them (as I have somewhere read, but remember not where) put themselves under the protection of the Great Mongul, and became his Fendataries.

Near hereunto on the Coasts of Malabar, are the Islands which they call Maldive, many in number, but so called from the principal of them, as that from Maldiva, a noted and well-traded Empory, where the King resideth: Not very plentiful of necessaries for the use of Man, did not the Palm alone supply them in all other wants. Inhabited by an industrious and sober people, who make themselves long Garments of Silk or Flax, brought from other places, wherewith more modestly adorned than the rest of the Indians: and by their Fishing draw up shells of such mingled colours, that they serve amongst the Siamites instead of money.

10. ISLANDS of less note.

Besides these Islands represented to us by their several names, and some that have nothing but their names to take notice of; there are many thousands of less note which we find in gross: these Indian Seas being so prodigiously full of Islands, that it is almost impossible to believe there should be such multitudes; but utterly impossible to credit what is told of us of them: Some of the most remarkable of them we have touched upon, as Accessories or Appurtenances to some greater Islands. The rest we shall present onely in the general Muster, together with a taste of some of those strange reports, with which some Men have fouled their Papers, and abused their Readers. Of the Philippines there are said to be 11000, though but 40 of them in possession of the King of Spain. More South, but over against Cbina, is another Frie of them, affirmed by Mariners to be no fewer than 7448; and (as if nature had delighted to disport her self by sowing Islands in these Seas) another Shoal of them about India, no fewer in number than 127000, all which laid together would make a Continent as large as three or four parts of Europe; and are still groining under the burden of Heathenism. These Islands stand so high unto one another, that they seem onely to such as are afar off, to be all but one firm Land; but whosoever also passeth between them, may with his hands touch the Boughs of the Trees on the one side, and on the other. Of these and the other Indian Islands, Travellers relate many incredible Fables, viz. That there are Hogs that have two teeth growing out of their snouts, and as many behind their ears, of a span and a half long; a Tree whose Western part is rank poison; and the Eastern part an excellent preservative against it. They tell us also of a Fruit, that whosoever eateth, shall for the space of twelve hours be out of his Wits; and of a Stone, on which whosoever sitteth, shall suddenly have a rupture in his body. We are told also, that hereabouts are taken Tortoises of that bigness that ten Men might sit and dine within one of the shells; and that there is a Tree, which all the day-time hath not a flower on it, but within half an hour after Sun-set, is full of them. A huge and monstrous lye, and not fit for credit. Galium reporteth also, that in some of these Islands there is a Fruit, of which if a Woman that is with child eat, her Child will presently move; that there is a River plentifully stored with Fish, whose water is yet so hot, that it doth immediately scald off any skin of the Beast that is cast into it; that some of the Men have tails; and most of their Swine horns; that they have Oysters which they call brass, the shells whereof are of so large compass, that they Christen Children in them; that in the Sea there are stones which grow and increase like Fish, of which the best Lime is made: that there is a bird called Monocodonta, which having no feet is in a continual motion; and that there is a hole in the back of the Cock, in which the Hen doth lay her eggs and hatch her young ones. I bid no Man to believe these Relations: for my part I say with Horace,

Quodcunque ostendis mihi sic, incredulus odi.

Whatever thus thou tell'st me, I

Will always hate it as a lye.

And so much for these EASTERN ISLANDS.

An Advertisement to the Reader touching the ERRATA of this PART.

IN the first place the Reader is to be advertised that Fol. I have adventured to prove the Aalmatha of Ptolemy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, of the Holy Scriptures; The place ill pointed, but the judicious Reader will easily find out the scope and meaning. Yet if this shall not be approved of, I should then think it to be that Elam or Helam where David discomfited the Army of the Melopotamians; mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16, 17. In the next place he is to know, that Fol. within the compass of five lines, the Victory which Asa King of Judah obtained against the numerous Army of Æthiopians, is twice repeated: in the first place ascribed to Jethir, in the next to Maresha, (though the other also have good Authors) let that of Jethir be supplied in this manner following. 5. Jethir or Jethir, in the North Border of this Tribe towards Eleutheropolis: a City anciently of the Levites, in St. Hierom's time called by the name of Jethira, and then replenished altogether with Christians: now nothing but the name remaining. 6. Maresa, &c. And finally, whereas Ajalon p. is placed in the Tribe of Ephraim, and p. in the Tribe of Dan; the reason is, because being situate in the Borders of both Tribes, it is by some Writers ascribed to Dan, and by others to Ephraim. The like also may be said of Michpas, mentioned also in two Tribes according as it is disposed of by several Authors.

COSMOGRAPHY,

The Fourth Book.

PART I.

CONTAINING THE

CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY

AND ALL THE

OF AFRICK.

AFRICK is bounded on the East by the Red-Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Asia; on the West by the main Atlantick Ocean, interposing betwixt it and America; on the North by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia: and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, separating it from Terra Australis incognita, or the Southern Continent. Parted from all the rest of the World, except Asia only, to which joyned by a narrow Isthmus, not above 60 miles in length, and memorable for the great design which Cleopatra the last Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this. When Mark Anthony was encountered by Augustus in the Naval Battel of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the success, fled through the midst of all his Fleet, with the 60 Gallies which were appointed for her Guard. Being come to the North part of this Isthmus, she gathered together all her portable Treasures, and intended to hoist her Shipping out of the Mediterranean, and hale them over the Land to the Red-Sea, from whence she had purposed to take Sail, and together with her Sweet-heart Anthony, and some other choicest Friends, to seek out some other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans. But from this, Anthony who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at last disswade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramis reversed; the Basis of which, from Tanger on the Strait of Gibraltar, to the point where it joyneth unto Asia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920 Italian Miles, the Comur of of it very narrow. But from the Conus or Pyrus to the most Northern part of the Basis, it extendeth it self the space of 455 Miles, being much less than Asia, and far bigger than Europe.

By the Grecians it is called most commonly Libya, (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole: by the Ethiopians, Alkebulam; by the Indians, Besecath. But the most noted name thereof is Africa, which Josephus out of Cleodenus and Polyhistor deriveth from Epher or Apher one of the Nephews of Abraham by Midian the Son of Keturah. The Arabians, by whom it is called Isreebea, derive it from the Verb Faruch, signifying to divide; because more visibly divided both from their own Country, and the rest of the World, than any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fblers fetch it from one Afer, a companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain. Some fetch it out of Aphar an Hebrew word, signifying Dust, agreeable to its sandy and dusty Soil. Festus an old Grammarian, from A Privativum, and the Greek word peba, which imports a country void of cold, as suitable to the fiery temper of the Air. By Bochartus, who brings all from the old Phœnician, it is said to be derived from Peruc, Spica, an ear of Corn, which mollified into Ferie, came at last to Africa, that is to say, a Country plentiful in Corn. Which Etymology of his may receive some countenance from that great plenty of Corn which was bred in this Country: especially in those parts hereof which the Romans called the Proper Africk, whereof we shall speak more when we come to Barbary: the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africk. But in my mind, (if that from the Hebrew Epher or Aphar, be not worth accepting) I should prefer the Etymon of Festus before any other, unless we might be sure that Carthage anciently was called Africa, as Suidas telleth us it was; for then without all peradventure we should seek no further. For other more particular names by which it hath been called in some elder Writers, i. e. Olympia, Oceania, Eschatica, Coryphe, Ammonis, Hesperia, Ortygia, and perhaps some others, it is enough to our design to take notice of them.

It is situate for the most part under the Torrid Zone, the Aequator crossing it almost in the very midst: and for that cause supposed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly, in the middle and more Southern parts of it; or if at all, with such strange people, as hardly did deserve to be counted Men. Pomponius among others was of this opinion, guessing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by such strange Brutes as the Cynophanes, who had heads like dogs; 2. The Scæpodæ, who with the shadow of their foot could and did hide themselves from the heat of the Sun; 3. The Gamofaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the use of Weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the sight of Men; 4. The Blemysæ, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their Breasts; 5. The Aripiani, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be Men, but the shape and making of their bodies. These people (as they thought) possessed some small portion of the mid-land parts of this great Country; the rest they knew not, or conceived to the uninhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late discoveries and navigations have found the contrary; the Country proving in most parts to be well inhabited, and the coolness of the nights, by mists, dews, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

That is to say,

What the Sun burns by day, the Night renews,
And doth as much refresh with moist'ning Dews.

For notwithstanding that it be in some places full of sandy deserts, a disease incident to some parts of Arabia, Persia and other Countries of a more Northerly situation: yet it is said by some, who speak it upon knowledge, that the greatest part of those Regions which lie under the Line, or near it, (both in America and here) have so many goodly Fountains, Rivers, and little Brooks, such abundance of Cedars, and other stately Trees of shade, so many sorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing, and at all times beautified with blossoms; as may make them hold comparison with any others, supposed to be of a more temperate situation.

But as was said before, the Ancients knew not much of this Country, and therefore spoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful hear-say. For though Hanno a noble Carthaginian employed by that State, discovered much of the Western Shores of this great Peninsula, yet he ventured not so much into the Land: nor did his Journal (either suppressed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to pursue those Voyages; being writ in the Carthaginian Tongue, but since translated into Greek, and published at Basil by Sigismund Gelenius Anno 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that some Phœnicians in the days of Pharaoh Necho, passing down the Red-Sea, should sail about the Coasts of Africk to the Straights of Gibraltar, and so return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what those Ages disbelieved or esteemed impossible, is now grown ordinary; the Circumnavigations about this Country being very frequent, since first performed by Vasquez de Gama, an adventurous Portugal, in the year 1647 being 80 years after or thereabout, from the time that the Portugals first attempted the discovery and circumnavigation of the Coasts of Africk, which at the last, to the no small glory of their Nation, was accomplished by them. For so it happened, that having extended their Dominions as far as they could upon the Continent of Spain; and having withal a large Sea-coast and fit for Shipping, they turned their Forces on the Moors that dwelt in Africk, from whom they took many of their best Towns which lay along upon the Shores of the main Atlantick. Encouraged by this good success, Henry Duke of Viseo, one of the younger Sons of King John the first, resolved to spend his purse and credit upon new discoveries. And to that purpose, having had some conference with some Persons of knowledge and experience in Cosmography, he draweth together the best Men of Action, both in Spain and Italy. By their means, and his own good fortune, he first discovers the Isle of Madera, An. 1420. This Island lyes on the Western Shore of Africa called Madeira by the Portugueses of old Cene Atlantica. This Island being in the Latitude of 32 was first found by an English-man, whose name was Macham in the year 1344. This Man was left here by the Ship with a few Men and in an open boat, made of one Tree arrived in Barbary and was by the Moors presented to Poter the Fourth King of Arragon as a Wonder. In 1395 Henry King of Castile sent some Ships the Second time to find out this Island, and the Canaries, which, it seems Succeeded; for in 1417. Mosnier Reuben de Bracamont a French Gentleman, was sent to Conquer Canaria. Hackluit. T. 2. p. 2. p. 1. Its Latitude is 32. T. 2. p. 2. p. 7. Its principal City is called Funchal, which is a Bishop's See, and has a fair harbour for Ships, with a Strong Fort. This Island yields plenty of Wine, and Sugars which are transported abroad, and Peaches, Melons, Oranges, Lenimons, Pomegranates, Citrons, Figs and Garden-Herbs; but it yields little Corn, which is brought for the most part, from

Quodque, die Salis, vehemens excanduit aestu, Furnis non reficit, paribusque refragrat horis.

from France or Tenerif. It is in Circuit about 30 Leagues. 16. p. 7. Madera from Palma, one of the Canaries is 57 Leagues to the South-East. It was discovered by the Portugueses in the year 1419. and called by this name, from its plenty of Wood. Its Length is 25 Leagues, its Circuit 60. The principal Town is Funchal. It lyes in 32 Degrees Latitude and Longitude 360. It is prodigiously fruitful, but especially in Sugar, and Mather, a dying Stuff, and Wines, the Slips whereof were brought from Candy. The birds were at first so Ignorant, as to suffer themselves to be taken up, but have since learned to fear Mankind. It has plenty of water, and of all other things needful for the Life of Man. Though an English-man is said to have first Landed here in the year 1344. yet the Portugueses were the first that peopled this Island and still possess it: when they first found it, it was one great Wood, and to clear it they put fire to it, which raged, so horribly at first, that they were forc'd to go to Sea to avoid its fury; but then the Ashes contributed exceedingly to its Fertility, but that is long since fail'd and is now returned to its Natural strength, which is sufficient to maintain a vast number of Inhabitants. Funchal is an Archbishop's See and the residence of the Governour. This is the greatest Island in the Atlantick Ocean, saith Mr. Pory, as being in compass 160 Miles: besides Plenty of Springs, it has 8 small Rivers which make it as fruitful and pleasant as a Garden, and every thing it produceth is extraordinary good in its kind. But its Principal Commodities are Sugars, Wines and Cedar- chests. The Bishop of Funchal had a Revenue of 8000 Ducats. The Isle of Lisly Port, Anno 1428. The Islands of Cape Verd, Anno 1440. These Islands are the most Western part of Africa in 14 Degrees of Latitude. This Cape is called by Ptolemy Arfinarium, and is one of the most famous Head-Lands in Africa; it is imbraced by the Branches of the Niger; the South branch is called Gambra, Gambia, and the North Branch Senega, Sanega, Pory p. 43. Just upon this Cape is a knot of Seven small Islands utterly destitute of Inhabitants and called the Barbacene; for the greater Islands see the Islands of Cape Verde. This Cape was first discovered by Alovis de Cadomosta, a Venetian for the Portugueses in 1455. They are 9 in number the greatest St. Jago is 70 miles Long, the Portugueses have built a Town upon it by a pleasant River which contains 500 families. The Maritime parts of the Land of Guinea Anno 1452. This is a large Country upon the Shores of the Ocean, between Maguleta to the West, from which it is separated by the Cape of Palmes and the Kingdom of Ben to the East, from which it is divided by the River de la Volta and it is divided into La coste d'or which lyes East between the Rivers Asien, by which it is parted from the former: on the Coste d'or are many Castles belonging to the English, Sweeds, Danes, and Hollanders; this Country was discovered in the year 1365 by the French as is pretended. Baudrand. But in the dismal Wars between the English and French under Charles VI. and VII. they were forced to omit the Prosecution of this Navigation. Hoffman. But it is much more probable and better attested, that it was discovered in the year 1452 or 1475. by Henry Duke of Viseo as above. But then the Spaniards in 1477 pursued this discovery and till 1479 excluded the first discoverer. In 1482 John II King of Portugal sent Ambassadors to Edward the IV King of England to desire, That a Fleet prepared by John Tintam and William Fabian 2 English Men to trade to Guinea might be stopp'd and not suffered to pass. Hickluit. T. 2. p. 2. p. 2. They regaining the trade in the Island of St. George built the strong Town or Fort of Mina in 1486. to secure their Trade there for the future, and to command all the rest of this Coast; and this was the first place built by the Europeans on this Coast; these Countries seem to be those which the Nubian Geographer p. 8. 9. calls Lam-

lem. Which fair foundations being laid, and the way opened to those great discoveries which after followed; that glorious Prince deceased in a good old age, Anno. 1463. leaving this Character behind him, That he was the first that made the Portugals in love with the Sea; discontinued after his decease above 20 years, it was resumed again by King John the second of that name, who by the conduct of Diego Con Anno 1486. discovered the Realms of Angola and Congo, with the Isle of St. George, and thereupon resolves in the next year following to try his fortunes for compassing the whole Coast of Africk, thereby to find a way to the wealth of India; in which he employed Captain Bartholomew Diaz, who passing beyond Cape Verd, discovered first the Princes Island, and sailing from thence Southward to the furthest Promontory (since called the Cape of good Hope) returned home again; either discouraged by cross Winds, or unruly Seas, or the untractableness of his Mariners, or by all together. The Man to whom the honour of this Enterprize was reliev'd, was that Vasquez de Gama above-mentioned, employed in this service by King Emanuel, Anno 1507. who having in his way discovered the Islands of St. James, and St. Helen, and after doubled that terrible Cape, which Bartholomew de Diaz durst not pass, gave it the name of Cabo di Buena Esperanza, or the Cape of good Hope; because of the good hope it gave him of finding the desired way to the Trade of India: and having so doubled this Cape, and got Africk on the left hand of him, he kept his course on towards the North, till he discovered the Countries of Quiloa, Mosambique, Mombaza, and Melinde, with the King of which last he contracted an especial friendship, and by his favours and directions, found the Port of Calicut in East-India, from whence with infinite joy and honour he returned to Lisbon, Anno 1500. The design followed the next year by Alvarez Caprale, furnished with 12 ships and 1500 Soldiers; but he being cast upon the Coasts of Brasil, and diverting wholly in a manner on the discovery of that large Country, it was pursued the next year with greater strength, by Vasquez, and his Brother Stephen; afterwards by Ferdinand de Olmeda, and Alphonso de Albuquerque, and divers others of that Nation; and finally by the English, Hollanders, and Merchants almost of every Country, which have any Trade upon the Ocean. By means whereof the latter Ages are better instructed in the particulars of it than the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire, and some parts adjoining upon Egypt, more than the strange beasts and more strange reports which they had from hence; occasioning hereby the By-word, Africa semper aliquid apportat novi.

Touching the state of Christianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; most of those Regions which Christian Religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometanism having since regained from Christianity: Infomuch that not only the North part of Africk near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Gospel once so exceedingly flourished, that three hundred Catholick Bishops were at one time banished thence by Genfericus King of the Vandals; is at this present utterly void of Christians, (except some few Towns belonging to the King of Spain;) but even in all this vast Country, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Christian, but the Kingdom of Abassia only, and perhaps not that; none where the Christians are intermingled with Mahometans, but only Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Angola, and some few Towns upon those Coasts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have those Nations gotten by our late discoveries; it being Gain, not Godliness, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Country, or dispersed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly so called, Egyptians, Habassines, Arabians, Jews, and some European Christians only in their Forts and Garrisons; the Jews in all the good Towns where Trading is stirring; the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-coasts bordering on the Red-Sea; but wandering in great hords or companies all about the Country with their Wives and Children: the Habassines and Egyptians in their several Kingdoms: The Africans again subdivided into Moors and Caseres; of whom the Moors, are wholly under the Law of Mahomet, the Caseres dwelling in the in-land and more Southern parts, not discovered anciently in their wonted Gentilism. Accordingly, the Languages herein spoken are different also. 1. The Portugal or Spanish being used by the Europeans; 2. The Chaldæ or Syriack by the Jews; 3. The Arabick by those of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco only; 4. The Habassine, and 5. the Egyptian in those Kingdoms: 6. That called Aquel-amarig, or the Noble Language, supposed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with some Arabian words, and spoken generally in Morocco, and so amongst some of the Inhabitants of Barbary, nearest to Mount Atlas: 7. That named Sungai, used in Tombutum, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8. That called Gubco, spoken by those of Ethiopia inferior, and such of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the state of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Diocesis of Egypt, Africk, and part of the Diocesis of Spain. The Diocesis of Egypt subdivided into the Provinces of 1. Libya superior, 2. Libya inferior, 3. Thebais, 4. Augustanica, 5. Arcadia, and 6. Egyptus, especially so called, distinguished by other Names in the Nicene Council: That of 1. Africk Tripolitana, 2. Byzacena, 3. Zeugitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Casariensis, 6. and Mauritania Sitifensis the other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Diocesis of Spain. The rest of this Peninsula, as they never conquered, so it never was much taken into consideration. But being more perfectly discovered now than in former times, (though not so perfectly, as that I can be able to promise an exact account of it) it is divided commonly into these seven parts. 1. Egypt, 2. Barbary, or the Roman Africk, 3. Numidia, 4. Libya, neither of which the same with those of the Ancient Romans; 5. Terra Nigritarum, 6. Ethiopia superior, and 7. Ethiopia inferior. Such of the Islands as do not properly belong unto any of these, shall make up the eighth. In the descriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Plantations, and begin with Egypt, as being peopled and possessed before all the residue.

Africa, one of the four principal Parts of the Earth, was so called by the Grecians, because it never feels almost any cold; it is bounded on the North by the Mediterranean Sea; on the West and South, by the Ocean; and on the East, by the Arabian Gulph and the Red Sea; being only joined to Asia by a Neck of Land twenty five Miles over; so that it is, perhaps, the greatest Peninsula in all the World; its breadth from Cape Verde [Hesperium] to Cape Guarda (Aro- mata) at the Mouth of the Red Sea, is 600 German Miles; from Cape Bona on the Mediterranean Sea, to the Cape of Good Hope, is 68 Degrees, 16 Minutes, or 1160 German Miles; in the Hebrew Tongue it is called Phul, Pul, Phut and Put, Esa. 66. 19. Neb. 3. 9. From the Mediterranean Sea to the Line, it carries the breadth of 60 Degrees in Longitude, and 35 in Latitude, but beyond the Line, it runs into a triangular form, and ends in a Cape called the Cape of Good Hope, because the Portugueses hoped for the doubling this Cape, to find a Passage by Sea to the East-Indies, as it came to pass. It was anciently known no further, than to the Mountains of the Moon, 'till the Portugueses, of late, discover'd the Southern Parts.

Africa is, by Leo Africanus, divided into these Parts, Barbary, Biledulgerida, Sarra and Nigritia, or the Land of Negroes; but as for Ethiopia, he will not allow it any part of Africa; and all that part of Egypt which lies on the East of the Nile, he ascribes to Asia. The Original People of Africa are divided into five Tribes, who have yet but one Language, called by them Aquel-amarig, the noble Tongue; it is different from all others, but has some Words in common with the Arabian, which makes some say, they are derived of the Sabæans: The Negroes have that's called Sungay, spoken in Galata, Tombuto, Guinea Melli and Gago. 2. Guber in Guber, Cano, Casena, Perzegreg, and Guangara. 3. Barno. 4. Nubia, which is of great Affinity with the Chaldean, Arabian, and Egyptian Tongues. The Sea-Towns on the Mediterranean speak corrupt Arabick: The rest of Barbary, Biledulgerid and Sarra speak the natural African. The Africans that inhabit the Sea-Coast, had been long subject to the Romans, and had learned their Tongue; and the Arabians coming in amongst them, they became one Nation, mixed in Language and Blood, p. 10. In the Year of Christ 637, the Mahometans first entred Egypt under Omar. In 650 they went to the Conquest of Barbary; which, in 699 became wholly subject to them. In 710 they fell upon Numidia and Libya; in 973, they passed into Nigritia; in 1067, they entred on the lower Ethiopia; by all which steps they have spread their Faith over all the North part of Africa to Guinea.

Africa, properly so called, Africa propria, is a part of that which afterwards was reckoned amongst the parts of the World; and in truth, but a small part of that which is now called Barbary. On the West it was bounded with the River Ampfaga, which divided it from Mauritania Casariensis; on the North by the Mediterranean Sea; on the East by the Aræ Philenorum or Cyreniaca, and on the South by Libya Zeugitana: This was one of the most fruitful places in all the then known World, and had Carthage, one of the most celebrated Cities for its capital City. A Bushel of Seed has in this Province yielded at the Harvest 150 Bushels: so that Titus called it, Altricem Orbis terrarum, the Nurse of the World; and Salvianus, Animam Reipublice Romanæ, the Soul of the Roman Empire: The People of it were a Crafty, Perfidious, Wrangling, Drunken, Lustful, and Impudent sort of Men, as Salvianus saith, Lib. 7. de Providentia.

OF EGYPT.

EGYPT is bounded on the East with Idumæa, and the Bay of Arabia; on the West with Barbaria, Nūmidia, and part of Libya; on the North with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Æthiopia superior, or the Habassine Empire.

This Country in the Holy Scripture is called Misraim, from Misraim the Son of Chus, and Grandson of Cham, by whom first planted after the Flood; the Footsteps of which Name do remain among the Arabians, who still call it Misre. Named in the same regard in the Book of Psalms, the Land of Ham; a Name retained in some of the sacred Offices of the Old Egyptians, where (as Plutarch witnesseth) it was called Chemia, for Chamia no doubt; as that from Cham or Ham, the first Stock of their Nation. In prophane Authors it hath had the several Names of 1. Aeria, from the serenity of the Air, which is never clouded; 2. Potamia, from the propinquity of the Sea, washing two sides of it; 3. Ogygia, from Ogyges, a supposed King thereof; 4. Melampodus, from the black colour of the Soil; 5. Osiria, from their God Osiris, here in high esteem; 6. and finally, it was called Ægyptus, which in the end prevailed over all the rest, either from Ægyptus the Brother of Danaus, once King hereof (in the Stories of his Nation better known by the name of Rameses;) or from Ægyptus, the old Name of the River Nilus, by whose annual overflowings made both rich and famous; and of the Soil and Rubbish which that River brought with it from the higher Countries, it was, by some, supposed to have been raised into firm Land, and gained out of the Sea. Called therefore in some Writers by the Name of Nili donum, or the Gift of Nilus. Yet some there be who would have it called Ægyptus for Aiguphtus, and that derived from Ai coptus, which signifieth the Land or Country of Coptus, that being supposed to have been anciently the chief City of it. And some again will have the Name derived from Chioth, by which the Egyptians call themselves to this very day.

Egypt is called by the Inhabitants, Chibili; by the Arabians, Bardamasser; by the Turks, Misir, which is very near the Hebrew Misraim; by the Italians and Spaniards, L'Egitto; by the Germans, Egypten; being the first, the most fruitful, most ancient, and most celebrated Kingdom of all Africa: On the North it has the Mediterranean Sea; on the East, Arabia Deserta, and the Red Sea; on the South, Æthiopia; and on the West, Cyrene, and the Deserts of Libya: Nubiensis Geographia, p. 96. bounds Egypt thus; on the South it has Nubia; on the North the Sea of Damascus; on the East the Red Sea, and on the West, Arabat, by others, called Alfoat, p. 97. He saith, It extends in length, from Ajuan to the Mediterranean, 25 Days Journey, which is about 655 English Miles, and is in Breadth, eight Days Journey, or 200 Miles. Leo Africanus, pag. 296 bounds Egypt to the West, upon the Deserts of Barca, Nūmidia, and Libya; to the East on the Deserts between it and the Red Sea; to the North on the Mediterranean; and to the South on the People of Bugiba, and the Nile; from North to South it is 400 Miles, from East to West 50; being narrow towards the South, but broader at the North end upon the Mediterranean Sea. The River Nile running the whole length of it, and towards the Mediterranean Sea, dividing and spreading it self into many Branches, is the only cause of its Fertility, by overflowing it every Year in the Month of June. Monsieur Thevenot, who travelled Egypt, saith, In my Voyage from Rosetto to Cairo, I observed that all the Lands upon the side of the Nile are excellently good; and really Egypt may be styled an earthly Paradise, but inhabited by Devils; the Inhabitants being so wicked and so poor, that they will kill a Man for a Penny. Travel, Part 1. p. 127. Gabriel Sioneta de Urbibus Orientalium, p. 26. saith, Egypt is fruitful in Cassia, Sugar-Canes, Wheat, and an other sorts of Grain, so that in many places it reaps two most plentiful Crops in a Year: Hay they mow four times a year; and for Pease, Beans, and other Garden-Fruits, they grow all the Year round. They have seldom any Rain, yet they do not want it; all sorts of Fruits are plentiful but Grapes: so that for want of Wine, they, of old, generally drank Beer, but they had excellent Grapes for their eating. Cluverius saith, From the City of Pelusium to the Cataracts of the Nile, it is 150 Miles; from the same place to Conza in the West, is 100 Miles broad; but then in some places towards the South, (as Mr. Sandys saith) above Grand Cairo, it is for a long tract confined between Mountains; in many places scarce Four, and in few above Eight Miles broad; but then he extends it from North to South, 560 Miles, and in breadth 140 English Miles at the North End. This Country maintained its Liberty under Princes of its own, till God gave them into the Hands of Nebuchadonozor, in the Year of the World 3365, 5 Years after the Ruin of Jerusalem by the same Prince. Yet that Empire lying far off, and shaken by intestine Divisions, they recovered their Liberty again: Cambyses reduced them a second time, Anno Mundi, 3425: Nirxes conquered them in the Year 3473, and yet Artaxerxes Ochus was necessitated to reduce them again; for they had set up Princes of their own, and had beat his Generals, who were sent to reduce them: so he went in Person, and having driven their King into Æthiopia, he levelled their strongest Fortifications, and made them so weak and helpless, that they have been in servitude ever since. This Prince began his Reign in 3587, and reigned 23 Years, and Conquer'd them in 3602. Next, Alexander the Great became their Master in the Year 3620, to whom they most willingly submitted, out of a Detestation of the Persian Government. Ptolemy, the Son of Lagus began his Reign over them in 3626; and Cleopatra, the last of his Posterity, destroyed herself to avoid Captivity, Eighteen Years before the Birth of our Saviour; from thenceforward they were under the Romans. In the Year of Christ, 610, Chosroes, King of Persia, subdued Egypt, and kept it till the Year 623, when he was overthrown, and had 5000 of his Army taken Prisoners in Armenia by Heraclius the Emperor: This wretched Nation, weary of the Greek Government, called in, at length, Haymaria the 3d. of the Saracen Califfs, and by his help call out the Greek Garrisons about the Year 637. Leo Africanus, p. 298, saith, It was done under the Reign of Homar, the Second Califf, who cunningly pretended to suffer all

Men to enjoy their own Religion, and desir'd nothing of them but Tribute; but this lasted no longer than 'till he had established himself, and there are now no true Egyptians, but a few Christians still remaining, the rest of that Nation having embraced the Mahometan Faith, and mingled with the Arabians and Moors; thus was Liberty of Conscience made the Pretext of extirpating the Christian Religion in Egypt. In the Year 933 there was a distinct Califf of Cairo set up against the Califf of Bagdat. The Saracens began the Conquest of Egypt in 637, and in 640, they took the City of Alexandria, and pushed their Conquest as far as the Atlantick Ocean, on this side of the Mediterranean Sea. In 1163, another Race of these succeeded, called the Turkish Kings, or Califfs, which ended in 1245. Leo Africanus placeth this Revolution about 1276, under Saladine the 11th. whilst the Christians were in possession of the Holy Land, when the Mamalucks or Slaves of that Race deposed their Masters, and erected an elective Kingdom out of their own Body; the Prince of that Nation being for many Ages chosen out of a number of Men, whose Beginning was always in slavery, and Profession of War; they were in some sort the Janizaries of that Age. Leo Africanus saith, Saladine was the Inventor of this sort of Militia, consisting of Circassian Slaves, and that they continued 150 Years under his Posterity, and then it failing, they elected one of their own Number to succeed him. Tonombeius 11, was the last of all these Princes, who, in 1517, was forced to submit to the prevailing Valour and Fortune of Selymus, one of the Ottoman Princes; under which Family, that Nation still groans. And now let any Man but compare the Ancient and the present Maps of Egypt, and his Eyes will shew him in one Minute, the difference between the Ancient and the later Governments. Eusebius cited by Hornius de Antiqua Geographia, p. 6. saith, There were more Cities in Egypt than in all the World besides. Pliny, That there were 20000 in the Reign of Amasius; and Diodorus Siculus, That in his time, there were in Egypt, then extant, 3000 Cities; but Ortelius could no where find above 300 mentioned by Name in any Ancient Author, which are all said to be represented in Janfonius his Map of the Old Egypt. The fruitful and populous Land of Egypt, that was of old, over-spread with Cities and Towns, being now almost desolate, and all its ancient Glory, Magnificence, Riches and People, being buried in Rubbish and Ruines: Names of Places that have no Inhabitants, or the Pictures of Beasts and Antiquities, are almost all that is to be found here; Grand Cairo, Alexandria, Rosetta, and Damietta, are the only considerable places which are left; and Christianity is almost extirpated here, as well as it is in Barbary. It is observed of the incomparable Lands of this Country, That within less than 80 Years, more than the Tenth part of it is lost; no People being to be found that will maintain the same against the Nile and the Sands, Bernier, p. 71. Leo Africanus, p. 296. This Province is most fruitful in Corn and Grass, and a Level Plain, adorned with lovely green Meadows; the People are of a swarthy brown Colour, but the Citizens are White, and they are of an honest, chearful, and liberal Disposition, since the Mahometans were Lords of it. It is divided into 3 Parts or Provinces; that part which lies between Cairo and Rosetta on the West of the Nile, is called the Shoar of Errif; from Cairo to Bugiba, Southward, it is called Sabid, the firm Land; all that lies on the Eastern side of the Nile, from Cairo to Damietta and Tenesse, is called Bechiria or Maremma: Sabid excelleth in Corn, Cattel, Fowl and Flax: Maremma aboundeth with Cotton and Sugar, but then the Inhabitants of Errif and Maremma are far more civil than the People of Sabid, because they have greater intercourse with the Merchants of Europe, Barbary, and Asia; but those of Sabid trade with none but the Aethiopians. The Air of this Country, especially in Summer, is exceeding hot and unwholesome, and it raineth very seldom, and when it doth, it occasioneth many Diseases. At Cairo there die sometimes 12000 in a Day of the Plague, and the French Pox is very frequent; about the beginning of April is their Harvest, and in the middle of June the Inundation of the Nile beginneth, ibid. 299. In ancient times, the Inhabitants of Egypt were innumerable for Multitude; Diodorus estimated them at 750 Millions, besides the Inhabitants of Alexandria, which were 300000 Free-men. It was an Ingenious, Sagacious, and Learned Nation too, capable of learning any thing, but at the same time it was a Furious, Light, Inconstant, Faithless, Insolent, and a most wicked People; boasting without Modesty, Delicate and Luxurious; Lazy, Effeminate, Lustful, Avaritious, and ever propping for their Pleasures, and Money to maintain them; apt to Tumult and Rebel upon the least Provocation, but soon vanquished; for they were fitter to begin a War than to end it with advantage. Lastly, they were Superstitious above all other Nations; nay, some of the things they worshipped are out of Modesty, not to be named; there was scarce a City in Egypt that did not worship some Beast or other, and it was made too a Subject of mortal Feuds amongst them, because they eat those very things their Neighbours adored, as it was impossible to avoid it.

It containeth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Asna, or Syene, bordering on Aethiopia, 562 Italian Miles in breadth (exclusively of Cyrene and Libya) from Rosetta unto Damietta, or from the most Westerly branch of Nilus to the farthest East, 160 of the same Miles; to which the adding of those two Provinces makes a great accession: Situate under the second and fifth Climates, so that the longest day in Summer is but 13 Hours and a half.

By reason of this Southerly situation of it, the Air is here very hot and offensive, so that to avoid the insupportable Heats thereof, and to have the benefit of some fresh Wind, the Inhabitants are accustomed to build high Towers in all their Towns, on which they use to solace and refresh themselves. The Soil made fruitful by the overflowings of Nilus (whereof more anon) is so exceeding plentiful of all sorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum Populi Romani, the Granary or Store-house of the People of Rome; which City it did annually furnish with four Months Provision, insomuch that it was said by Pliny, That the greatness of the Roman Empire could not long continue, without the Corn and Wealth of Egypt; the Plenty or Famine of that City, depending wholly on this Country. It abounds also with rich Pastures, in which they feed great store of Camels, Horses, Asses, Oxen, Sheep and Goats, greater of growth than usually in most places else; and by reason of the moistness of the Country, they have great store of Fowls. Of Poultry they have also good numbers about their Houses, hatched in a different manner from all other Countries, not by the sitting of the Hen, but by the heat of Furnaces or Ovens; in which their Eggs are orderly laid in Dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is also liberally furnished with great plenty of Metals, some precious Stones, good Wines, and the choicest Fruits, as Lemmons, Oranges, Pomegranates, Citrons, Figgs, Cherries, and such as these, excellent both for Taste, and Colour. Of Palm-trees also great abundance; of which though we have spoke before, yet we shall here more fully declare the nature and strange properties of them. They grow in couples, Male and Female, both thrust forth Cods full of Seed, but the Female is onely fruitful, and that not, except growing by the Male, and having his Seeds mixt with hers. The pith of these Trees is an excellent Sallad, better than an Artichoke, which in taste it very much much resembleth. Of the Branches they make Bedsteads, Lattices, &c. of the Leaves, Baskets, Mats, Pans, &c. of the outward husks of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner, Brushes. The Fruit it bears best known by the name of Dates, are in taste like Figs: And finally, it is said to yield whatsoever is necessary to the Life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never so ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the Burden, but still to resist the heaviness of it, and to endeavour to lift and raise it self the more upwards. For this Cause planted in Church-Yards in the Eastern Countries, as an Emblem of the Resurrection: In stead whereof we use the Ewe-Tree in these cold Regions. For the same reason given to Conquerours as a Token of Victory; it being the Emblem or Hieroglyphick of a Soldier's Life. Hence, figuratively used for Precedency, as Huic equidem confilio Palmam do, in Terence; sometimes for the Victory it self, as Non auferent tamen hanc Palmam, in Pliny; & Plurimarum Palmarum homo, for a Man that had won many Prizes in the Fence-School, as in Tully pro Roscio: More naturally for the sign of Victory, as in that of Horace;

——— *Palmaque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.*

That is to say;

The Palm, of Victory a sign,
Equals Men to the Powers Divine.

The People, though the Country lie in the same Clime with Barbary, are not Black, but Tawny, or Olive-Coloured, affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to weep and mourn over the Bodies of their dead, daubed over with Dung; to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them, but having embalmed them, to lay them in some inward Room of their Houses: The Men to keep themselves at home, for the Household-Business, the Women to follow Merchandize and Affairs abroad; the Men to carry Burdens upon their Heads, and the Women theirs upon their Shoulders; Antipodes in these last to most other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenious People, the first Inventors of Geometry, Arithmetick, Physick, as also of Astronomy, Necromancy, and Sorcery. They first taught the use of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians, by them imparted to the Greeks. Accustomed at the first, to express their Conceits in the shape of Birds, Beasts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphicks; of which, two or three Examples out of Orus will not be impertinent. For Eternity, they painted the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: For a Year, they painted a Snake, with his Tail in his Mouth, to shew how one Year succeeding another, kept the World still in an endless Circle. For a Month, they painted a Palm-tree, because at every new Moon it sendeth forth a new Branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he soareth so high, as that he governeth the lesser Birds. For Integrity of life, they painted Fire and Water, both because these Elements are in themselves most pure, and because all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was abominable to the Gods, they painted a Fish, because in their Sacrifices the Priests never used them; and the like. From this manner of expressing one's self, the Invention of Letters is thought to have had its Original (though learnt by them no question of the Children of Israel when they lived among them); the History whereof take briefly, and word for word, out of Tacitus. Primi per formas animalium Egyptii, &c. "The Egyptians first of all expressed the Conceptions of the Mind, by the shapes of Beasts, and the most ancient Monuments of Man's memory, are seen graven in stones; and they say, that they are the first Inventors of Letters. Then the Phœnicians, because they were strong at Sea, brought them into Greece, and so they had the glory of that which they received from others: For there goeth a report, That Cadmus sailing thither in a Phœnician Ship, was the Inventor of that Art among the Greeks, when they were yet unexpert and rude. Some report, That Cecrops the Athenian, or Livius the Theban, and Palamedes the Grecian, did find out sixteen Characters at the time of the Trojan War; and that afterwards Simonides added the rest. But in Italy the Etrurians learned them of Demaratus the Corinthian; and the Aborigines of Evander the Arcadian. So far Tacitus. That the Phœnicians were the first Inventors of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory hereof to the Egyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were herein skilled before either: Yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-Masters to the Greeks, I think I may with safety maintain, having Lucan in consent with Tacitus.

*Phœnices primi (fama si creditur) ausi
Mansuram rudibus vocem signare figuris.*

*Phœnicians (first if fame may credit have)
Dar'd in rude Characters our words ingrave.*

Of this Mind also is Isidore of Sevil, in the first Book of Originations, who also addeth, That for that cause the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in Red Letters, as it is by some still in use. Hinc est quod & Phœnicio colore librorum capita describantur, quia ab ipsis literæ initium habuere, cap. 3. As for the less vulgar Letters, which the Latines call Cyphræ, and whereof every exercised States-man hath peculiar to himself, they were first invented by Julius Cæsar, when he first began to think of the Roman Monarchy, and were used by him in his Letters to his more private and tried Friends, that if by Misfortune they should be intercepted, the contents of them should not be understood; ὅπως ἀσφαλὲς τῆς πολλῆς καὶ γενομένης: Ne obvia literarum lectio cuiusvis esset. Augustus, one of the greatest Politicians of the World, had another kind of obscure Writing; for in his Letters of more secrecy and importance, he always used πρὸς ἄλλους ἀπὸ τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ, to put the Letter immediately following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary Writing he should have used. As for Brachygraphy, or the Art of Writing by short Characters, so useful for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is spoken: I find in Dion, that Mæcenas, that great Favourite of Augustus Cæsar; and favourer of Learning, did first invent them; ad celeritatem scribendi, for the speedier dispatch of Writings; καὶ πρὸς ἄλλους ἀπὸ τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ (they are the very words of my Author) πρὸς τὴν ἑξέσιν. Isidore, in the second Chapter of this Book above mentioned, ascribeth it to Aquila, the Libertus or Free-man of his Mæcenas; and to Tertius Persannius, and Philargius, who added to this Invention. Yet had all they their chief Light in it from Tullius Tiro, a Free-man of Cicero's; who had undertaken and compassed it in the Propositions, but went no further. At the last it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into Order and Method; the whole Volume of his contractions consisting of 3000 Words. Deinde Seneca contracto omnium diglossaque & aucto numero, opus effecit in quinque millia.

So

So eminent in Arts and Learning were the old Egyptians, that from them Pythagoras and Democritus learnt their Philosophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, their Forms of Government; Orpheus and Homer, their Poetical Fictions of the Gods. Particularly here flourished 1. Aristarchus, the Famous and Learned Grammarian; 2. Herodian, a diligent Student and Searcher into curious Arts; 3. Ammonius, the Master of Plotinus; 4. Didymus, surnamed Calceuteres, for his indefatigable Industry in several Sciences; 5. Manetho, an old Historian, of whom we have nothing but some fragments; 6. Appianus, an Historian of a later date, whose Works are extant in part. 7. Didymus the Grammarian; 8. Cl. Ptolemaeus the Geographer, 9. Achilles Tatius the Poet; 10. And before all, the profound Philosopher Mercurius, surnamed Trismegistus. And after their Conversion to the Faith of Christ, 1. Pantenus, the first Reader of Divinity in the Schools of Alexandria; 2. Origen, and 3. Clemens Alexandrinus, both skilled in the Universality of Learning; 4. Dionysius, 5. Athanasius, and 6. Cyril; all three Bishops of Alexandria, and the glories of their several times.

This notwithstanding, their Religion before the embracing of Christianity, was the worst of Gentilism; these People not onely worshipping the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, Creatures of greatest Use and Glory; nor only sacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollo, and the rest of the Gods, (many of whom were Authors in their several times of some publick Benefit to Mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing Divine Honours to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlick, Leeks, and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Christian Fathers, so most deservedly exposed unto publick scorn, by the Pens of the Poets.

*Porrum & caepe nefas violare, & ledere morsu;
Felices populi, quibus hæc nascuntur in Hortis
Numina! — Quis nescit qualia demens
Ægyptus portenta colat, &c.*

Which may be rendred to this purpose;

*To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more Than deadly sin, the Numen they adore.
Grows i' their Gardens. And who do not know,
What frowns Shapes for Gods in Egypt go?*

But the God most esteemed by them, and by all sorts of the Egyptians the most adored, was Apis, a coal-black Ox, with a white Star in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his back, and two hairs only in his Tail. But it seems his Godship was not so much respected by Strangers. For Cambyfes when he Conquered Egypt, ran him with his Sword through the Thigh, and caused all his Priests to be scourged. And Augustus being here, would not vouchsafe to see him, saying, Θεὸν ἀλλ' ἢ ξύβητος προσκύνειν ἐβόλα; that the God, and not the Oxen of Egypt were the Object of his Devotions. A Speech most truly worthy so brave an Emperour.

But it is time we should proceed to a survey of these Egyptians, as they stand at the present, much differing from the ingenuity and abilities of their Predecessours; nothing but ignorance and Barbarism to be found amongst them. For such as have observed the nature of the Modern Egyptians, affirm them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Ancestors; prone to Innovations, devoted to Luxury, cowardly, cruel; addicted naturally to cavil, and to detract from whatsoever is good and eminent. In their dealing with other Men, more observant than faithful; of a Wit much inclining to craftiness, and very eager on their Profit. Of a mean stature, tawny of Complexion, and spare c Body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities, apply themselves to Merchandize, grow rich by trading, reasonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in Dress and Fashion. Those in the Country, who betake themselves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a savage and nasty People, crusted over with Dirt, and stinking of smoak; fit company for none but those of their own condition. Nothing now left amongst them of the Arts of their Ancestors, but an affection which they have unto Divinations; to Fortune-telling great Pretenders; by which and some cheating-Tricks, in which very well practised, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and so get their livelyhood; occasioning the Vagabonds and Stragglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the same false Arts, to assume their Names. The whole body of the Inhabitants now an Hochpotch or Medly of many Nations, Moors, Arabians, Turks, the natural Egyptians making up the least part of the reckoning.

The Women of the same Complexion with the Men, but well formed and Featured, did not they too much affect a seeming corpulency; which if they cannot get in Flesh, they will have in Cloaths. Very fruitful in Child-bearing, and quick of dispatch when they are in labour: Some of them having three or four Children at a Birth; those that are born in the eighth Month living to good Age, and not in danger of Death, as in other Countries. Such of them as dwell in Cities, cover their Faces with black Cypress bespotted with red; their Arms and Ankles garnished with Bracelets and Hoops of Gold, Silver, or some other Metal. Those in the Country for a Vail, use some dirty Clout, having Holes only for their Eyes, which little is too much to see and abstain from loathing. Both in the City and the Country, contrary to the custom in all places else, the Women use to make water standing, and the Men crouching on their knees.

The Christian Faith was here first planted by St. Mark, whom all Antiquity maketh the first Bishop of Alexandria. His Successours, 'till the time of Heraclius and Dionysius, chosen continually out of the Presbytery or Cathedral-Clergy; afterwards out of the Clergy at large. Their Jurisdiction settled by a Canon of the Council at Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Diocess of Egypt (taking the word Diocess in the Civil notion) containing Libya, Pentapolis, and Egypt specially so called; to which, though Epiphanius adds Thebais, Marcotica and Ammoniaca, yet he adds nothing in effect; Thebais and Marcotica being parts of Egypt, as Ammoniaca was of Libya. Afterwards the Æthiopian or Abassine Churches became subject to this Patriarch also, and do acknowledge to this day some relation to him. By the coming in of the Saracens and the subjugation of this Country, Christianity fell here into great decay; languishing so sensibly since those times, especially since the Conquest of it by the Turks: That whereas Bochartus in his time reckoned three hundred Thousand Christians; in the last estimate which was made of them, they were found to be but fifty Thousand. This small remainder of them, commonly called Copti, either from the Greek word κοπτο Scindo, because they retained the use of Circumcision with their Christianity; or from Coptus a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reside; or finally by Abbreivation from Ægypti, corrupted from Ægyptii, their own National Name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithstanding in some particulars, in some from all Christian Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The Points most proper proper to them, 1. Using Circumcision with their Baptism, but rather as a National than Religious custom; though in that sense also laid aside, as is said by some, by the persuasion of some Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Cairo, Anno 1583. 2dly. Confering all sacred Orders under the Priesthood, on Infants immediately after Baptism; their Parents, till they come to sixteen years of age performing what they promised in their behalf, viz. Charity, fasting on Wednesday and Friday, and four Lents of the year. 3dly. Reputing Baptism not to be of any efficacy, except ministered by the Priest in the open Church, in what extremity soever. 4thly. And yet not baptizing any Children till the fortieth day, though they die in the interim. 5thly. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Eucharist, as soon as Christened. 6thly. Contracting Marriages even in the second degree of Consanguinity, without dispensation. 7thly. Observing not the Lord's day, nor any of the Festivals, except only in Cities. 8thly. And in their Liturgies, reading the Gospel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome. 1. Administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper under both kinds. 2dly. Administering in leavened Bread. 3dly. Admitting neither Extreme Unction, nor the use of the Eucharist, to those that are sick. 4thly. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead. 5thly. Nor using Elevation in the Act of Administering. And 6thly. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical, and esteeming no better of the Latine, than they do of the Jews. In these Opinions they continue hitherto against all Opponents and Perswasions. For though Baronius in the end of the sixth Tome of his Annals, hath registred an Ambassage from Marcus the then Patriarch of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8, wherein he is said to have submitted himself and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome; yet upon further search made, it was found but a Cheat, devised to hold up the Reputation of a sinking cause. The Patriarch of Alexandria still adhereth to his own Authority; though many of late, by the practice and sollicitation of some busie Friers, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome, and to use her Liturgies.

Among the Rarities of this Country, some were the Works of Nature, and some of industry and magnificence. Of this last kind I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramids, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their several kinds, the envy of the Ages past, and the astonishment to the present. Look we first on the Pyramids, many in number, three more celebrated, and one the principal of all; situate on the South of the City of Memphis, and on the Western Banks of Nilus. This last, the chief of the World's Seven Wonders, square at the bottom, is supposed to take up eight Acres of ground. Every Square 300 single Paces in length, ascended by 255 Steps, each Step above three Foot high, and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top consisting but of three Stones only, yet large enough for Sixty Men to stand upon. No Stone so little in the whole as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted, is an equal wonder. Built for the Sepulchre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the rest for others of those mighty Princes) who employed in it day by day twenty years together, no fewer than 366000 Men continually working on it. The Charges which they put him to, in no other Food than Garlick, Radishes, and Onions, being computed at a thousand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is said to be the Work of a Daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Herodotus writeth) both to finish her Father's Undertaking, and raise her own unto the height, by the prostitution of her Body, requiring but one Stone towards the Work from each one of her Customers; but the Tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater Truth, though affirmed by Josephus, and supposed by many good Divines, That the Drudgery put upon the Israelites did concern these Pyramids: The Materials of these Works being Stone; their Employment Brick. But past all doubt, advanced by those considerate Princes upon good advice, and not for ostentation only of their Power and Glories. For by this means they did not only eternize their memory to succeeding Ages, but for the present kept the Subject from sloth and idleness; who being a People prone unto Innovations, were otherwise like enough to have fed that sin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently corrected.

As for the Labyrinth, it was built by Psammiticus on the Banks of the River Nilus, situate on the South of the Pyramids, and North of Arsinoe, or the City of Crocodiles. It contained within the compass of one continued Wall a thousand Houses and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble; and had only one entrance, but innumerable turnings and returnings, sometimes one over another; and all in a manner invious to such as were not acquainted with them: The Building more under ground than above: The Marble-stones laid with such Art, that neither Wood nor Cement was employed in any part of the Fabrick; the Chambers so disposed, that the Doors upon their opening did give a Report no less terrible than a crack of Thunder. The main entrance all of white Marble, adorned with stately Columns, and most curious Imagery. The end at length being attained, a pair of Stairs of 90 Steps conducted into a gallant Portico, supported with Pillars of Theban stone, which was the entrance into a fair and spacious Hall (the place of their general Conventions) all of polished Marble, set out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Dædalus, in the Cretan Labyrinth; though that fell as short of the glories of this, as Minos was inferiour unto Psammiticus in Power and Riches.

Next unto these, I place the Isle and Tower of Pharos, the Island opposite unto Alexandria, once a Mile distant from the Land, but joined to the Continent by Cleopatra, on this occasion. The Rhodians, then Lords of the Sea, used to exact some Tribute or Acknowledgment out of every Island within those Seas, and consequently out of this. Their Ambassadors sending unto Cleopatra to demand this Tribute, she detained with her seven days, under colour of celebrating some solemn Festivals; and in the mean time, by making huge Dams and Banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and speed; united the Island to the shore; which finished, she sent the Rhodians away empty-handed, with this witty Jeer, telling them, That they were to take Toll of the Islands, and not of the Continent. A Work of great Rarity and Magnificence, both for the bigness of it, taking up seven furlongs of Ground, and for that cause called Heptastadium; and that incredible speed where-with it was finished. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latin, Pharos, by the Name of the Island; it was built by Ptolemy Phadelphus, for the benefit of Sailors, (the Seas upon that Coast being very unsafe, and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deservedly esteemed another of the World's seven Wonders; the other five being, 1. the Mausoleum, 2. the Temple of Ephesus, 3. the Walls of Babylon, 4. the Colossus of Rhodes, and 5. the Statue of Jupiter Olympius. This Watch-Tower, or Pharos was of wonderful height, ascended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein Lights burned nightly, as a direction to such as sailed by Sea. The Materials were white Marble; the Chief Architect Softratus of Guidos, who ingraven on the Work this Inscription: Softratus of Guidos, the Son of Dexiphanes, to the Gods Protectors, for the safeguard of Sailors. This Inscription he covered with Plaster, and thereon ingraven the Name and Title of the King the Founder: To the end that the King's Name being soon washed away, his own which was written in Marble, might be eternized to Posterity as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cæsar pursuing Pompey into Egypt, and having discontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Soldiers, had his Navy which here lay at Anchor, assaulted by Achilles, one of young Ptolemy's Servants, Cæsar himself being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the Skirmish, he hastened to the Pharos, meaning to succour his Navy in Person: But the Egyptians making towards him on all sides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and swim for his Life. And though (to avoid their Darts) he sometimes ducked, yet held he still his left hand above the Water, and in it divers Books, which he carried safe unto his Ships, and animating his Men, got the Victory. It is said that Egypt hath only two Doors, the one by Land, which is the strong Tower of Peleusium or Damiata; the other by Water, which is this Pharos: Tota Egyptus maritimo accessu, Pharos; pedestri vero, Pelusio, velut claustris munita existimatur, saith Opius.

Amongst the Rarities of Nature, we may reckon those strange Beasts and Fishes, proper almost unto this Country, i. e. the Crocodile, the Ichneumon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horse) the Ibis, the Asp, and many several sorts of Serpents. To speak of which particularly were a Work more proper to a Natural History, than a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt than all the rest, cannot be parted with in silence: A Creature of a strange nature, hatched of an Egg no bigger than that of a Turkey, and increasing to the length of thirty Foot; his Tail as long as all the rest of his Body, with which he is accustomed to inchain his Prey, and draw it into the River; his Feet armed with Claws, and his Back with impenetrable Scales; his Mouth so wide (of which he only moveth the upper Jaw) that he is able to swallow a Heifer; equally used to both Elements, but better sighted in the Water than on the Land; Cowardly, though a Creature of prey, and such as usually flies from those that dare set upon him; and easily vanquished by the Dolphin, which swimming under the Water woundeth him in the belly, where assaultable only. Whether so easily destroyed by the Ichneumon (a kind of Water-Rat) skipping into his Mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers say, hath of late been questioned.

Of less dispute, but not less Rarity in Nature, are these that follow: 1. That in all this Country it never raineth; or if a Cloud do sometimes happen to dissolve upon them, it bringeth on their Bodies innumerable Sores, and strange Diseases. 2. The annual overflowing of the River Nilus, and the many memorable things which are said to follow on the same. Of which it is thus said by Lucan;

Terra suis contenta Jovis, non indiga Mercis, Aut Jovis, in solo tanta est fiducia Nilo:

*The Earth, content with its own Wealth, doth crave
No Foreign Mart, nor Jove himself; they have Their hope alone in Nilus fruitful Wave.*

The Nile, is a vast River in Africa, which ariseth from two Fountains in the higher Ethiopia in the Abissins Empire, in a Country called Sacabala, amongst high Mountains, and being enlarged by the Genna Kelti and Exanti, it passeth through the South part of the Lake of Dambea, to the greatest Cataracts; before it enters Nubia, it takes in the River Meleg, and afterwards the Tacafe, a great River at Jalac; and entering and traversing the Upper Egypt, Four Miles beneath Grand Cairo, where it is one Mile over; it divides first into two, and after into more Branches, which anciently made the number of seven, but are now reduced to four; the rest being stopped up by the Sands of the Mediterranean Sea, and those brought down by the River; as William, Archbishop of Tyre, upon exact search, avers in the 19th Book de Bell. Sac. c. 33, who was in Egypt in the Year 1167. The Mahometan Princes, who have been many Ages Lords of Egypt, taking no care to keep them open. The Eastern Branch falls into the Mediterranean Sea by Damiata, and was of old called Os Pelusiacum; the Western was then named Canopus, and falls into the same Sea below Rosetto; these two make the Delta an Island, which is the richest portion of Land in Egypt, and there are two other Outlets between these, but poor in Waters saith Mr. Sandys. This Nile, from the 15th day of June, swelleth above its Banks, for the space of 40 days, and in as many more, gathereth its Waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the Earth is deficient in her abundance of increase, for want of moisture: and if the Waters surmount the superficies of the Earth, more than seventeen Cubits, then like a drunken Man, it cannot produce its natural operation; as having his Stomack (as it were) overlaid and furcharged with too much Liquor; but if the Mean be granted, there is no Country which can brag of the like Fertility; the Corn being all housed before the 20th of May. During this Inundation, they keep their Beasts and Cattel on the tops of such little Hills, which either the Providence of Nature, or the Industry of Man hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decrease of the Waters; and on these Hills also stand most of their Towns and Villages, appearing in the time of the Flood like so many Islands; and holding a Commerce and continual Traffick by the intercourse of Boats and Shallops, by which they transport their Marketable Commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time, that the River doth not thus overflow the Country, it is not only the fore-runner to a following Dearth, but prognosticath some ensuing mischief to the Prince and State: Confirmed by the testimony of good and creditable Authors, who have told us, That in the 10th and 11th years of Cleopatra, the River increased not at all; that it was noted as a Fore-teller of the Fall of those two great, but unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra and her Sweet-heart Antonius. A second Commodity which ariseth from the overflowings of Nilus, is health, which it bringeth with it in most parts of the Country; the Plague which oftentimes miserably rageth upon the first day of the Flood, abating instantly; insomuch that whereas 500 may die of that Disease in the City of Cairo but the day before, there dyeth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River is, That keeping its Waters united in a Body together, after it falleth into the Sea, it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean, further than any part of it can be seen from the shore. Add unto these, the many living Creatures which the slime thereof engendereth, on the withdrawing of the River to its natural Channel; whereof Ovid thus;

Sic

*Sic ubi deseruit madidos Septemfluvius agros
Nilus, & antiquo sua flumina reddidit alvo,
Plurima Cultores verſis Animalia glebis Inveniunt.*

Which I English thus :

*So when the Seven-mouth'd Nile the fields forſakes,
And to his ancient Channel him betakes ;
The Plough-men many living Creatures find,
By turning up the Mud that's left behind.*

Amongst which Creatures so engendred, are said to be such innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furnish this Country with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured, the Plague of Frogs would come a second time upon them to their utter destruction.

On the Banks of this River also grew those sedge Weeds called Papyri, of which, Paper was made in former times, which I reckon amongst the Rarities of Egypt also, but a Rarity of Art and Nature mixed. They divided it into thin flakes, (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moistening them with the glutinous Waters of the River, they pressed them together, and after dried them in the Sun. By means of which Invention, Books being easier to be transcribed and preserved than formerly, Ptolemy Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria; and understanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, strove to exceed him in that kind of Magnificence, prohibited the carrying of it out of Egypt. Hereupon Attalus invented the use of Parchments, made of the Skins of Calves and Sheep; from the Materials called Membræ, and Pergamena from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cause, that in a short time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of use; in place whereof succeeded our Paper made of Rags; the Authors of which excellent Invention, our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the use of these Papers and Parchments were first made known, I observe three ways of Writing amongst the Ancients, (I hope I shall be pardoned this short digression.) 1. On the inward side of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Liber; and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Caudex, gave the Latins occasion to call a Book Codex. 3. They used to cover their Tables over with Wax, and thereon to write what they had to signify; from whence a Letter-Carrier was named Tabellarius; the Instrument wherewith they wrote, was a sharp-pointed Iron, which they called Stylus; a Word now signifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kind of Phrase which any Man useth; as Negligens stylus, in Quintilian; and Exercitatus stylus, in Cicero. I should have also noted, That they used sometimes to write in Leaves; that the Sibyls Oracles being so written and scattered abroad, had the name of Sibyllæ Folia; and that from thence we have the Phrase of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Now to these Rarities of Nature, and Magnificent industry, most of them near the River Nile, or relating to it, we are to add another of far greater moment, and such as plainly seemeth to be supernatural, which is, That above five Miles from the City of Cairo, there is a place, in which, on every Good Friday yearly, there appear the Heads, Legs, and Arms of Men rising out of the Ground, to a very great number; which if any Man draw near unto them, or touch any of them will shrink again into the Earth. Supposed by some to be an Imposture of some Water-men only; who stick them over-night in the Sands, and keeping them secret to themselves, obtain thereby the ferrying over of many thousands of People to behold the sight. But Stephen Duplessis, a sober and discerning Man in the Opinion of Goulartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwise of it; affirming soberly, That he was an Eye-witness of the Wonder, that he had touched divers of these rising Members; and that (as he was once so doing to the Head of a Child) a Man of Cairo cried out unto him, Kali, Kali, ants metaralde; that is to say, Hold! hold, you know not what you do. A strange Fore-runner (if it be of undoubted credit) of the Resurrection of the whole Body, presented yearly, in the rising of these several Parts.

Monsieur Thevenot begins the encrease of the Nile, May 16 or 20, and saith the Publication is made June 28 or 29; and he saith, They give me no Account of its encrease beyond September the 24th. Though it often swells about the beginning of October, and that it gradually abates till the Month of May. He gives also this Account of the Head of the Nile, from the Report of an Ethiopian Ambassador he met at Grand Cairo. The head of Nile is a Spring that swells out of the Ground in a large Plain called Ozembromma in the Province of Ago, which casts up the Waters very high, the Well being twelve days Journey from Goutbar, the Capital of Ethiopia; and these Waters running on, pass by seven Cataracts before they enter into Egypt; and he saith, There are no Mountains near its Head by three Weeks Journey. If the River doth not rise Sixteen Foot, a Famine follows for want of Water; if it swells to twenty four, there is a Dearth, because the Seed-time is lost.

Bernier, p. 44. Gives this Account of the Head of the Nile, from an Ethiopian Ambassador in the Mogul's Court. It issueth out of the Earth by two Springs in the Province of Agaus, which form a Lake of about 30 or 40 Paces long, and issueth thence a considerable River, but is soon augmented by other Springs. It circles about, and forms almost an Island, and then tumbles from steep Rocks into a great Lake in the Province of Dambaz, three Days Journey from Gondar, &c. See Bernier, pag. 143. The Nubian Geographer, p. 16. makes the Nile to spring from the Mountains of the Moon, where I have represented his Notion of its rise, entering Nubia, it washeth Cusa, Ghalva, Dancalia, and Iluck, Cities of Nubia, and then precipitates it self from Mount Gianadel down into Egypt, so that no Boat can pass farther that way, p. 17. There are two falls of the Nile, one at Iluck in Nubia, and the other above Affuan into Egypt, which are twelve Days Journey each from the other; this is darkly expressed by the Nubian, but clearly in Ptolemy, who calls the most Southern, the great Cataract, and the other the lesser, which he placeth above Syene, now Affuan; for the encreases of the Nile, see Jossat. Leo Africanus, p. 335. Observeth, That the Crocodiles, in this River, are more destructive to Men, since the Atabometans became Masters of Egypt, than they were under the Egyptians and the Romans, and above Cairo than beneath it; and he cannot find out the Reasons of it, which is nothing but the Desolations they have made in Egypt, which encourageth these Dragons to destroy Men. He ascribes the swelling of the Nile to the Rains that fall in Ethiopia in May. In his time the Fountains of the Nile were not known to the Ethiopians themselves. This Author wrote in the Year 1526, and had travelled over a great part of Africa: Gabriel Sionata observes in his piece de Urbibus Orientalium, p. 27. That the Waters of the Nile being only retained in Pans 3 Days, and exposed to the heat of the Sun, turns to a pure white Salt; so that the Land of Egypt has an inexhaustible Supply of that which is so needful to the Life of Man, and at small Charges. This Author was a Syrian by Birth, and wrote in the Year 1619. The Waters of the Nile are thick and muddy, but being exposed to settle a small time, they become clean, perspicuous, and so sweet and pleasant, that they excel all other Waters for smoothness and pleasantness.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus, and that great increase of Wealth which accrued thereby to all the Country, in the improvement of the natural Commodities of the Earth; let us next look on the Red Sea, and the Riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have spoken already, as to the reason of the Name, the extent thereof, and the several Islands contained in it, and therefore shall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to this Country, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous passage of the Israelites through it as upon dry Land, and the drowning of Pharaoh Cenchres and all his People, at large commemorated in the Books of Holy Scriptures; as also for that through it the Spices of India and Arabia, were brought to Alexandria, and thence by the Venetians dispersed through all Europe, Africa, and Asia. Nub. p. 4. Mr. Pory, the Translator of Leo Africanus a Learned Man, observes, That the middle of this Sea is safely Navigable by Day or Night, it being clear, and 25 or 50 Fathoms deep, but the Eastern and Western Shores are so full of Rocks, Shoals, and small Islands, that it is impossible to pass them but by Day-light, and with most expert Pilots, who are taken in at the Ile of Babel-Mandel; he saith also, This Sea has little Fish, and the Shores have no green Grass, Herbs or Weeds, (Pag. 8.) in which he is contradicted by others; the Ancient Kings of Egypt barr'd the entrance of this Sea against the Africans, by drawing a Chain from Arabia to Babel-Mandel, and from the West side of that Island again to Egypt, as he observes out of Strabo. And that the Turk at this Day, will suffer no Ship to pass upon this Sea but his own, as far as they can help it, the Portugals having provoked him to this by their Depredations on this Sea. The Hebrews call this Sea Jamsuph, and Exodus 15. 22, it is called Mare Algosum. Its Waves are agitated by great Ebbs and Flows, whence some have had the Impudence to say, The Israelites passed at low Water; and that the Egyptians were drowned by the return of the Tide. Hornius Antiq. Geo. p. 11.

I suppose I shall not do amiss to set down Historically out of Galvano, a Relation of the beginning, continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received so great Commodity. Know then saith he) that Ptolemy Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation, was the first that set on foot this Navigation: Colir, (of old called Myos, Hormos) on the Sea-side, being the ordinary Haven out of which they hoised Sail for India; and into which they returned full fraught with their Commodities. From hence they were by Land conveyed to Coptus, and so down the Nile to Alexandria, by which Traffick the City grew exceeding Rich; insomuch that the Custom-House there yielded Ptol. Annetes 7 Millions and an half of Gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enhanced the Customs to double that Sum: They sent into India every Year (as Pliny witnessed) 120 Ships, whose Lading was worth 120000 Crowns; and there was made in return of every Crown 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths, and Moors, had torn in pieces the Roman Empire, all Commerce between Nations began to cease. At last, perceiving the inconvenience, they began a-new; conveying the Indian Commodities partly by Land, partly by Water, unto Capha in Taurica Chersonesus, belonging to the Genoeses. Next, Trapezond was made the Mart-Town, then Sarmachand in Zagathay, where the Indian, Turkish, and Persian Merchants meet to barter Wares; the Turks conveying their Merchandizes to Damascus, Bairutti, and Aleppo; from whence the Venetians transported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Christendom. Once again, viz. Anno 1300, the Soldans of Egypt restored the Passage by the Red-Sea, which having continued more than 200 years; is now discontinued by the Portugals, Spaniard, English and Dutch, which bring them to their several Homes by the backside of Africk: So that not only the Traffick of Alexandria is almost decayed, and the Riches of the Venetians much diminished; but the Drugs and Spices have lost much of their Virtue, as impaired by too much moisture in so long a Voyage. So much saith he, touching the Course and Alteration of this Trading; to which I shall take leave to add, That for the better and more quick return of such Commodities as were usually brought into this Sea; some of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it to the River Nilus, passable by Ships of greatest Burden; the Marks of whose proud Attempts are remaining still; Sesostris was the first who designed the Work, having before with good success cut many Trenches from the River, and some Navigable, into many places of the Country; by which, unprofitable Marshes were drained, the Country strengthened, Trade made easie, and the People better furnished with water than in former times: Darius the great Persian Monarch, seconded the same Project; so did one of the Ptolemies: The like is said of a Capricious Portugal in these latter times. But they all gave it over on the same Consideration, which was a fear, lest by letting in the Red-Sea, they might drown the Country, and perhaps make a second Deluge in the parts of Greece and Asia Minor which lay nearest to them; that Sea being found to be much higher than the Mediterranean, and the Flats of Egypt.

But here we are to understand, That all which hitherto hath been spoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt strictly, and specially so called; containing only so much of the Country of Egypt as lieth upon the Banks and Channel of the River Nilus; and not to all that Tract of Ground which lay betwixt the Red-Sea and the Borders of Libya, which was reckoned in the Compass of the Kingdom of Egypt; much less as comprehending Libya and Cyrene also, though now accounted Members of that Body, and anciently Parts or Provinces of the Diocess of it. For Egypt, in the largest Sense and acception of the Word, may be, and generally is divided into these three Parts, viz. 1. Egypt, in the general Notion, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean from the Borders of Idumæa to the Roman Libya, or Marmarica, lying Westward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleoticum; and on the Borders of Ethiopia Superior from the said Red-Sea, to the Country of Libya Interior. 2. Libya or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly so called, and the Province of Cyrene or Pentapolis. And 3. Cyrene or Pentapolis, reaching from that Libya to the greater Syrtis; where it bordered with that part of the African Diocess, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in in this first description of it, we shall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains and chief Cities; which done, we shall describe the other in their proper Places; and then unite them all in general terms.

As for the Mountains of this Country, there are very many; there were no living else for the People in the time of the overflowing of the River. The principal of them, 1. Those called Mount Zambra, lying in a long Chain on the West of Nilus. 2. Silphyrus; 3. Prophyritus; 4. Trogus; 5. Babylonus on the East thereof. Betwixt these Hills the Course of the River is so hemmed in on both sides, that at the upper part of the Stream, where it first entereth into Egypt, the space betwixt the Mountains, is not above four Miles broad; enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Cairo to thirty seven; then opening wider and wider, 'till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Country doth increase in breadth. On these and other of the Mountains and lesser Hills, stand most part of the Towns and Receptacles of the Country-People in the time of the Flood, rising when least, to fifteen Cubits, or seven Yards and an half.

Rivers of Note here are none but Nilus, nor indeed any one but that; that being sufficient of it self to enrich this Country, which otherwise would be nothing but a Sandy Desert. The head thereof not in the Mountains of the Moon, as was once supposed, but in the Lake Zembre in Ethiopia interior; passing from thence through the higher Ethiopia, or Habassine Empire, till it falls at last into this Country; and running in one continual Channel (excepting where it brancheth into little Islands, as it sometimes doth) before its influx into the Sea, is divided into seven great streams, opening into the Sea with so many mouths. Namely; 1. Heracleoticum; 2. Bolbiticum; 3. Sebaniticum; 4. Patinicum; 5. Menditicum; 6. Caniticum; 7. Pelusiaticum. The first and last of these Currents (which are the only two now left) being far distant from the other, and growing into one at the first point of the River's division, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta; because so much as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy, or Anatolia, it resembleth that Letter in the Greek Alphabet. Now because Nilus so runneth in its certain Channels, that the People have no other Water to make use of for all necessities; there are many By-trenches, and deep Ditches cut in convenient places (by the Care and Munificence of their Kings) to receive its Waters, and to communicate them to the People, who know almost no other Drink than the Waters thereof, and indeed they need not; the Waters of this River being of such excellent, both Taste and Virtue, that when Pescennius Niger saw his Soldiers murmur for want of Wine; What (said he) do you grumble for Wine, having the Water of Nile to drink?

But besides the Waters of this River, and the Trenches of it, the People are supplied with that Commodity by Lakes and artificial Channels, which serve for watering their Cattel, tempering of Morter for their Buildings, and other such inferior uses; sometimes perhaps for Drink for the poorer sort, who cannot be conveniently furnished with the Waters of the Nile. Amongst the Trenches (which were many, as before was said) those of most estimation were the Works of Ptolemy, and the Emperour Trajan; the first falling into that Branch of the Nile, which maketh the Isle called Heracleotis; the other into the main body of it not far from Cairo. These two, by reason of the many fresh Springs which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authors: And betwixt these was seated the Land of Goshen, extending from Nilus to the Red-Sea in the East and West. The chief of the Canals of the Nile were those called, 1. Arctus, not far from Alexandria, by Ptolemy called Arctus, and by Strabo by Ptolemy. All which names are now lost, and changed to that of Lago d. Saline, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2. Lacus supposed to be the same which in the Book of Maccabees is called Lacus. 1. cap. 9. And 3. Morus, now called Babylon, is more memorable than the rest. In compass 35. Miles long, 50 fathom deep; in the middle whereof were the Pyramids, 50 fathoms above the water, and as much beneath it: the Fish of this Lake for one fix months in the year, is said to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the King's Exchequer; for the other six, each day a Talent. 4. The Lakes called Libanus, into which the Trench, or River called Ptolemaeus doth discharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided anciently into two parts only. 1. That called Delta, betwixt the two extreme branches of the River Nilus, the form of which Letter it resembleth to him who standing on the Sea-shore, could take a view of it, as before was said. 2. That called Thebais from Thebe, the principal City of it comprehending all the rest of the course of the River, shut up on both sides with the Mountains spoken of before. But this division leaving out all those parts hereof, which lay on the East-side towards the Arabian Gulf, and on the West, as far as to the borders of Libya Marmarica: the Macedonians having it all together, divided it into 18 Cantreds, or Districts, by them called Nomi; increasing in the time of Ptolemy the Geographer, to 46; Ortelius out of divers Authors hath found 20. more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Diocesis of the Empire; it was divided into four Provinces (not reckoning Marmarica and Cyrene into the account) that is to say, 1. Egyptus, specially so called, containing all the Delta, and the District or Nomus of Mareotica, bordering on Marmarica. 2. Augustanica, so called from Augustus Caesar, on the East of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petraea. 3. Arcadia, so called from the Emperour Arcadius, in whose time it was taken out of Thebais, lying on both sides of the River from the Delta to the City of Antinous. 4. Thebais, extending on both sides of the River, from the borders of Libya Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) from Antinous unto Ethiopia: Divided otherwise by some into Superiorem, reaching from Ethiopia to the City of Antinous; Mediam, stretching thence to the point of the Delta; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the rest. But at this time, that part hereof which lieth on the South and East of Cairo is called Sand or Salid; honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the ancient Pharaohs, because nearest unto Ethiopia, their most puissant Neighbour. 2. That betwixt Cairo, Rosetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Errisja, wherein the Ptolemaean Princes did most reside; because most convenient for receiving Supplies of Men from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Cairo to Tineja and Damiata is now called Maremma, in which the Mamaluks anciently made the seat of their Empire; because more neighbouring to the Christians, whom they stood in fear of, as likeliest to invade them upon that side. The Present Visier or Governour of Egypt and all the latter Mamaluks resided at Grand Cairo, from the times the Western Christians were driven out of the Holy Land, which is seated in that part of Egypt, where the Ancient Kings of Egypt resided, and the first, of the Saracen Califfs; because it was then more convenient for the corresponding with Arabia, from whence they came, and which was then mostly under them. The Mamaluks removed thither upon the taking Damiata by the Western Christians as being a place place of greater Security; the Turks have continued there because perhaps they found it the capital City when they Conquered Egypt, and also as being near the center of that Kingdom, and lastly because they regard not trade or Commerce nor are Masters at Sea, as the Ptolemies were in a good degree; thus Reason of State, fancy, and humour have often changed the Seats of Empires and Kingdoms, by which Great Cities have been ruined and laid desolate, and others have Sprung up and Grown considerable; as may be seen in Egypt and every where, if their stories were as well known as this is. In the whole Country there was reckoned in the time of Amasis the second, no fewer than 20000 Cities; but if the Towns and Villages be not reckoned in, I should much doubt of the accompt. By Diodorus Siculus, it is said that there were 3000 in his time: but Ortelius on a diligent search, finds 300 only.

Those of most note in the Province of Augustanica,
 1. Pelusium, the most Eastern City of Egypt toward Idumæa, situate on the most Eastern Channel of Nile, called hence Pelusiaceum; by Ammianus said to be the work of Peleus the Father of Achilles, commanded by the Gods to purge himself in the Lake adjoining, for the murder of his Brother Phocus. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to those who came thither by Sea; the Metropolis of the Province of Augustanica, the birth-place of Ptolemy the Geographer, and the Episcopal Seat of St. Isidore, surnamed Pelusiotes, whose eloquent and pious Epistles are still extant. Out of the ruins hereof (if not the same under another Title) arose,
 2. Damiata. A city upon one of the most eastern Mouths of the Nile; it was anciently called Tamiata, and is now called by the Arabs, Damiat: memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Christian Armies; none more than that under John de Brenne, the Titulary King of Jerusalem, and the Princes of Europe, Anno 1220. During which (being of 10 months continuance) the Famine and the Pestilence so extremely raged, that the Town in a manner was dispeopled, before the Besiegers knew any thing of their Condition: till in the end two venturous Soldiers admiring the Silence and Solitude of so great a City, in a bravado scal'd the Walls, but found no Man to make resistance. The next day the whole Army entred, where they found in every House, and every corner of the Streets, whole heaps of dead Bodies, none to give them burial: A lamentable and ruthless spectacle. It was taken by the Christians in the year 1218, but in 1221 they were forced to restore it, being involved in such miseries by the Waters that were set loose upon them, that they must otherwise have perished: after this it was taken by Lewis the 10th in the year 1249; but that Prince being afterwards taken Prisoner by the Sultan the 5th of April 1250, in a Battel at Faramia together with Charles and Alphonfus his two Brothers, was again forced to restore it at his Ransome; after which the Saracens burnt it. This is an Arch-Bishop's See and under the Patriarch of Alexandria Longitude 63. 25. Latitude. 31. 10. The Nubian Geographer (saith p. 103.) That Damiata is placed some distance from the Mediterranean Sea, and there is a branch derived to it from that Branch which falls into the Lake of Tennis, which is the most Eastern Branch of all, and begins below Tucha, from which Damiata stands as our Author proves 91 miles to the North-West, Nubian Geogr. p. 104. The Writers of the holy War who lived in the same time with the fore-cited Author, say that when Almarick King of Jerusalem attacked it the first time, it was encompassed with three brick-Walls and was so strong that though he took and destroyed Pelusium in 1667, yet he could not force Damiata: That when it was afterwards taken after a long siege, it was thought a wonder; for they found in it, vast Treasures of Gold, Silver, Jewels and rich Merchandize till they grew Weary of Spoils, and restored it to the Soldan. And when Lewis King of France took it, it was defaced by fire and was yielded without any Defence, and restored by him as easily for his Ransome; so that the City was burnt before he took it. This City Stands 25 miles more to the West than Pelusium and upon the two Branches of the Nile. Damiata is an Ancient City environed with Walls containing 5 miles in compass, and but of Small strength: It is Governed by a Sanjac without other Company but his household. It is a delightful City abounding in Fine Gardens and fair Fountains. Hackluit. T. 2. p. 200. This account given by one that saw it about 1566. 3. Heros or Civitas Heroum, in the Arabian Isthmus, at the very bottom of the Gulf; remarkable for the first interview betwixt Jacob and Joseph, after his first coming into Egypt. 4. Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, now called Betsames; in the Scriptures On, of which Potiphar the Father of Arsenath (whom Pharoah married unto Joseph) was Priest or Prince; as is said, Gen. 14. 45. Given (as Josephus telleth us) for an habitation to the Sons of Jacob; by consequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Rameses or Goshen: and memorable in time succeeding for a publick Temple built for the Jews, with the consent of Ptolemy surnamed Philadelphus, by Onias the High-Priest, then dispossessed of his Authority and Office by the power of Antiochus: a Temple much esteemed by the Hellenists, or Grecizing Jews; and though Schismatical at the best, in its first original, yet not Schismatical and Idolatrous too, as was that of Mount Garizim. This Temple is like that of Jerusalem and built in the Reign of Ptolemy Philometor, about the year of the World 3780 which remained till the time of Vespasian 350 years after. In this place it is supposed, Our Saviour Lived when he was carried in Infancy into Egypt. This City stood upon the East-side of the Nile 45 English miles from Memphis to the East, 120 Miles from Pelusium to the South and the same distance from Clisma to the North-West; Ptolemy. Longitude. 62. 30. Latitude. 29. 50. In this place the Balsame was first planted when brought from Jericbo, removed to Grand Cairo, and from thence to Mecca. 5. Bubastis, somewhat more North than Heliopolis, by some of the Ancients call'd Avaris, by the Scriptures Pibeseth, another City of that tract; now better known by the name of Ziorb: supposed to be the same which the Notitia call'd Castra Judæorum; memorable in times of Paganism, for a famous Temple of Diana. This old City was ruined intirely by Nebuchadnezzar the victorious Assyrian Monarch, about the year of the World 3380 (for the certain time is not Known) as was foretold by Jeremiah Chap. 44. Ezekiel 29. 30. Jeremiah 43. 46. Nahum 3. 6. Arsinoe, on the shore of the Red-Sea, so called in honour of Arsinoe; Sister of Philadelphus, and Wife to Lysimachus King of Thrace; afterwards called Cleopatra, in honour of Queen Cleopatra, now better known by the name of Sues. Of great Commerce and Trading in the time of the Ptolemies, now almost abandoned; and would be utterly deserted, were it not made the station of the Turkish Gallies, that command the Gulf; which being framed at Cairo of such Timber as is brought thither by Sea from the Woods of Cilicia, and sometimes from the shores of the Euxine Sea; are again taken into pieces, carried from Cairo unto this City on the backs of Camels, and here joyned together. Conceiv'd to be the same which in former times was call'd Baal-Zephon (of which see Exod. 14. 9.) the last incamping-place of the Tribes of Israel, who from hence pass'd through the Red-Sea upon dry Land. 7. Gleba Rubra, by the Greeks Greeks called Thera Bolus, and sometimes Erythra Bolus also, more near the Latin; the redness of the Soil giving name unto it; situate on the River or French of Traban: more memorable for a Misfortune that befell it than any thing else; purposely burnt by Amenophes the fifth, upon this occasion: Being blind, he was assured by some of his Wizards, that if he washed his Eyes with the Urine of a Woman, who had never known any but her own Husband, he should be restored unto his Sight; after a long search and many vain tryals, he met with one whose Water cured him, whom he took to Wife; and causing all the rest whom he had made tryal of, to be brought together to this Town, he set fire on the City, and burnt both it and all the Women there assembled; which Tale, if true, is little to the honour of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of most note and observation in the Province of Egypt, strictly and specially so called; are 1. Alexandria, situate Westward of the Delta, over-against the Isle of Pharos; and built upon a Promontory, thrusting it self into the Sea; with which on the one side, and the Lake Mareotis on the other, it is exceeding well defended, the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks immediately after his Conquest of Egypt; the Regal Seat of the Ptolemies, whilst Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom; and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Diocesis. It was built Anno Mundi, 3618, that is 330 years before Christ, in the form of a Macedonian Chlamys, or Cloak, in the space of seventeen days, as Justin saith, Lib. 11. the Walls then extending to a Compass of six Miles (Italian) and he gave it his own Name. It grew hereupon, to be the biggest City next to Rome in all the World, and was once 30 Stadia's long, and 10 broad, and had 15 Italian Miles in compass, Joseph. 11. de Bell. 16. v. 11. Yet the most remarkable thing it had was its Haven, so secured that it had a difficult access in the most serene Weather. The entrance was narrow, and made winding by concealed Work in the Water; to the left hand it had an artificial Mole, to the right, the Island called the Pharus, from a Light-House-Tower placed on it, which might be seen 300 Stadia's off at Sea. In the Year 3920, Augustus Caesar took it the second time, and made Egypt a Province of his Empire; yet it continued, even then, the Metropolis of Egypt, and Strabo Lib. 13. saith, It supplied four Months Corn to Rome, and paid more Tribute in one Month, than Jerusalem in a whole Year; Its Inhabitants being then 300000 Free-men, as Diodorus saith. St. Mark planted the Gospel here, and watered it with his Blood, when he had preached twenty Years: It was considered much more than now it is, before the building of Grand Cairo: It is inhabited by about two thousand Souls, which are too few for so vast a City; accordingly much of it is nothing but Ruins. The Pharos, once an Isle, is now joyned to the City, and a Fort built upon it by the Turks, with a Garrison for the security of the Port. The first Conquest the Saracens made of Egypt, was in the Year of Christ (as they say) 641; but this City was taken in 641, so that Invasion was made sooner. This City was taken by Amrus the Moor, after a Siege of Thirteen Months: it was retaken from them in the times of the Holy War, Anno Christi 1167, but it fell soon after into their Hands again. At the same time, with the Nabian Geographer, lived William, Archbishop of Tyre. And he, lib. 19. de Bell. Sacro, saith, Almaravick, King of Jerusalem, had this City delivered up to him in the Year 1167, after a long and tedious Siege. It was then a very Potent and Rich City, but more accustomed to Merchandize than War, and had but a small Garrison of

Turks, who distrusted the Citizens, and were hated by them; when the Christians entered the City, the Inhabitants admired, That so great a Multitude of Citizens and Strangers, who had done their utmost to defend it, had yet been kept within the Walls, and reduced to such necessities, as they had suffered by so small an Army; there being not above 500 Horse, and 4 or 5000 Foot that were in the City; Leo Africanus. John Plano Carpini, saith: About the Year 1246, it was besieged by the Tartars, but what was the Event, he then knew not, Hacklunt. Tom. 1. The Buildings of which this City now consists, are mean and few, erected on the Ruines of the former, in that part which is next the Haven, the rest being Desolate; the Walls are almost quadrangular, and have Four Gates; they have neither Tillage nor Pasture, but upon the Lake, and that is little, and ill Husbanded, all the rest is Desert. The Haven is now so unsafe, that 22 Ships perished in it the Night before our Author enter'd it, by a North-Wind, Sandys Travels, p. 90. This City is an old decayed thing, having been a fair one in Ancient time, near two English Miles in length, being all vaulted under for preserving fresh Water, when the Nile overflows in September: The Fields about it yield plenty of good Corn; the Port is secured by two strong Castles, and the City by a third, all well planted with Cannon; this was the state of it in 1586, Hacklunt, To. 2. p. 281. It hath 3 Gates, 100 Churches and Mosques, but the part deserted is six times greater than that inhabited, ib. p. 284. Adorned Anciently with many stately Buildings; of which most memorable, the Serapium, (or Temple of their God Serapis,) for sumptuous workmanship, and the magnificence of the Fabrick, inferiour to none but the Roman Capitol; and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had stored it with 700000 Volumes; unfortunately burnt in the War against Julius Caesar. A City of great Trading, and infinite Riches, μέγιστον ἐμπορείον καὶ οἰκουμενὸν the greatest Empory of the World, as is said by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens so abounded in all Licentiousness both of Life and Speech, that they spared not the Emperour himself, if he came in their way; but they paid dearly for their Folly. For Caracalla, not so patient of a Contumely as some wiser Princes, having felt the Lashes of their Tongues when he was amongst them, assembled all the Youth of the City, as if out of them he would have chosen some to attend his Person; and suddenly gave command to his Soldiers, to put them all to the Sword: A slaughter so great and universal, that the River Nilus, coloured with the Blood of the slain, might not improperly at that time be called a Red-Sea. In this City, Anno 180. Pantæus read both Divinity and Philosophy to all such as would come to hear him: Which, as it is conceived to give the first hint to the instituting of Universities in the rest of Christendom; so from that small beginning, the Schools of Alexandria grew so great and eminent; that Nazianzen calleth them Ἰασησὶας παιδεύσεως ἐργαστήριον, the Shop, or Work-house, as it were, of all kinds of Learning: Much short of what it was, even in point of Trading, especially since the diversion of the Spice-Trade from the Bay of Arabia, and utterly divested of those Beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the present by a mixture of Nations, Moors, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Christian Coptics; more for some little gain which they reap by Traffick, than any pleasure in the place; Now called Scanderia by the Turks, remarkable onely for the house of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the most part in Cairo) and a Church in which St. Mark their first Bishop was said to be buried. 2. Cannopus situate East of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Heracleoticum; so called from from Canopus the Pilot of Menelaus, who having suffered shipwreck upon this Coast, was there interred by his Master. A Town so branded in old times, for varieties of all kind of beastliness, and Luxury, that as Seneca very well observed, he that avoided the viciousness and debauchery of it, could not scape the infamy: the very place administering matter for suspicion. 3. Rosetta, on the same branch of the River, and not far from Canopus, out of whose ruins it arose; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Califfs; unwall'd, and destitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all sorts of Commodities, and well frequented by the Merchants. The Nubian Geographer, pag. 106, Sets this city which he always calls Rasid 95 Miles from Malig, which is 98 Miles from Sciataf, where the Nile is first divided and that is from Grand Cairo 50 Miles. So that this City is 243 Miles from Grand Cairo, and from Alexandria it is 60 Miles towards the East; wherein he agrees with Monsieur Thevenot. Leo Africanus placeth it upon the East side of the Nile, 3 miles from the Mediterranean Sea. It has very many beautiful houses on the Nile, and a fair Market-place. It has also a harbour will hold about 4 Barks. It has no walls, the grounds about it yield plenty of Dates and Rice; the inhabitants civil to strangers. Our Author was here when Selim the Grand Seignior returned to it from taking Alexandria, that is in 1517. Thus far Leo p. 303. 4. Nicopolis, now called Munia, the Monument of some eminent Victory, and probably of the Conquest of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town standing within 30 Furlongs of Alexandria. 5. Aphrodites and Aphroditopolis, so called from Venus, who was here worshipped: situate betwixt the two middle branches of the Nile. 6. Sais, betwixt the same branches of the River also: whence that Nomus or Division had the name of Saites. It is now called Sibnit, or Signiti. 7. Plinthine, on the sea-side; and 8. Hierax, more within the Land: the chief Towns of the Region called Marsotica.

In Arcadia, called also Heptanomus, because it contained seven of the Nomi or Divisions, into which Egypt was distributed by the Macedonians, the places of most note were and are, 1. Memphis, on the Western banks of Nile, not far from the sharp point of the Delta; where the River first begins to divide it self; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs: by one of which who removed the Seat-Royal from Thebæ hither, it is said to be built, and called thus by the name of his Daughter. In compass, when it flourished about 20 miles; great, populous, and adorned with a world of Antiquities; amongst others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, Serapis, beset with Sphinxes: now nothing left of the Ruines of it, but the Statues of some monstrous Resemblances, sufficient to shew what it hath been formerly. The Pyramids before described, stood not far from hence; to which the Poet relateth, saying.

Barbara Pyramidum flectat miracula Memphis.

Of her Pyramids, as before.*

The Priests of this place were so much celebrated for their Learning, that Plato and Pythagoras went to hear them; yet they were noted to be excessive Superstitious: In St. Hieroni's time they worshipped here a Brafs-Bull as a God, Antipater, the Father of Herod took this City, which was afterwards called Babylon, now Grand Cairo, and of whose greatness Strange incredible things are related in our time, as that it is twice as big as Paris; but in Truth it is equal to Rome, 11 Miles in Compass, and much more Populous; as Leod. Romanus de Navigat. Lib. 1. C. 1. saith, Selim took this City and added it to his Dominions, in the year 1515. It is now sensibly decayed as to its Greatness; in the year 1566 it was 18 miles in compass, and so populous, that it could receive no more, and they were then building new Houses about it, Hackluit. Tom. 2. pag. 202. In 1585 It had 2400 Mosques ibid. 287. Leo Africanus makes it much greater as to the number of the Inhabitants, and Populous Suburbs, when it was Conquered by the Turks, pag. 316. Eng. But in the present age it is reduced to 8 miles in compass, and nothing near so populous as it was then; yet it is still by far the most populous City in Egypt, the rest being by the oppression of the Turks brought almost to nothing; the Wealth of Egypt being perpetually drained away and carried to Constantinople, from whence it never returns back again; and this I look upon to be the true reason why Egypt and its Cities have been more Ruined by the Turks, in less than 200 years, than by all the Mahometan Princes that possessed it 800 years before that time.

2. Babylon, called for distinction's sake, Babylon Egyptiorum, built on the other side of the River, and somewhat more unto the North: said to be founded by Cambyfes the Persian Monarch, the first that made this Kingdom stoop to the yoke of a Foreigner; and by him peopled with some Babylonians or Chaldeans transplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruins; amongst which, many of the Christian Temples and Monasteries do lie there in rubbish; the Castle whereof served long after for the Garrison of three Legions, appointed to defend this Country in the time of the Romans. This, thought by some to be the Babylon mentioned by Saint Peter, in his first Epistle Chap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my Son, (Saint Mark being the first Bishop of the Alexandrians, and the Apostle of Egypt) may make somewhat probable, but the truth and reality hereof, I dispute not now. Out of the ruins of this City arose 3. Cairo, now, and for many Ages past, the chief of this Country: raised from the ashes of old Babylon by the Califfs of Egypt, and by the Mamaluks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compass not above eight miles; but full of Streets, the number of which said to be 18000, every one of them fortified with a Great Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every several street an impregnable Fortress. Found so by Selymus the first, when he conquered Egypt, who spent three days in forcing his way through it with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean; the publick, especially the Mosques, beyond thought magnificent. Visited every seventh year with a dreadful Pestilence; yet still so populous, that it is conceived to be in good health, if there die not above a thousand in a day, or three hundred thousand within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards, both within the City and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleasant Lake; but made more pleasant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual solace and delights. Fortified at the South-end with a Stately Castle (the Palace of the Mamaluck-Sultans) situate on the top of a Mountain; overlooking the City, and a great part of the Country also: so large, that it seemeth a City of it self: immured with high walls, divided into many partitions of several Courts, in times past the places of exercise; and entred by doors of Iron. Destroyed for the most part by Selimus, for fear of giving opportunity to some rebellion; or envying the Mamaluks the glory of having been the Masters of so brave brave a Mansion. That which is left, now serving for the habitation of the Turkish Bassa, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4. Metarad, or Maurea, not far from Cairo; the soil whereof is said to be so rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with Sand or Gravel, so moderating the extreme rankness of it. 5. Arsinoe, on the West-side of the Nile, and somewhat South of the famous Labyrinth before described; called also (to difference it from another of the same name on the shore of the Red-Sea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monster. 6. Nilopolis or Nili Civitas; in the Island called Hieracleotis, made by the imbracements of the River; most memorable for being the Episcopal Seat of Cheremeon, a right Godly Prelate; of whom see Eusebius in the 6. Book, and 34 Chapter of his Ecclesiastical History. 7. Troia on the Eastern stream which makes that Island not much observable, but for giving name to the Montes Troici lying near unto it; out of which were digged the Stones which made the Pyramids. 8. Cinopolis in a little Island upon the water. 9. Hermopolis, or the City of Mercury; called also Hermopolis magna, to difference it from another of that name not far from Alexandria, to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10. Antinous, now Antius founded by Adrian the Emperour, in honour of Antinous his especial Favourite; the most Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11. Dionysias, or the City of Bacchus, situate on the South end of the Lake of Moeris, in the Nomus or Division called Oasias parva. 12. Clysma, upon the shores of the Gulf, a Roman Garrison.

Cities of most note in the Province of Thebais, 1. Panopolis, the Panos of Antoninus, one of the greatest of this part. 2. Ptolemais, the foundation of one of the Ptolemies, and the goodliest City of this Province, succeeding unto Thebe both in power and greatness. 3. Saiet, a fair and large Town, six days Journey from Cairo, going up the water; but by what name called amongst the Ancients, I do not where find. Affirmed (erroneously, I think) to be the dwelling-place of Joseph and Mary, when they fled with CHRIST our Saviour from the fury of Herod. Beautified with a goodly Temple, but now somewhat ruinous, of the foundation of Helena the Mother of Constantine. This City much resorted to (on the strength of this Tradition only) by many aged Christian Copties, who desire to die there. 4. Diospolis, or the City of Jupiter; all of them on the Banks of the River. 5. Tentyra, in a little Isle so called, made by the circlings of the Nile: The Inhabitants whereof were the only Men who durst encounter the Crocodile; a Creature of a terrible Name, but a cowardly Nature; of which it is said by Ammianus Marcellinus, That it assaulteth those that flee from it, and flieth from those who do assault it: In that point very like the Devil, of whom it is said by the Apostle James 4: 7. that if he be resisted, he will flee from us; Or as the good old Poet hath it, Est Leo, si fugias; sit stat, quasi Musca recedit.

*Give ground, a Lion he will be;
Stand to it, and away flies he.*

6. Coptos, upon the head of a Trench or Water-course, which falleth into the Nilus, on the South of Tentyra, but on the other side of the River; in old times, a most noted Empory for Indian and Arabian Wares; from whence not only the Christians of this Country are thought to have the name of Copties; but the whole Country to be originally called A. Egyptus, from Ai-Coptus, or the Land of Coptus.

7. Thebe the residence and foundation of that great Tyrant Buſiris, in compass 140 furlongs, or 17 Miles and an half; called also Hecatompyla, from the number of an hundred Gates, which were said to be in it. So beautified with Colosses, Temples, Palaces, the Sepulchres of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, and other Ornaments of State, that it was thought μνηστέριον τῆ ἐπὶ τῇ ἡλίῳ ἔτι κεκοσμημέναι to be the Monestich of the World. Decayed on the removing of the Court to Memphis; it became a ruine so long since, that there was nothing left of it in the time of Juvenal, as he telleth us, saying,

Atque vetus Thebe centum jacet obruta portis.

*Old Thebe yielding to the Fates,

8. Abydos, now called Abutick, once the Seat-Royal of Memnon, from thence called Memnonium; renowned for the Temple of Osiris, more for the Statue of Memnon, which, though made of stone, did at the rising of the Sun yield a vocal sound. 9. Elephantis, on the Banks of Nile, neighboured by Chroph and Mophi, two sharp Rocks, betwixt which the River falling down with a violent current, makes the Lesser Cataract; of which, and of the greater, we shall speak more fully in Aethiopia. The City seated in an Island of the River Nile, on the Borders of Aethiopia sub Egypto, (as the Ancients called it) known unto Ptolemy by the name of Elephantina, but to our Ecclesiastical Writers by that of Tabenna. Memorable in times of Heathenism for the Town and Temple of Onuchis, wherein stood the Nilometrium or standing-Pillars, by which they did observe the increase of the River; removed since to the Castle of Michias, two Miles from Cairo: in times of Christianity, for the dwellings of infinite numbers of Monks and Hermits, called from this place Tabenistotæ. 10. Syene, (now Asina) a little North of Elephantis, situate directly under the Tropic of Cancer, and memorable for a deep Well there digged by some Astronomers; which when the Sun entered the Sign, was wholly enlightened with his Beams, without any Shadow, so perpendicularly did the body of it stand over the Pit. This the last City of Egypt towards Aethiopia.

And now I shall proceed according to my Method in other places, to the Story of Egypt; but being that Libya and Cyrene, are now accounted Members of it; the Fortunes whereof they have also followed in all or most of the mutations of State and Government; I shall first take a view of them as the Limbs of this Body, and shew you how they were united under that one Head, by which now directed.

1. M A R M A R I C A.

2. L I B Y A or M A R M A R I C A, hath on the East, Egypt, properly so called; on the West, Cyrene; on the North, that part of the Mediterranean Sea, which was hence called Mare Libycum, and sometimes Parthensum; and on the South, some part of Aethiopia Superior.

It had the name of Libya, from the old Greek word λίβος signifying Black, agreeable to the Complexion of the People, which is black and swarthy; λίβος, antiqua lingua Græca niger, saith a learned Writer; or possible enough from Lub, an Arabian word signifying Thirst; as suitable unto the nature of the Soil, which is dry and sandy, in which respect called by the Greeks Xero-Libya, or Libya Sicca. From hence the South-wind, blowing from these Coasts towards Greece and Italy, had the name of Lybs, and the Promontory in Sicily opposite unto it, that of Lilybæum. It was also called Marmarica, perhaps from the Marmaridæ, a chief People of it, though placed by Ptolemy in Cyrene; and sometimes Barca, from Barce a chief City in it; of late times Barca Marmarica, by both names united.

The Country for the most part very dry and barren, and but meanly peopled; insomuch as Alexander passing thorough part of it towards the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, in the space of four days, saw neither Man, Beast, Bird, Tree, nor River; covered over in most places with a thick light Sand, which the Winds remove up and down continually, turning Valleys into Hills, and Hills into Valleys. Found by Cambyfes to his cost, who as basely esteeming of the Gods as he did of his Subjects, sent part of his Army into this Country to destroy the Temple above mentioned; but in the passage towards that prohibited place, Fifty thousand of them were overwhelmed and smothered in a Storm of Sand; the rest with much ado escaping. Called therefore Xero-Libya, or Libya Sicca, as before was noted; and Libya sitiens, thirsty Libya, (—per calidas Libyæ sitiens arenas) in that verse of Lucan.

The People, Neighbours unto Egypt, and consequently much of the same condition. Said by Herodotus (by whom they were called Adyrnachidæ) to be govern'd by the like Laws and Customs as the Egyptians were; but do differ from them in their habit. Of colour dark and black; of Constitution, lean and dry, and inclining to Melancholy; angry on every little occasion, very litigious and eager Prosecutors of their Dues. By an old Observation among themselves, they abstained both from Beef and Hog-meat. So obstinate in denying their accustomed Tributes, that he who could not shew the Marks of his Sufferings for it, either Black or Blem, was accounted nobody: And so resolved to conceal any thing disgraceful to them, that if any of them were apprehended for a Robbery, no torment could compel him to tell his Name. At this time little differing in Person, Temper, or Condition, from the Egyptians, Moors, and Arabes intermixt amongst them.

Converted to the Faith of Christ, with, or not long after the rest of Egypt, of which then reckoned for a Province, it became part of the Patriarchate of Alexandria; whose Jurisdiction over it was confirmed by the Council of Nice; to the calling of which famous Council, this Country occasionally concurred, by bringing into the World that wretched Arius, who with his Heterodoxies and contentious Cavils, had disturbed the Church. His Herésie condemned in that famous Council; but his Person, by the Divine Justice of God, reserved to a more remarkable punishment: Being sent for by the Emperor Constantine to make a Recantation of his former Herésies, he first writ out a Copy of his own Opinions, which he had in his Bosom; and then writing out the Recantation expected from him, took Oath that he did really mean as he had Written; which Words the Emperor referred to the Recantation, he to the Paper in the Bosom. But God would not be so cozened, though the Emperor was. For as he passed in Triumph through the Streets of Constanti- nople, he drew aside into a private House of Ease, where he voided his Guts in the Draught, and sent his Soul as an Harbinger to the Devil, to make room for his Body.

Not more infamous for the Birth of this Miscreant, who denied the Divinity of Christ; than famous for the Birth of one of the Sibyls, hence surnamed Libyca, by whom the same had been fore-shewn. Which Sibyls seem to have taken denomination from Διδασκαλῆς, i. e. Jovis consiliorum conscia. They were in number Ten, viz. 1. Perfica, 2. Libyca, 3. Delphica, 4. Cumæa, 5. Samia, 6. Hellepontica, 7. Tiburtina, 8. Albunea, 9. Erythræa, and 10. Cumana; which last is affirmed to have written the Nine Books of Sibyls. They were all presented by an Old Woman to Tarquinius Superbus; but he not willing to pay so great a Sum of Money as was demanded, denied them; whereupon the Old Woman burnt three of them, requiring as much Money for the other six as for all; which being denied, she also burnt another three, asking as much for the three remaining as for the rest; which Superbus, amazed, gave, and the old Trot vanished. These Books contained manifest Tokens of the Kingdom of Christ, his Name, his Birth and Death. They were burned by the Arch-Traytor Stilico. So that those Prophecies of theirs, which are now extant, are for the most part only such as had been extracted out of other Writings, where their Authority had been quoted. Concerning which, though Casaubon, and some other of our great Philologers, conceive them to be pia fraudes; composed of purpose by the Fathers of the Primitive Times, to win credit to the Faith of CHRIST; yet dare I not so far disparage those most godly Men, as to believe they would support so strong an Edifice with so weak a Prop, or borrow help from Falsehood to evict a Truth. Or if they durst have been so imprudently venturous, how easie had it been for their learned Adversaries, Porphyrie, Julian, and the rest of more eminent note, to have detected the Imposture, and silenced the Christian Advocates with reproach and scorn? But of this enough here, more at large elsewhere.

Rivers of Note I find not any. 'Tis well, if in a Country so full of Sands, there be any at all: Some Lakes I meet with in my Authors; the principal of which, 1. Laccus, 2. Lacus Lacomedis, now Linxamo, 3. Clærtus; sufficient to preserve their few Cattel from the taint of thirst. The Mountains of most note, 1. those called Anogambri, 2. and that named Azar; this last extended West and East, in a straight Line from the 51 degree of Longitude, to the 53. 3. Aliphus, 4. Ogdomus, 5. Timodes, 6. Alpis; not much observable, but that they serve for Land-marks to discover the Country.

Towns of note there are none now in it. Of most esteem in former times, 1. Batrachus, by some called Menelaus, an Haven-Town, 2. Phthia; and 3. Anisisphyra, two Port-Towns also. 4. Tetrapyr-gia, so called from its four Towers, the Antipyrgus of Ptolemy, 5. Mesuchis, more within the Land, 6. Mazacilla, another Mid-land Town. 7. Chæreola, mentioned amongst the chief Cities of this Tract by Ammianus, 8. Paratonium, now Porto-rassa, which with Pelusium are by Florus called the two Horns of Egypt; which whosoever held fast, would be sure to master it. By some old Writers it had formerly been called Ammonia, as we read in Stephanus and Strabo; from the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, seated very near it. So anciently honoured with an Oracle, (if that were any honour to it) that Semiramis is said to have come hither to enquire of her death; Persous and Hercules, touching their Adventures. The like, but not long after, was done by Alexander the Great; but the Oracle by that time had learnt to flutter, and puffed him up with a proud conceit of being the Son of that God whom he came to worship. The Temple seated in the middle of a vast sandy Desart, environ'd with a pleasant and delightful Grove, about six Miles or more in circuit; watered with whollome Springs, refreshed with a temperate Air, and shaded with Fruit-bearing Trees, which carried in their Leaves a perpetual Spring. Fortified with a Triple Wall, within the first whereof was a Royal Palace of the Kings; within the second a Seraglio for his Women; in the third, Lodgings for the Officers at Court: The Oracle fitly placed (so the Priests would have it) near the Seraglio of the Ladies; before the entrance a fair Fountain, wherein the Oblations were first washed, then offered. A place of great repute in sacred and civil estimate; all the adjoining Country taking hence the Name of Ammoniaca, and by that Name reckoned amongst the Provinces of the Patriarchate of Alexandria. 9. Antipbra, on the East border of it towards Alexandria. 10. Barce, called afterwards Ptolemais, by the Name of one of the Ptolemies, by whom repaired and beautified. Of such account, that from hence the whole Country had the Name of Barca, and the Inhabitants of Barcæi, (——— Lateque furentes Barcæi) as in that of Virgil.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Libyrarchæ and Bassachitæ, in the North; the Ogdoni, Buzes, and Adyrmachidæ, in the South; the Goniataæ and Profaditæ, in the midland parts; the Libyægyptii, bordering nearest unto Egypt, with the People whereof so intermingled, as to make up betwixt them but one Name and Nation. Others there were of less, or as little note, but all descended properly of Naphtubim, the Son of Misraim; from whom the Name of Neptune, originally a Libyan Deity, seems to be derived; yet so that Lehabin his Brother must come in for a share; the Founder, as it is conceived, of the Libyægyptii before mentioned. Being then of the same original with those of Egypt, they followed the same Fortunes also, till the times of the Ptolemies; by whom sometimes given for portion with the Title of a Kingdom to their younger Children. By the last Will and Testament of Apion, the last King hereof, a Bastard-Son of Ptolemy surnamed Euergetes the seventh King of that House; bequeathed unto the Senate and People of Rome. By whom first suffered to live under them, as a Free-state, till the Conquest of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and so accordingly described by Ptolemy; where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammoniaca occur amongst the Nomi, or Divisions of it. Afterwards made a distinct Province of that Diocese, and govern'd by a Lord-President, under the Præfectus Augustalis, or supreme Commander of the Emperors.

2. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the East, with Marmarica; on the West, with Africa propria, or the Realm of Tunis, and some part of the Mediterranean, and the greater Syrtis; on the North, with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South, with Libya Inferior, or the Desarts of Libya.

It took this Name from Cyrene, the chief City of it, from whence sometimes also called Cyrenaica; by Pliny and some other Roman Writers, it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz. 1. Cyrene, 2. Ptolemais, 3. Arfinoe, 4. Darnice, 5. Berenice: by Ammianus for the same Reason Libya Pentapolis, the Name of Libya extending over many of these Roman Provinces. And finally, at the present, it passeth with that last described by the Name of Barca, or Barca Marmarica: the whole extent whereof in length from the greater Syrtis unto Egypt, is no less than 1300 Miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Country in the South parts desolate and barren, stored with few Towns, and not many Villages; the People living up and down in scatter'd Houses, and at such a distance, as if it were in so many Islands. Destitute not of Springs and Rivers only, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping; if any fell, it was dried up presently by the Sands. But within fifteen Miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitful and well inhabited.

The People in old times were said to have been utterly ignorant of buying and selling, of fraud and stealing, not knowing, or not caring for the Use of Money; content with little, not superfluous in their Cloaths or Buildings; their Houses for the most part (except only in their greater Cities) made of Olive-Twigs. Much alter'd in the first part of their Character, since the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Thieving Nation, given wholly to Robbery and Spoil. So lazy that they will not Manure or Till their Land, but provide themselves with Corn from Sudy; laying their Children to pawn for it, till by their Thieving they can raise a sufficient Sum to discharge the Debt.

One only River I find in it, but of Fame enough to serve for many; by Ptolemy called Luthon, by Pliny, Lethon; by the Poets Lethe. Swallowed by the Earth not far from its first Original, it riseth up again about Berenice; feigned therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulness in all them that drink of it; it being the condition of the Dead to remember nothing. Thence the occasion of the fancy. Some Lakes I find also in it, whereof one occasioned by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the Land (where indeed more necessary) near Paliurus. With Mountains better stored (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, 1. Those called Herculis Arena, the Sands of Hercules, thwarting the Country East and West, 2. Bucolicus, on the South of those: And, 3. Volpus, a long ridge of Hills, bordering upon Africa Propria.

Cities of most note in it, 1. Apollonia, in the East parts near the Promontory called Zephyrium, in the Confines of Libya, or Marmarica. 2. Cyrene, in the West of that; once of such power, that it contended with Carthage for some preheminiencies: Then the chief Lady of this Tract, which it gave this name to. The birth-place of Eratoſthenes the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jews compelled to carry our Saviour's Cross. 3. Ptolemais, betwixt Cyrene and Arfinoe; built or repaired by Ptolemy Philadelphus; the Episcopal City of Syneſius, a learned and a religious Bishop of the Primitive times, as appears by his Epistles extant. 4. Arfinoe, on the East-side of the River Luthon; so called in honour of Arfinoe, the Sister of Philadelphus, and Wife of Magus, once King of this Country. 5. Berenice, on the Western Bank of the said River, so called from Berenice the Mother, or (another of the same nature) the Daughter of Magus: The furthest Town of all this Country, bordering on the Promontory called Boreum, and the greater Syrtis. This last a Quick-sand very dangerous to Mariners, in compass 635 Miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6. Paliurus, more within the Land, but on the Borders of Libya or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7. Aptungis, now Lungisari, by Ptolemy called Aptuchi Fanum. 8. Herculis Turris, the Tower of Hercules near the Greater Syrtis; erected in the honour of Hercules, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing robbing the Orchards of the Hesperides of their Golden Apples. Those Hesperides said to be Ægle, Arethusa, and Hesperethusa, the three Daughters of Atlas; Their Orchard placed by Ptolemy, betwixt this Tower and Pellicurus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantic Islands; by Virgil in Mauritania Tingitana; by Pliny, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and possibly in all alike. 9. Zemithus, 10. Acabis in the mid-lands; all worn out of memory. 11. Fessan, of greatest name now, though scarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Asbetæ on the East, the Barcitæ near the Greater Syrtis, the Macatutæ and Leganici near the Mountains of Hercules; all probably descended from Naphtubim the Son of Mizraim, of whom there still remain some Foot-steps in Aptuchi Fanum, the Fane or Temple of Aptuchus. This Aptuchus, by some mistakingly called Autuchus, and by the Grecians said to be the Son of Cyrene, and the Brother of Aristæus; who being sent out to seek their Fortunes, Aristæus fell into the Island named Cæos; and Aptuchus, or Autuchus into Libya, both by them first planted. Neptune, the Deity of this Country, by the Egyptians called Neptitim, seems to come from Naptubim; most highly worshipped by this People, because he first taught them τὴν ἄρτιον καὶ δέξιον, the Art of training Horses to the Coach or Chariot; in which the Cyrenians afterwards grew so expert, that they could drive their Chariots in a Round or Circle, and always keep their Chariot-wheels in the self-same tract. Of no great power, till Battus a noble Spartan, landing in this Country, had built the City of Cyrene; and founded it in so good a course of Life and Discipline, that in short time it came to have Dominion over the most part of this Country; and to contend with Carthage about their Territories. Warred on by Apries King of Egypt, they sued unto the Greeks for aid, and by their assistance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themselves, they craved aid of Ptolemy the first of that Race, by whom they were finally subdued. Left by him at his Death to Magus, a Son of his last Wife by a former Husband, whom he had married to Arfinoe, one of his Daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the marriage of Berenice, the Daughter and Heir of Magus, with the Son of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Alienated from which Crown again, for the preferment of some of the younger Princes; and in the end given by one of the Ptolemies, the last King hereof, to the People of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Augustus Caesar, by whom united in one Government with the Isle of Crete; but made a Province of it self by the following Emperors, never since separated from the fortune and Affairs of Egypt, to which now we hasten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the question in this point, betwixt them and the Scythians, being not easily decided. Whether it were so Ancient, as the Egyptians say, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, That they had the Memory and Story of 13000 years, and a Succession of 330 Kings in the time of Amasis the second, who was contemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if understood of Solar Years, measured by the Course of the Sun, must not be allowed of; because it maketh them many thousand Years older than the Creation: but if of Lunary, which is most agreeable unto the Account of the Egyptians, who reckoned their Years by Months; it will amount unto no more than to 1000, or 1100 years, and so fall answerably to the times following after the Flood. But for their Kings, 330 in their reckonings, and those of twenty four or twenty five several Dynasties, the matter is not so soon made up. For either those Kings must not be all Kings or supreme Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their several Regents or Viceregents, armed with Regal power; and those Dynasties not the succession of so many Regal Families, but of their Substitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live successively under one supreme; or else we must needs look on Egypt as distracted in those times into several Kingdoms, amongst the Princes of those Dynasties before remembered; or finally, we must look for some of those Kings and Princes before the Flood; by either of these ways, the business may be well agreed. For if that most of them were but the names of several Regents, (as probably enough it is) there might be many such in the Reign of one King; according to the King's fancy, the merit of particular Persons, or the necessities of State: Changes of great Officers, especially if grown too great, are not new nor strange. If they were all Kings, or supreme Rulers, (as it is also probable) we find not any one thing of moment to persuade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their several parts (as in other Countries in those times) till the greater had devoured the less. Or if they were the Names of such sovereign Princes, as had the sole Command of Egypt before the Flood, (as some think they were) they might amount in all to so great a number, and so many Dynasties; the Iniquity of those times, the ambition of great Persons, and consequently the short lives of the Kings being duly pondered. That Egypt, and most part of the World, was peopled before the Flood, hath been already proved in our general Preface: If peopled, then without question under some Form of Government: The names of which Governours (call them Kings or Rulers, or what else you please) might be preserved in Egypt on Pillars of Brass or Stone; or otherwise transmitted by Tradition unto Cham the Father of Mizraim, by whom this Country was first planted after the Confusion of Babel. But that old Stock of Kings and People being destroyed in the general Deluge, the Children of Mizraim succeeded next in their desolate Dwellings; yet so that the Posterity of Chus and Lchabin, two others of the Sons of Cham, had their shares therein. From the first of which descended the Inhabitants of those parts of Egypt, which lay along the shores of the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: In which respect, not only one of the Nomi, or divisions bordering on the Isthmus, had the name of Arabia; but the People dwelling on those shores, were called Arabes, divided into the Arabes Azarei, and Arabes Adei. And from the other came that mixture of Nations, called Liby-egyptii, or Libyans and Egyptians intermixt together, inhabiting in Maræotica, and the Western parts. But though these People were derived from several Ancestors, they made one Nation in the total; subject to Mizraim as their Chief, and after his decease, unto his Successors in the Kingdom of Egypt. Concerning whom we may observe, That in Cham, our greatest Antiquaries find the name of Jupiter Hammon: Mizraim they guess to be Osiris, the great God of Egypt. To him succeeded Typhon, not by right of Blood, but by Usurpation; who dispossessed by Lchabin, the Brother of Mizraim (whom the Greeks call Hercules Egyptius) the Kingdom was restored to Orus, the Son of Osiris. During the time of these few Princes, happened all those things which were recorded in the Scriptures concerning Egypt; from the first going down of Abraham in the time of Osiris, to the advancement of Joseph in the Reign of Orus, in which there passed the 15, 16, and 17

Dynasties

Dynasties of Regal Vice-Roys; Lieutenants only, as I take it, to those mighty Princes. The Kings themselves called generally by the name of Pharaoh, though they had all their proper and peculiar Names; as afterwards their Successors here had the name of Ptolemy, and the Roman Emperors, that of Cæsar. Few of them famous in the Stories of other Nations, or of renown for their Atchievements and Exploits abroad; contenting themselves with the Revenues of their own Dominions, and spending the surplufage thereof in building Cities, draining the Marshes of the Nile, or other works of Ostentation and Magnificence. Only Sesoftris is of fame for his undertakings, though when he had cast up his Accompt, he got nothing by them; of whom it is reported, That being a King of great Wealth and Puissance, he had brought under subjection all his neighbouring Princes whom he compelled in turns to draw his Chariot. It happened that one of these unfortunate Princes cast his Eye many times on the Coach-wheel, and being by Sesoftris demanded the cause of his so doing, he replied, That the falling of that Spoke lowest, which but just before was the highest in the Wheel, put him in mind of the instability of Fortune. The King deeply weighing the Parable, would never after be so drawn in his Chariot. He was also the first that encountred the Scythians in Battel; having already in conceit conquered them, before he led his Army against them. The Scythians much marvelled, that a King of such great Revenues would wage War against a Nation so poor, with whom the fight would be doubtful, the Victory unprofitable; but to be vanquished, a perpetual Infamy and Disgrace. For their parts they resolved to meet him as an Enemy, whose overthrow would enrich them. When the Armies came to joyn, the Egyptians were discomfited, and pursued even to their own Doors by the Enemy. But the Scythian could not enter the Country, because of the Fenns, with whose passage they were unacquainted; and so they returned. Which said, without troubling our selves with their many Dynasties, we will lay down the Succession of their Kings, as well as we can; the disagreement of Historians and Chronologers, touching this Succession, being irreconcilable.

2335	11	Amenophthis II. supposed to be Memnon and the Vocal Statue. 31.	3159	50	Oserchon , the second Hercules Egyptius , as some will have it. 8.
2366	12	Orus II. the Busiris of the Grecians, a bloody Tyrant; who commanded the Male-children of Israel to be slain. 37.	3167	51	Psamnis . 15.
2403	13	Acencheres , by some called Thermutis , the Daughter of Amenophthis the second, and afterwards the Wife of Orus ; who preserved Moses , and survived her Husband. 13.	3185	52	Bochoris , called by the name of So , 2 Kings 17. 4. taken and burnt by Sabakon the King of Ethiopia . 44.
2416	14	Rathosis , the Son of Orus . 6.	3229	53	Sabakon King of Ethiopia . 8.
2422	15	Acencheres II. 12.	3238	54	Sevacus Son of Sabakon , 14.
2449	16	Cencbres , by some called Arenasis ; Bochoris by others; drowned in the Red-Sea , with his Horses and Chariots. 16.	3252	55	Taracon , falsely supposed to be the Zerab of the Scriptures. 10.
2453	17	Acherres . 8.	3270	56	Stephinales . 7.
2462	18	Cherres . 10.	3277	57	Nicluspes , after whose death followed an Aristocracy of 12 Princes, who having governed 15 years, were divested of their Authority by one of their own number, called
2472	19	Armais , by the Grecians called Danaus , whose fifty Daughters being married to the fifty Sons of his Brother Egyptus , murdered their Husbands; for which cause Danaus , being forced out of Egypt , passed into Greece , where attaining to the Kingdom of Argos , he gave unto the Grecians the name of Danai .	3288	58	Psamniticus , who first made the Grecians acquainted with Egypt , whom he invited to his aid against the Syrians ; the Founder of the famous Labyrinth before mentioned, and no less memorable for his prudent preventing of the Scythians from breaking into his Country; of which we spake before, when we were in Tartaria . 54.
2575	20	Rameses , surnamed Egyptus , the Brother of Danaus .	3335	59	Necho , who slew Josiah at the battel of Megiddo . 25.
2580	21	Amenophthis III. 10.	3360	60	Psamnis II. 44.
2590	22	Sethos , or Sesothis . 55.	3366	61	Apries , called Hophra , Jer. 44. subdued by Nebuchadnezzar , and deposed by Amasis . 25.
2645	23	Rhaphaces , or Ranses . 66.	3391	62	Amasis II. 44.
2711	24	Amenophthis IV. 40.	3435	63	Psammitas or Psamniticus II. a King of six months only; vanquished by Cambyses the second Monarch of Persia , who united Egypt to that Empire; under which it continued till the time of Darius , the sixth King of the Medes and Persians : in the 2d. year of whose Reign it revolted from him, and became a Kingdom of it self, as in former times.
2751	25	Rameses II. 26.	3555	64	Amyrteus , the first King after the Revolt. 6.
2777	26	Thuoris 7. After whose death succeeded a Race of twelve Kings, called the Diopolitani , who held the Kingdom for the space of 177 years. Their Names we find not, but that one of the latest of them, whose Daughter Solomon married, was called Vaphra ; and perhaps Ogdoos , who removed the Royal Seat from Thebes to Memphis , might be another, and the eighth, as his name importeth.	3561	65	Nepherites , 6.
2961	39	Smendes , the Sisac of the Scriptures, who made War upon Rehoboam the Son of Solomon ; conceived to be the Sesostris of Herodotus , and others of the ancient Writers, of whom sufficiently before.	3567	66	Achoris , 12.
			3579	67	Psammites III. 1.
			3580	68	Nepherites II. a King of two Months only.
				69	Nectanebos . 18.
			3598	70	Teos or Tachos , deposed by 3600

3600 71 Nectanebus II. the last King of the natural Egyptian Race, that ever govern'd Egypt by the name of a King. For in the 18th. of the Reign of this King, Egypt was again recovered by the valour of Ochus, the eighth Emperour of Persia. And when Alexander had overthrown Darius, he came, and without Blows won this fertile Kingdom; which yielded him, during his Life, the yearly value of 8000 Talents. After his Death, this Kingdom fell to the share of Ptolemæus the Son of Lagus, from whom all the subsequent Kings of Egypt were called Ptolemæus.

The Second DYNASTY, or the PTOLEMEAN Kings of Egypt.

- A. M.*
- 3481 1 Ptolemy, one of Alexander's Captains, repured the Son of Lagus; but supposed to be the Son of Philip of Macedon, half-brother to Alexander, 40.
- 3681 2 Ptol. Philadelphus, who filled the Library of Alexandria with 700000 Volumes, and caused the 72 Interpreters to translate the Bible.
- 3717 3 Ptol. Euergetes the Son of Philadelphus, vanquished Seleucus Callinicus King of Syria, and probably had subdued the Kingdom, if not called back by Domestick dissensions, 26.
- 3743 4 Ptol. Philopator, a cruel, voluptuous and incestuous Prince, cruelly slew Cleomenes the last King of Sparta, who had fled to his Father for relief, in the time of his exile, 17.
- 3760 5 Ptol. Epiphanes, at the age of five years succeeded his Father; protected by the Romans, against Antiochus the Great of Syria, who had an aim upon his Kingdom, 28.
- 3784 6 Ptol. Philometor, the Son of Epiphanes, by Cleopatra the Daughter of Antiochus; protected in his nonage by the Romans also: Caused himself to be Crowned King of Syria, but again relinquish'd it, 35.
- 3829 7 Ptol. Euergetes II. for his deformity called Physcon, the Brother of Ptol. Philometor, a wicked Prince, and one that spent the greatest part of his Reign in a causeless War against Cleopatra, his Wife and Sister, 29.
- 3858 8 Ptol. Latbargus reigned 16 years with Cleopatra his Mother, by whom dispossessed of his Estate for the space of ten years; after her death was sole Lord of Egypt. His Brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Associate, in the time of his deprivation, and passing in the account of the Kings of Egypt.
- 3892 9 Ptol. Auletes, the Son of Latburus, surnamed also Dionysius, whose Brother being settled by him in the Isle of Cyprus, was most unjustly stripped of it by the power of the Romans: And he himself ousted of Egypt by his own Subjects, but restored by the aid and love of Pompey.
- 3922 10 Ptol. Dionysius, called also Junior, or the younger, together with Cleopatra his Wife and Sister, succeeded Auletes in the Throne, which they held together by the space of three Years. In the last of which, Pompey was barbarously slain on the Shores of Egypt, by the command of Julius the young King's Governour; and the young King himself unfortunately slain in the Alexandrian Tumult against Julius Cæsar.
- 3925 11 Cleopatra, the Wife and Sister of Dionysius, restored to the Crown of Egypt by the bounty of Cæsar, of whom exceedingly beloved for her Wit and Beauty. After which she governed Egypt 19 years in her own sole Right, with great Pomp and Splendour: When being embarked in the Bed and Fortunes of Marc Anthony, she killed her self not long after his fatal Overthrow at the Battel of Actium, that she might not be led in triumph through Rome.
- These Ptolemean Princes of Egypt, were for the most part, in Wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns victorious, and vanquished; neither Prince having cause to boast of his Bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whose Life and Love with Marcus Antonius, I will not now relate, this Country fell to the share of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governour hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome, no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a Maxim of State, not to suffer Men of great Houses to come into that Country, whose revolt might endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt: For besides the natural situation of the place, very defensible; and besides the abundance of Money with which it was stored; this Country alone furnished the City of Rome with Corn for four Months yearly. Whence Vespasian being chosen Emperour by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his Concurrent Vitellius, hastened hither; to this end only, that detaining the ordinary provision of Victuals, he might by Famine compel the City of Rome to stand at his Devotion: Ut urbem quoque externæ opis indigam fame urgeret, as the Historian hath observed. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperour's sole Peculiar: Afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Dioecesis of it self, subordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis. In the division of the Empire allotted to the Constantinopolitans, whose Government being thought to be insupportable by this wanton People, they called in the Saracens, by whom the Greek Garrisons were cast out, and the Country made subject to Haumar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards weary of them also, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards, we shall meet with two Caliphs at a time; the one residing at Cairo, in Egypt, to whom the Saracens or Moors of Spain and Africk did submit themselves: The other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the rest, at least as to the Supreme Title, and some chief Prerogatives; though the main power was cantoned and disposed of among their Sultans.

The Third DYNASTY, or the CALIPHS of EGYPT.

A. C.	A. H.
870	247	1 A Achmades, or Achmat, 10.
880	257	2 Tolen, 3.
883	260	3 Hamaria, 29.
903	280	4 Abarun, slain by Mustaphi, the Caliph of Babylon, 37.
940	317	5 Achid Muhamid, the Son of Tangi, 3.
943	320	6 Abigud, the Son of Achid, 27.
970	347	7 Meaz, Ledin, Illabi, of the race of Phatime and Hali, 5.
975	352	8 Aziz, the Son of Meaz, 21.
996	373	9 Elbachain, 23.
1019	396	10 Etaber Leazizdin Illabi, 16.
1035	412	11 Musteratzer Billabi, 60.
1056	472	12 Musteale, 5.
1100	477	13 Elamir Bahacan Illabi, 35.
1135	512	14 Elhapit Ladin Illabi.

16 Elphaiz.

17 Etzar Ledin Illabi, the Son of Elphaiz, the last Caliph, or King of Egypt, of the Race of Phatime; the Turks succeeding after his death in this opulent Kingdom. Concerning whom we are to know, That Elphaiz the Father of Etzar, being overpowered by Almericus King of Hierusalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkish Sultan of Damascus; which he received under the Conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachoch, a right valiant and stout Commander; who taking his advantages, not only cleared the Country of Almericus, but got the whole Kingdom to himself; dashing out the Brains of Elphaiz with his Horse-man's Mace. And though Etzar his Son assumed for a while the Title of Caliph; yet the destruction of himself, and the whole Phatimean Family rooted out by Sarracon, soon put an end to that Claim, and left the Kingdom in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Sultans.

THE FOURTH

DYNASTY, or the Race of the TURKISH
KINGS or CALIPHS of EGYPT.

- 1163 1 Afereddin, surnamed Shirachob, called Sarracon, by the Christian Writers; the first of the Turks that reigned in Egypt; of the Noble Family of Aiub.
- 1186 2 Zeli-beddin, called Saladine by the Christian Writers; the Son (or as some say, the Nephew,) of Sarracon, or Shirachob; confirmed in his Estate by the Caliph of Bagdet, under whose Jurisdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schismatics. He obtained also the Kingdom of Damascus, conquered Mesopotamia and Palestine; and in the year 1190. regained the City of Hierusalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to succeeding Ages, nor to glorify him in the Kingdom of Heaven, but the saving Knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.
- 1199 3 Elaziz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Egypt; which he exchanged afterwards with his Brother Eladel for the Kingdom of Damascus.
- 4 Eladel, or El-Aphtzel, by the Christian Writers called Meledine, succeeded upon this exchange in the Kingdom of Egypt: and overcame the Christians without the loss of a Man, at the siege of Cairo, by letting loose the Sluces of Nilus, which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleasure.
- 1210 5 Elchamul.
- 1237 6 Melech Affalach, by the Christian Writers called Melechfala, the Son of Elchamul, who overcame Lewis the 9th of France; and going with that King towards Damietta, was slain by the Soldiers of his Guard, called Mamaluks.
- 1242 7 Elmutan, the Son of Melech Affalach, succeeded for a time in his Father's Throne. But the Mamaluks being resolved to obtain the Kingdom for themselves, enforced him to flee to a Tower of Wood, which they set on fire; the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran close by it) was there drowned, and the Mamaluks settled in the Kingdom, An. 1245.

The Mamaluks were the Off-spring of a People on the Banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circassians; whom Melechfala either bought of their Parents, or (at the second hand) of the Tartars, then newly Masters of those Countreys, to supply the want of Valour in the idle and effeminate People of Egypt, and out of them selected a choice Band of Men for the Guard of his Person: No Jew or Mahometan's Son could be admitted into this Order; they knowing their strength, and finding their opportunity, treacherously slew Melechfala their Lord and Master; appointing one Azeddin Ibek, a Turcoman by Nation, and therefore by most Christian Writers called Tarquimencius, (one of their own number) a Man of great Spirit and Valour, to succeed in the Throne. Unwilling to re-give the Supreme Authority into the Hands of the Egyptians; and not permitting their own Sons to enjoy the name and privilege of Mamaluks; they bought yearly certain numbers of Circassian Slaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be instructed in the Egyptian Language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for Employment, they were taught the Discipline of War, and by degrees advanced into the highest Offices of Power and Trust, as now the Janizaries are in the Turkish Empire: In choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turks were preceded by those of Egypt; so it is possible enough that the Janizaries may make as great a Change in the Turkish Empire, as the Mamaluks did in the Egyptian. So unsafe a thing it is for a Prince to commit the sole guard of his Person, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of such, whom not the sense of a natural Duty, but the hopes of Profit or Preferment may make useful to him. For thus we find, That Constantinus, a King of the Britains, was murdered by his Guard of Picts: Most of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of those whom they entrusted, either with the guard of their Persons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no Man can be ignorant, how many times the Princes and Estates of Italy have been brought into the extremest dangers, by trusting too much to the Honesty of mercenary Soldiers and Commanders. Take we for instance the proceedings of Giacopo Picennio, who with his Followers first took pay of Ferdinand the first of Naples; left him to fight for his vowed Enemy, John Duke of Calabria, the Son of Rene Duke of Anjou, whom he also forsook in his greatest need. The like we find of Francisco Sforza, first entertained by the Duke of Milan, from whom he revolted to the Florentines; from them to the Venetians; and being again received into the pay of the State of Milan, made use of their own Army to subdue that City. Nor can I speak better of the Switzers, or their dealing in this kind with the French Kings, the Sforza's Dukes of Milan, and with whom not, (to say the truth) that ever trusted or employed them?

Now as it is unsafe for a Prince to commit the custody of his Person, or the defence of his Estates to the Faith of Foreigners; so it is dangerous to him to call in such Aids, and to commit his Fortunes either wholly or principally, unto their Fidelity. A moderate supply of Men, Money, or Munition from a Confederate King, is, I confess, in most cases convenient, in some necessary: As well to save their Natives from the Sword, as to try a Friend, and interest an Ally in the same Cause. But to invite so great a number of Succours, as from Helpers may become Masters, and oppress the People whom they came to defend; is that Rock on which many Realms have suffered Shipwreck, and which a good Pilot of the State should with all care avoid; for as in the sickness of the Body natural, it is hurtful to a Man's Health and Life to take more Physick than it may (after the effect thereof be wrought) either digest digest or put out again; so in the Body Politick, it is a perilous matter to receive more Succours, than what (after they have done the Deed they were sent for) we may either with conveniency reward and settle with us, or at liberty Expel. Of all surfeits, this of Foreign supplies is most incurable; and Ne quid nimis, it in nothing else true, is in this case Overt. There is no Kingdom; (I am verily perswaded) under the Sun, which hath not been by this means conquered; no Common-wealth, which hath not been by this means ruined. To relate all Examples, were infinite and tedious; to infer some pleasing to the Reader; and to illustrate the Point not unnecessary. To begin with former times, Philip of Macedon, called into Greece to assist the Thebans against the Phocians, brought all that Country, in a manner, under his command. The Romans, by aiding the Sicilians against the Carthaginians, possessed themselves of that flourishing Island; by assisting the Hidui against the Sequani, mastered Gallia; by succouring Androgeus against Cassibelan, seized on Britain; by siding with the Ætolians against Perseus, united to their Empire all the Kingdom of Macedon; and by the same course what not? In after-ages, the Britains called in the Saxons, and were by them thrust out of all; the Irish called in the English, by whom they were in process of time totally subdued; and the Indians called in the Mongul-Tartars, who now Lord it over them. These Foreign Supplies are invited, or let into a Country, commonly in four cases. First, when some one Man upon Discontent, or desire of revenge, openeth them a way into a Country: Upon which Motives, Narses invited the Lombards into Italy; and Count Julian brought the Moors into Spain; the one to be revenged on the Empress Sophia, who had despihtfully reviled him, the other to revenge himself on King Roderick, who ravished his Daughter. Secondly, when a weaker Faction makes way for them, to maintain their cause against a stronger. On which ground, the Duke of Burgundy, being oppressed by the Faction of Orleans, made way for Henry the Fifth to pass into France; and the Leaguers drew the Spaniards in, to hold up their declining Cause against Henry the 4th. Thirdly, when an Ambitious Prince makes use of a Foreign Power, to usurp upon the Rights of another Man. And for that cause Ludowick Sforza perswaded Charles the 8th. to undertake the Conquest of the Realm of Naples; that by the countenance of his Arms, he might appropriate to himself the Dukedom of Milan. Fourthly, when a King over-burdened by a foreign or domestick Force, which he is not able to resist, requires the help of a foreign Friend: In which case, Plus à medico quàm à morbo mali, the Physick proves many times worse than the Disease. For thus the Kings of Naples of the House of Aragon, being in danger of the French, drew in the Aids of Ferdinand the Catholick, the Cousin-German once removed of the King then being; and the Caliphs of Egypt, not able to withstand the Forces of Almericus, craved aid of the Turks: By which means, both those Kingdoms were made a prey to their foreign Friends, and by avoiding Scylla, fell into Charybdis. Nay, many times it so happeneth, that these Foreign Succours joyn in design with those, against whom they were called, and divide the conquered State between them. And so we find, That the Burgundians being called by Stilico into Gaul, to prevent the breaking of the Franks, or French, joyned with them in a common League against the Romans, whom they dispossessed at last of all that Country. Only amongst so many Examples to this purpose, we find the Low-Country-men to have prospered by these Foreign Aids; who by the assistance of the English, ransomed themselves from that Yoke of bondage which was intended to be put upon them by the King of Spain. This I acknowledge to be true, and look upon it as a great Argument of the Integrity and Honesty of the English Nation; although it be as true withal, that the English never had such an Army there, as to be able to subdue them. But give me such another instance, I will quit the Cause: For the same Low-Country-men found it otherwise with the Duke of Anjou, Brother to Henry the 3d. of France, whom they created Duke of Brabant, and their Governour-General, permitting him to bring in as many of the French, as either his Authority, or their own Moneys were able to raise: who was no sooner settled in that command, but he made it his chief business to seize upon their strongest Holds, and to be a more absolute Prince amongst them, than ever the Spaniards or Burgundians had been before. So that I think I may conclude, That these foreign Succours are the last to be tryed, and the least to be trusted, of any remedies in State. It is wonderful that a thing so often tried and so well known, should be so stubbornly pursued by the Jacobite Faction now in England, who for four Years together are restlessly plotting to bring the French Forces into England, under pretence of restoring James the Second, after he had fled thither, with an apparent intention to return with a French Army to Conquer this Nation, and extirpate the English Liberties and the Protestant Religion; the issue of which, if it should succeed, by the just judgment of God on a proud and sinful Nation, would be the desolating these Kingdoms, the Destruction of the Royal Family, for which these Men pretend a wonderful Love, and in the end, reduce the late King, together with these Kingdoms, under the Vassalage of the most formidable Natural Enemy of our Nation. These consequences being so visible, it is a wonderful thing any English Protestant can be so infatuated as to be guilty of it; but when Men are thoroughly incensed against each other, their Passions so blind their Reasons, that they often chuse a certain Ruin, to involve those they too much hate in the same with them. This Reflection might perhaps have been omitted here, but that I was willing to leave a Testimony to Posterity, of my detestation of their Folly; and for the Confusion also of another Faction, who, after all that is possible to be written, done, or said by me to the contrary, have so lately attempted to ruin me on that Pretence, and for the present, in a great Degree have effected the same. But it is now more than time to return to the Mamelucks; and in them to

DYNASTY of the EGYPTIAN KINGS, of the Race of the MAMALUCKS.

1255

1 Turquimenius, who being promoted to the Kingdom, released King Lewis, whom Melechfala his Predecessor had taken Prisoner, but performed not half the conditions agreed upon.

2 Clothes (by some called Elmutabaz) taking advantage of the Miseries of the Turks, then distressed by the Tartars, seized on the the greatest part of Syria and Palestine.

3 Bandocader perfected the begun Conquests of Clothes, and took from the Christians the strong City of Antioch; carrying on his Armies as far as Armenia, where he did much spoil.

4 Melechfai, or Melechfares, restored the power of the Mamalucks in Syria and Palestine; where it had been much impaired by Edward the Son of Henry the 3d. of England, and Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, &c.

5 Elpis, or Alphis, recovered from the dissenting Christians the strong Cities of Tripolis, Berytus, Tyre, and Sydon; all which he razed to the ground, that they might not be any more serviceable to the Affairs of the Christians.

1291

6 Araphus, or Eustrephus, by birth a German, released Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, after he had been Prisoner 26 years. He rooted the Christians out of Syria, took Ptolemais the last Town they there held: and so razed it, that he made it fit to be ploughed.

7 Melechnefar, when he was Lieutenant to Araphus, was discomfited by Cassanes, a great Prince of the Tartars, with the loss of 40000 Egyptians: but Cassanes being departed, he recovered again all Syria, and destroyed Hierusalem; for which Service he was afterwards made Sultan of Egypt.

8 Melechadel, who I suppose to be that Sultan that govern'd Egypt when Tamberlane with irresistible violence conquered it; but of this I am not certain: neither can I meet with any constant and continued series (which I dare rely on) of his Successors in this Kingdom, till I come to 9 Melechabella, or Melechnasar, who in the year 1423, subdued the Isle of Cyprus, and made the Kings thereof to be from thenceforth Tributaries to the Mamaluck Sultans.

10 Cathbeyus, who much reformed the State of Egypt, and was a professed Enemy of Bajazet 2d. the 8th. King of the Ottomans.

11 Mahomet, the Son of Cathbeyus, deposed by the Mamalucks, for fear the Kingdom might by him be made hereditary; it being against their usual custom, that the Son should succeed his Father, in the name and privileges of a Mamaluck.

12 Campson Charsesius, succeeded on the deposing of Mahomet.

13 Zanballat, who deposed Campson, and not long after was deposed by

1500

14 Tonombeus, cited of his Office by the joyn't consent of the Mamalucks, so to make way for Campson Gaurus.

1501

5 Campson II. surnamed Gaurus, reformed the disordered and factious Estate both of Court and Country; and for the space of 16 years govern'd very prosperously. But siding at the last with Hysmael the Persian Sophy, against Selimus the first of that name, the 3d. Emperour, and tenth King of the Ottoman Family; he drew his Kingdom into a War, in which his Armies were overthrown, and himself slain in battel.

16 Tonombeus II. succeeded Campson Gaurus, both in his Kingdom and Misfortunes; vanquished in his first year by the said Selimus the first, An. 1517. Who having conquered this rich Kingdom, was used to say, That he had gotten a Farm to feed his Gemogians, or young Soldiers. So Egypt became a Province of the Turkish Empire, as it still continueth.

What the Revenues of it were in the time of the Pharaohs, I am not able to affirm. Great they must be, beyond the proportion of belief, or else they could never have been Masters of such sufficient Treasure to finish those vast Structures which they undertook. Twelve thousand and five hundred Talents they amounted annually unto, in the time of the Ptolemies; which of our Money makes the Sum of two Millions, and 347750 pounds. Which Sum Augustus Caesar (appropriating this Province to himself) is said to have doubled; but whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the rest in Corn I determine not. Certain it is, That there was yearly shipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperour, Two hundred thousand Measures of Wheat, every Measure weighing Twenty hundred pound weight; which cometh to seven Millions, and an hundred forty thousand of our English Bushels; sold by him, or distributed gratis amongst the Poor, as he saw occasion. So that there might be very well some abatement in Money, considering that the Corn amounted to so great a Sum. Nor were they much less, it ought at all, when the Mamalucks ruled in this Country. For Campson Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no less than Ten Millions of Duckats at one clap amongst his Soldiers. But the Turks at this day, partly through their Tyrannical Government, and and partly through the discontinuance of the usual Traffick through the Red Sea, receive no more than Three Millions of Crowns; one of which is hoarded in his own Coffers; the second is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Bashaw, for support of this Charge; the third is distributed among his Garrison-Soldiers, and such of them as by Land guard his own Motion to Constantinople, for by Sea he dares not venture it, for fear of the Florentine, who with a few Ships Lordeth it in the Mediterranean.

I have taken the pains exactly to compare the state of Egypt as it was in the Year 1515, when it was Conquered by the Turks, represented very well by Leo Africanus, who was then in this Kingdom, with the state it is now in by the Report of Sandy's, Thevenot, and others who have lately travelled in it. And the difference is so very great, that to a Man who has not well considered both, it will seem incredible. A great part of the Trade of the East-Indies till that time came through Egypt, which has since been entirely cut off by the Portugueses, English, and Hollanders. 2. The Mamelucks resided in Egypt, and spent what they took amongst the People that paid it, but the Turks transport one third part every year to Constantinople, from whence it never returneth. 3. The Bassa's in their turns too send great Presents every year to the Port, to make them Friends; the consequences of which is, First, That the People being reduced to the utmost degree of Poverty, tho' the Country is so warm that they bring up their Children naked, yet they are not able to find them Food sufficient, and to enable them to till the Land, and to repair their mean Cottages: So that every year the People decrease, and the same Taxes being paid by the Remainder, it operates upon Egypt in the manner of a quick Consumption, and this good Land eats up its Inhabitants: Of about 100 great Cities and Towns there were in 1515 in Egypt, there are now not above 4 or 5 that are considerable, and not so many People perhaps now in all Egypt as was then in Grand Cairo; so that not only the Riches and Revenues of Egypt are wasted to almost nothing, but the strength too. Some may object, that the Possession is thereby the more secured, as it is indeed against the Natives; and if it were wholly desolate, would be yet more secured than now it is, but of what use is a desolate Country to the Owner? Yet after all, the People of Egypt have a property in their Lands, which none of the Turkish Subjects besides have. From hence it will appear, First, That oppressing any People is impolitick, because it destroys the Fund, and prevents the Sowing that Seed which shou'd raise the Increase. 2. It weakens the Possession, by disheartning and diminishing the Hands that should defend as well as till the Earth. 3. It in time renders the thing not worth the possessing. 4. It infallibly in time makes way for a new Conquest, and planting the Country with a new set of Men: I wish these Considerations may be seriously weighed with Respect to Ireland, and our Western Plantations, but especially the first of these, which depends intirely upon the Number and strength of the English that inhabit there; and if they be few and poor, will be subject to the Insults of the Natives, who are the implacable Enemies of the English. The want of giving due encouragement to the Trade and Commerce of Ireland, has kept the English so much under, and discourag'd others from going thither, that it hath in all times been the occasion of great Devastations by War and Massacre, and at one time or other may be the Loss of the Island, to the endangering first our Trade, and then our safety; because for want of People, we are not now so able as heretofore, to re-people and re-conquer that Nation. And without doubt, should any potent Neighbour Attack Egypt, the Turks would be driven out much more easily than they at first got it; but it is the felicity of the Grand Seignior, That he has no considerable bordering Prince on that side of his Empire.

And so much for Egypt.

Folio 877 follows this.

B A R B A R Y.

B A R B A R Y is bounded on the East, with Cyrenaica; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and some part of the Atlantick also; on the South, with Mount Atlas; by which separated from Libya inferior, or the Desarts of Libya.

It containeth in it the whole Diocese of Africk, and part of the Diocese of Spain; subject in former times to the Common-wealth of Carthage, and the Great Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia. When conquered by the Romans, they gave to that part of it, which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa; calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninsula, and afterwards extended it over all the rest of the Country, on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the subjugation of it by the Saracens: by whom called BARBARY, either from Barbar, signifying in their Language an uncertain murmur, such as the Speech of the Africans seemed to them to be; or from the word Bar, signifying a Desart, which doubled, made up first Barbar, and after Barbary.

It is situate under the Third and Fourth Climates: so that the longest Summers day in the parts most South, amounted to thirteen Hours three quarters, increased in the most Northern parts to fourteen Hours and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantick Ocean to the greater Syrtis, for the space of 1500 Miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narrowest 100 Miles; but towards the Straits, where the broadest, almost three Hundred.

Leo Africanus excludes the Kingdom of Barca out of it, which he calls the best and most celebrated part of Africa, inhabited by a Brown Civil People, who are Governed by excellent Laws. Pag. 23. he saith, The Arabians which inhabit Barbary are much more wealthy than those of Biledulgerid; which appears in their rich Cloaths and Tents. Their Horse are better shaped, more corpulent, but not so swift as the other; they have plenty of Corn, and innumerable Drovers of Cattel; yet after all, they are more morose and covetous than the Inhabitants of the Desarts.

The Country, in such parts as lye nearest to the Mediterranean, is full of Hills covered with Woods, and stored with plenty of Wild Beasts; provided reasonably well of most sorts of Fruits, but unfit for Wheat, insomuch that most of the Inhabitants live of Barley Bread. Betwixt which and Mount Atlas is a Champion Country, watered with many pleasant Rivers issuing from that Mountain, and liberally furnished with Cherries, Figs, Pears, Plums, Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oil, Honey, Sugar; some Mines of Gold, and that for purity and fineness no where to be better'd. Here are also besides, large Herds of Cattel, some Elephants, Lions, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like savage nature, and of Apes great multitudes; Horses good store, excellent both for Strength and Beauty. But taking it in the best parts, it saith extremely short of that infinite fertility, which is ascribed to it by the Writers of elder times. For besides the miracle of 500 Ears of Corn growing on the stalk, (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, That not far from the City of Tucape, in the way to Leptis, a Man might see a great Date-tree overshadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig tree, under that a Pomegranate, under that a Vine, and under all, Pease, Wheat, and Herbs, all growing and flourishing at one time. It is affirmed also by the same Author, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that some Fruits or other are gathered in it at all times of the year; and that a piece of Ground of Four Cubits square was usually Rented out at so many Denarii: by which Account, (as the Learned Budæus doth compute it) an Acre of that ground must be worth yearly, 12800 of the Roman Sestertii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinite and unparalleled increase of the Fruits of the Earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The People are of a duskyish Colour, but inclining to Blackness: much of the same nature with the Arabians, by whose numerous Families formerly they were overspread, but the Africans of the two the better: active of Body, well skill'd in Horsemanship, but impatient of Labour, covetous of Honour, inconstant, crafty, and unfaithful: Studious in matters of their Law, and in some of the Liberal Sciences, especially Philosophy and the Mathematicks, of which in many parts of the Mahometan Countries they are admitted to be Readers. They are also said to be stately of Gate, exceeding distrustful, in their Hate implacable, and jealous of their Women beyond all compare. The Women of a comely Body, and well Featured, beautiful in Blackness, of delicate soft Skins, and in their Habit and Apparel beyond measure sumptuous; so drest, to make themselves more amiable in the Eyes of their Husbands; for otherwise not permitted to stir abroad, and seldom to see any body but those of their own Houses.

The Language spoke at the present in most of the Maritime Towns, except those of Fesse and Morocco, is the Arabick Tongue. In those two Kingdoms, and most part of the Country Villages, the Punic or old African, the ancient Languages of the Country: the Punic spoken in all places, where anciently the Carthaginians were of any Power; the African (whatsoever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not subject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder, which though it was the Language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it spread so far as to extinguish or suppress the old natural Tongues: and in the Colonies themselves so much degenerated in a short time, so barbarously and imperfectly spoken; that a Sister of the Emperour Severus, who lived in Leptis, a Roman Colony, coming to Rome to see her Brother, spoke it so incongruously, that the Emperour was ashamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of St. Augustine, an African Bishop, were Preached in Latin, because Preached in Hippo his Episcopal See, which was then a Colony of the Romans; yet he confesseth, that he was sometimes fain to use such words as were not Latin, to be the better understood of his Congregation.

The Christian Faith was first planted in that part hereof which was called Africa Propria, by Epanetus, one of the 70 Disciples; by Dorotheus in his Synopsis, affirmed to be the first Bishop of Carthage: In Mauritania, by S. Simon the Apostle, surnamed Zelotes. Metaphrastes addeth, that S. Simon Peter Preached here also, when by the Decree of Claudius Caesar he was forced from Rome; and at his going hence, left Crescens his Disciple to promote the work. But by whomsoever planted first, it found good increase, and was so propagated in short time over all this Country, that in the year 250, or before, there were in it above 90 Bishops; for so many were assembled in the Synod of Labefium: and in the year 398. when the Faction of the Donatists was of greatest Power, we find no fewer than 214 Catholick Bishops met together in the Council of Carthage. Which as it is an Argument of the great increase of Christianity in those parts of Africa; so it shews also, that the Church was in ill Condition; so overpower'd by the violence of that mighty Faction, who had at least 270 Bishops of their own Opinion, that the Orthodox party was necessitated to increase the number of Bishops, for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary side, if ever the difference should come to be examined in a publick Meeting. These Bishops ranked into six Classes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Bishops of each Province subject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Diocese (contrary to the usage of all other Churches) had the name of Primates: but all of them subordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally invested with Patriarchal Jurisdiction over all these parts. Latius fusa est nostræ Previncia; habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritanias duas sibi coherentes, are S. Cyprian's words. Which shew, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer, than an Historian or Divine. He would not else have told us in such positive terms, that those of Barbary remained in their old Idolatry, till 250 years before Mahomer's Birth; at what time they received the Gospel, and not before. But the good Man mistook the reviving of the Orthodox Faith in the time of Justinian, after it had been long suppressed by the Vandals of the Arian Faction (who at one time banished hence 300 Catholick Bishops) for the first planting of the Gospel, otherwise not to be excused. But after this Reviver it held not long, when suppressed by the Saracens, and so suppressed, that except it be in some few Towns possessed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Christianity to be discerned in all this Country; Mahometanism being elsewhere universally embraced amongst them.

Here was a most flourishing Church till the 5th. Century, in the beginning of which the Vandals then Arians entred it, and brought in their Heresie with them: but that which more effectually contributed to the ruine of Christianity here, was the Conquest of it by the Moors, in the year 669. One Huchba a famous General, whom Osman the third Caliph of the Saracens employed to that purpose, finally expelled the Romans in 699. and ever since they have possessed it; who being the most enraged Enemies of Christianity that ever professed the Mahometan Law, have so far extirpated Christianity, that there is very few, if any of the Inhabitants of this vast Tract of Land which profess it.

Amongst the Men of most note for Soldiery, which have been born in this Country, we may reckon, 1. Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three Sons: 2. Annibal: 3. Asdrubal: and 4. Mago; Men hardly to be parallel'd in any Ages: 5. Masimissa, King of the Numidians, one of their Contemporaries: and in the following times, 6. Septimius Severus the Roman Emperor. Amongst those addicted to the Muses, those of most note, 1. Terence: 2. Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the World afforded Men of more eminent note, nor better deserving of the Church. 1. Tertullian, 2. Cyprian, 3. Julius Africanus, 4. Arnobius, 5. Lactantius, 6. Victorinus Afer, 7. Optatus Milevitanus, 8. Victor Uticensis, 9. Fulgentius, 10. Primasius. And above all, the most Learned and Divine S. Augustine; a Man of such admirable Abilities, and indefatigable Industry, so constant a Defender of all Orthodox Doctrines against the Hereticks of those times, that he deservedly got the name of Malleus Hæreticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Country besides Mount Atlas, (of which hereafter by it self) 1. Phorca, 2. Hepstadelphus, and 3. Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitana; 4. Cinnaba, 5. Garas, 6. Madetubadus, and 7. those called Gariphi, in Cæsariensis; 8. Thambes, 9. Mamapsarus, 10. Ujaletus, and 11. Zuchabarus, in Africa Propria. Of which, and others, we may speak more, if occasion be, in our Description of the Provinces in which they are.

And for the Rivers of most Note, though none of any long course in so narrow a Country; we have in Tingitana, 1. Sala, falling into the Atlantick, out of Atlas minor; 2. Another of the same name, and the same exit also, but far more to the North, towards the Strait of Gibraltar; 3. Melochath, mollified by Salust the Historian into Mulucha, and by him placed betwixt the Namidians and the Moors; 4. Malva, the boundary at this day betwixt the Kingdoms of Fesse and Algiers; 5. Phthuth, of more Fame than any, of which more anon: In Cæsariensis, 6. Nasabuth, 7. Sisaris, and Sorbetos: In Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunis, 8. Rubicatus, which issuing out of Mount Thambes, falleth in the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius; 9. Triton, which issuing out of the Hill called Ujaletus, and making the great Fenn called Tritonia Palus, endeth its course also into the Mediterranean; and finally, 10. Bagradas, the greatest in all this Tract, which rising out of Mount Atlas, first runneth towards the East, and then receiving from the Hill called Mamapsarus the addition of another Stream, passeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there ends his Course.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Landmarks, I should now proceed to the Description of the several Provinces hereof, as in other places. But because each part almost hath had for these latter times its particular History, and that it is divided at the present into several Governments, and under the Command of several Princes: I will here lay down so much of the Story of it as concerns the whole, before such division; and afterwards pursue the History and Chorography of the several parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Country was first Peopled by Phut the third Son of Cham: who leaving his Brother Misraim well settled in the Land of Egypt; passed towards the West; and leaving Lebaim his Nephew betwixt him and Misraim, possessed himself of all the rest from the greater Syrtis to the Ocean. Remains of whose name we find in the River Phut (by Ptolemy called Phthuth, with but little difference, save that it favoureth more of the African roughness) near which Josephus findeth a Region called the Country of Phut, a Nation called the Phuteans: seconded herein by S. Hierom, who speaking of this Regio Phutensis in Mauritania, (where the River Phthuth is placed by Ptolemy) voucheth in general terms the testimony of old Writers, both Greek and Latin. So that of this there is no question to be made. Such Nations as descended of this Plantation, shall be hereafter spoke of in their several Provinces. Governed at first by the Chiefs of their several Families; but in the end, reduced under the Command of the Kings of Mauritania and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two first, Natives of this Country, of the Race of Phut: the last descended also of the Seed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan: who on the Conquest of their Country by the Children of Israel, forced to seek new Dwellings, and having store of Ships to transplant themselves and their Families; settled in the Maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa, properly so called. For, that the People of those parts, though lost into other Names and Families, were anciently of a Canaanitish or Phœnician Race, may be made apparent, 1. By the nearness of their Language, the Punick or Phœnician, and old Hebrew Tongue, differing only in the Dialect and Pronunciation. Secondly, by the name Puni, or Phœni, little differing from that of the Phœnices. 3ly, By this Testimony of S. Augustine, who telleth us in the Comment on S. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, begun, but not finished by him; Interrogati Rustici nostri quid sint, respondent, Punici Chammii; that is to say, 'That when any of the Inhabitants of this Country (he himself was one) were asked what they were, they answered, Canaanites. 4ly, We find in Herodotus, how Cambyses had totally Conquer'd Egypt, intending a War against the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it seemeth) of some power:

But

But the Phœnicians, being the only Sea-faring men Cambyses then had, absolutely denied to be employed in that Service; they being sprung from the same Tree that the Carthaginians were. gly, We read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Evagrius Scholasticus) how on two Marble Pillars, situate nigh unto Tingis, or Tangier, there was in the Phœnician Language and Character engraved Nos fugimus à facie Joshuah prædons filii Nave; that is to say, We flee from the face of that R bber Joshuah the Son of Nun. The Settling of this People there, was a great Incitement questionless unto Dido to come thither also: who feared as much danger from her Brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whose hands had been imbrued in the blood of her Husband, as the others did from the Sword of Joshuah. Gathering together all her Treasures, which were very great, accompanied with her Brother Barca, and her Sister Anna, she set sail for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after stood the City of Carthage, she obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigness than she could compass round with an Oxes hide. This the beginning of that City; hence the name of Byrsa, which at first it had. First founded in, or about the year of the World 3070. which was about 144 years after the building of Solomon's Temple, 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the destruction of Troy. By which account (I note this only by the way) it is impossible that Dido, or Eliza (for by both these names we find her called) should ever see the Face of Aeneas, unless it were in Picture, or Imagination; and therefore as impossible she should either fall in love with him, or be got with Child by him, or finally kill her self on her being forsaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a general belief with most sorts of men. Hereunto consenteth Ausonius, who honouring the Statue of his abused Princess with an Epigram of 18 Verses, among others, gives us these four.

*Invida cur in me stimulasti Musa Maronem,
Fingeret ut nostræ damna pudicitia?
Vos magis Historicis (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furtiva deum, concubitusque canunt.*

Why did'st thou stir up Virgil, envious Muse,
Falsly my name and honour to abuse?
Of me let Histories be heard, not those,
Who to the World Jove's thefts and lusts expose.

Credible it is, Aeneas being driven on the Coast of Africk, was by some Prince there courteously entertained, as a Man whose fame had been his Harbinger: but why the story should be fastned on Dido, I see not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her self, gave occasion to the Poet to feign, that it was for the love of Aeneas; whereas, it was indeed to avoid the lust and fury of Jarbas, a potent King of the Getuli, a powerful Nation, neighbouring those Parts of Africa in which Carthage stood, who violently desired to have his Pleasure on her.

Some (says the Learned Vossius) ascribe to Carthage a Circuit of 360 Stadia which makes it equal to Babylon, whereas Strabo gives only that dimension to the Peninsula it was built in. Livy saith it was 22 miles in Circuit when it was destroyed by the Romans, which is but little above the fourth part of the Peninsula: So much it was diminished by length of Time and her Wars in Sicily with the Romans, and other Nations, and also by her Domestick Troubles; by all which it was reduced to what Livy found it at the Desolation of it. I am confident, the greatest height of the Prosperity and Power of this City was before the Trojan Wars, and that Queen Dido only brought thither an Additional Colony, which may be proved by Appianus Alexandrinus, who placeth it 500 years before the Sacking of Troy: And by the Voyage of Hannō without the Streights, which in part is still extant; which was made soon after the Trojan War, to find new Seats for the over-swollen Inhabitants of this City upon the Ocean: So that Carthage was older than the New Tyre, from whence Queen Dido came, and was a Colony of the Ancient Tyre; and the Byrsa she built was only an Addition to the old City. Vossius de magnitudine Urbium, Cap. 11. See Bechart. De Phœnicum Colonis, Lib. 1. Cap. 24. p. 511, 12, 13, 4to. In all Probability it was one of the most ancient Plantations the Canaanites made on this Coast soon after the Conquest of Canaan by Joshuah, though it got not the Reputation of a City till some Ages after, as is usual.

But to proceed, This City thus founded in a Place commodious for Trade and Merchandice, in short time grew exceeding wealthy. And having wealth enough to hire Mercenary Soldiers (of which the Needy Mauritanians and Numidians did afford good store) they Conquered all the Sea Coasts from Cyrene to the Streights of Hercules (now called the Streights of Gibraltar:) and so much also towards the South as was worth the Conquering. Within which space possessed of 300 Cities; grown to such height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongst them the Kings of Numidia and Mauritania were at their devotion: They began to cast their Eyes on Sicily, a wealthy island, lying near unto their Coasts; which questionless they had possessed, if the Romans, envious of their greatness, and fearing their Neighbourhood had not took upon them the defence of the Alamortines, and under that pretence got some footing in it. The end of this War, after many brave Exploits on both sides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Sicily; their abandoning all the Islands betwixt them and Italy, and the payment of 3200 Talents, amounting to about two Millions of Crowns. And such end had the first Punick War, managed for the most part in Sicily. During which time, and the first War there, managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it self was twice invaded, first by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuse, (or so commonly called) and afterwards by Regulus a Roman General, but with no other great success than the Spoil of the Country. The second followed not long after, but the Scene was altered; begun in Spain, prosecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the Son of Amilcar, descended from Barca the Brother of Dido or Eliza: who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increased his Reputation and Experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes into Italy it self; defeated the Armies of the Romans, and slew some of their Consuls: So prosperous in the Battle of Cannæ, where the whole strength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good Fortune, and made use of his Victory, he might within four or five days after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africk from the Forces of Scipio; who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently translated the War to Carthage. The issue was, that on the loss of the Battle of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were necessitated to submit themselves to the will of the Conqueror; that is to say, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their Ships and Gallies, excepting ten; to make no War without leave of the Romans; to pay for the Charges of the War 10000 Talents; and such other extremities. So ended the second Punick War, A.U.C. 602. And the third followed not long after, not any way occasioned by those of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the People of Rome, who would not think themselves safe whilst that City stood; and therefore sent another Scipio to lay Siege unto it. By whom, after a long and stout Resistance, it was at last taken and destroyed. The Treasure which was found in it, notwithstanding their former Losses, and the low estate it was reduced to, besides what was consumed by Fire, and reserved by the Soldiers, amounting to 470000 pound weight of Silver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thousand Pounds of our English Money.

Such end had Carthage, and therewith all the rest of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed against her, and aided the Romans in these Wars; yet they soon found their own Fortunes buried in the self-same Grave. Subverted one after another, as occasion was, they became all subject unto Rome; their Kingdoms and Estates turned to Roman Provinces. Of these were reckoned seven in all, that is to say, 1. Africa Propria, called also Zeugitana, and Proconsularis, 2. Byzacena, 3. Tripolitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cæsariensis, 6. Sitifensis, and 7. Tingitana. Of which the last (I know not why) was laid to the Diocese of Spain, called therefore Hispania Transfretana, Spain on the other side of the Sea, by some elder Writers; the other six made up the Diocese of Africk, subordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio for Italy, who had here his Vicarius or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till subdued by the Vandals, a German Nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb, on the Coast of the Baltick; where now lie the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania. Their memory still retained there in the file of those Princes, who call themselves Duces Vandalorum, and in the Confederacy of the Hanse-Towns, called by some Latin Writers Civitates Vandalicæ. A Nation of great Power and Numbers, (the Burgundians being only a Part of these) one of the Five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11th Year of the Empire of Arcadius and Honorius, they were invited into Gaul by the treacherous Practices of Stilico, Lieutenant of the Western Empire; and after an abode of three years, passed into Spain, together with the Suevi and Alani, their Associates. But after 18 years; the Goths made that place too hot for them also: So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperor's Vice-gerent in Africa; who stomaching to see his Office bestowed on Castinus, an unworthy Man, and his Enemy, betrayed the Country to these Vandals, in the last year of the Life and Reign of Gundericus, an Arian in Religion, as were the rest of the Nation, to which induced by their Neighbourhood and Acquaintance with the Goths: Which Herese as they brought with them into Africk, driving thence all the Orthodox Christians, so they continued in it till their Extirpation.

The Vandal Kings of A F R I C A.

A.C.

- 412 1. Gundericus, who first invaded Gaul, Spain, and Africk, 16.
- 428 2. Genfericus, who at the request of Eudoxia, the Widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy, and sacked the City of Rome, the Spoil whereof for fourteen days he gave to his Soldiers; but at the request of Eudoxia, whom he afterwards married, he did not burnt it. This Eudoxia was Wife to the Western Emperor Valentinian; who having a mind to a Lady of Rome, the Wife of one Maximus, he cunningly slipped the Ring of Maximus off his Finger, and by that token sent for the Lady to the Court, and when she was come, ravished her. To revenge this disgrace, Maximus slew Valentinian, made himself Emperor, and forced Eudoxia to be his Wife. But she stomaching a Match so unequal to her high Birth, and having some incling of her Husband's death sent for Genfericus into Italy. This Genfericus conquered Carthage, and Hippo, and reigned 48 years.
- 476 3. Honorius Son of Genfericus. 7.
- 484 4. Gundebundus, Son to Genzo, the Brother of Honorius. 15.
- 499 5. Transimundus, Brother to Gundebundus. 24.
- 523 6. Hildericus, the Son of Honorius, deposed by
- 530 7. Gilimir, the Son of Genzo, one of the Descendents of Genfericus; overcome by Belisarius a worthy and politick Leader, whom the Emperor Justinian employed in that Service.

And thus ended the Kingdom of the Vandals (having continued in Spain and Africa 146 years) by the Valour of Belisarius. Who after this good Service was employed by Justinian against the Goths, then reigning in Italy; against whom he proceeded very fortunately: But being, on I know not what Envy, called to Constantinople, his Eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his Bread at the Gate of the Temple of St. Sophia. A bad Reward for so good a Servant. But to go on, Justinian having regained Africk, to honour his new Conquest, exempted it from the command of the Prætorio Præfectus of Italy, to which formerly subject; and increasing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Isle of Sardinia, made it a Præfecture of itself: Appointing his Præfectus Prætorio Africa to reside in Carthage, as the chief City of his Charge; which he then also raised to a Consular Province, having in former times been Proconsular only. But long it held not in this state; for in the year

647. the Romans were finally expelled by Hucha a famous Leader; whom Osman, the third Caliph of the Saracens, had designed to this Service. Africk, from that time forwards, reckoned amongst the Provinces of the Saracenic or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing less and less, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers, getting what he could for himself; this Country was distracted in many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at last reduced to four of most consideration: That is to say, the Kingdom of 1. Tunis, 2. Tremesen or Algiers, 3. Fesse, and 4. Morocco. To the Chorography and History whereof we do now proceed; adding hereto in the Fifth place, the Isles of Barbary.

I. T U N I S.

THE Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latin called Regnum Tunitanum) hath on the East, Cyrene; on the West, the Kingdom of Algiers or Tremesen; on the North the Mediterranean; on the South, Mount Atlas. So called from Tunis, the chief City of it; extended all along the Coast of the Mediterranean for the space of 800 miles, or thereabout, but the breadth not answerable.

The Country towards the East, barren and destitute of water; but in the Western parts, sufficiently plentiful of Corn and other Fruits, and generally well set with Trees. The People more patient of labour than the rest of Barbary, and for that cause perhaps more healthy; but questionless of so good constitution, that they live commonly to great age, unless a violent Death prevent them; and are not much afraid of Sicknes, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as some call it) and the Numidia of the Romans; called since Numidia Antiqua, to difference it from the present Numidia, lying on the other side of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countreys, besides those spoken of already, were, 1. Audas, 2. Buzara, 3. Cinna, 4. Dios, or the Hills of Jupiter, 5. Gillius, by some named Gigun, and 6. those called Thizibi. Rivers of most esteem with them, though not much with others, besides those mentioned before. 1. Ampfage, now called Collo, and by some Sar Gemar, which divideth this Kingdom from that of Tremesen; 2. Catuda, 3. Cynphut, issuing from the Hills called Zuchabarnus, and falling into the Sea, not far from Tripolis. Be-

Besides which, there were some great Lakes; the chief whereof, 1. Hipponites, near Mount Cinnia; 2. The Lake of Pallas, or that called Palus Tritonia, where Minerva was said to have shewed her self the Inventress of Spinning and of Oyl, and for that much worshipped by this people; 3. Sylura, another great Lake; but not so famous as the former, because not honoured by a Goddess.

The whole divided by the Romans into these four parts, viz. 1. Africa especially so called, lying on the Sea, from the River Amphage to the lesser Syrtis; 2. Tripolitana, from the lesser Syrtis to the greater; 3. Numidia, lying on the West of Zeugitana, or Africa Propria: And 4. Byzacena, so called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it; the Territory whereof so extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of Corn were sent to Rome in the time of Augustus, and 360 in the time of Domitius Nero, growing on one stalk. But this division being long since worn out of memory, it is divided at the present into the Provinces of 1. Ezzab, 2. Tripolis, 3. Tunis, 4. Constantina, 5. Bugia. This King in the year of the Hegyra 915. (A. C. 537. was overthrown by the Africans on his Southern Borders whose Prince became very famous and Puissant. on this Score Leo Af. p. 27.)

1. EZZAB, is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A small Reigon, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich (the richer, in regard they are free from Tributes:) their wealth not rising from the Commodities of their own Country, which affordeth them little else besides Dates and Olives, but from such Merchandise which they buy of the Venetians, and sell to the Numidians. The richest, those of Mesrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath some, but none of note: the chief of which, 1. Mesrata, 2. Sibeoa, both upon the Sea; of which the first gives name unto that little Province spoken of before. Of more note in former times was Phileni Villa, situate on the greater Syrtis, near the Promontory than called Hippi, but now Cabo de Surta; memorable for the adjoining Altars called Phileni Aræ, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occasion. Some Controversies being grown betwixt those of Carthage and Cyrene, about their Bounds; it was agreed, that two Men at a set hour should be sent out of each City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meet-stone of their several Territories. The Phileni, two Brothers nominated for Carthage, were so quick of foot, that they had gotten a good way into the Country of the Cyrenenses before they were met; wherewith the Cyrenians much enraged, put them to this choice, either to go so much back again, or to die in the place. This last accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Country before their own, for preservation of whose name and honour to succeeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect these Altars.

2. West of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab, made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana. Not much more fruitful than the other, except in Barley, but more commodiously seated in regard of the Sea, which is here more safe for Navigation; the former lying wholly on the greater Syrtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leptis Magna, so called, to distinguish it from another, but of less note, and therefore called Leptis Parva, situate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A Town of so great wealth and Trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Carthaginians. 2. Euphranta, called also Pyrpos Euphranta, from some strong Tower in it on the Western bank of the greater Syrtis. 3. Cintheria; on the Eastern side of the River Cymphus. 4. Cabis, the utmost City of this Province Westward; the same which Ptolemy calls Tacapa, situate at the fall of the River Triton into the lesser Syrtis. This City has a River derived to it from a Lake behind it; and a Port, though of no great use because exposed to all Winds which makes the River though Small, of the great or Value, the Tides filling it and bringing up those Ships it will bear; from this City the Syrtis Minor, is now called Golfo de Caps. It lyes 70 miles from Safucos to the East and two Stations from Cairuan to the South East and 20 miles from TUNIS. South East the Lake is called Tritonis in Ptolemy, and is said to be hot and to cure the Leprosy. Leo Africanus p. 256. makes it a Strong Roman Town &c. 5. Sabratba; and 6. Herua; not else observable, but that together with Leptis Magna they made up that one City, which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7. Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from those three Cities before mentioned. A City of great Name and Riches, till destroyed by the Saracens. By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colleges, and Hospitals; and flourishing in much Wealth and Lustre, it became a Kingdom of it self, but subject to the King of Tunis, till taken by the Genouese with a Fleet of 20 Sail, and by them sold to the King of Fesse. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, it came once more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navarr, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Catholic, the first Monarch of Spain: whose Nephew Charles the 5th. conferred it on the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, then expelled from Rhodes: Whom the Turks under Sinan Basha General of Selimus the Second, dispossessed by force, An. 1551. In 1559 the Christians attempted to regain it without Success. And since that it is Govern'd like a Comon Wealth. It lies over against the Isle of Malta, and is the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg for these African Provinces; and made an usual Retreat for Pyrates, who infest these Seas, and do much mischief to the Coasts of Sicily, Italy, and others of the Christian Countries. The Nubian Geographer (pag. 88) saith, Tripolis is a Strong City, walled with White Stone, and adorned with beautifull Streets. Roger King of Sicily took this City from the Moors in the year of the Hegyra 540 A. C. 1157. who carried the Women into Captivity, and Slew all the Males: From Tripolis to Sort Eastward is 230 miles English, Leo Africanus p. 259. The Old Tripolis was built by the Romans and taken by the Moors in the time of the Calif Homar after a Siege of 6 Months. The New Tripolis is encompassed with an high and beautiful Wall, but of no great Strength; the Houses are better than those of TUNIS, they have none but Cistern Water, the City standing in a Sandy Soil, which yet yeilds Dates, but Corn is dear. To the North it had better Lands, which are now eaten up by the Sea. Between this and Alexandria there is no place of Note, which makes the Venetians Trade with this Port. It was Subject to the King of TUNIS; after this it was taken by the Genouese, and sold to Habdul Mumen King of Fesse, and not long after became free again, and continued under Princes of its own till it was taken by Pedro de Navarra for Ferdinand King of Spain as abovesaid.

3. The Province of TUNIS lying Westward to that of Tripolis, taketh up so much of this Kingdom, as anciently contained the Province of Byzacena; and so much of the Roman Africk, as lyeth on the East of the River called Guadilbarbar, the Hipponites Lacus of the ancient Writers. The Country anciently so fruitful, that it yeilded usually an Increase of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, besides the testimony of approved Authors, the wonderful, if not prodigious Ears of Corn, which before we heard of, may serve sufficiently. Now indigent, and so unprovided of all Grain for the use of their Families, that they are fain to furnish themselves of other places: The people not daring to mature or sow their Land, for fear of the Arabians, who ever and anon fall into these parts, and spoil what they meet with. The Arabians here mentioned are the Wandering Arabs, a Nation that will fix nowhere, but moving from Place to Place with their Wives and Children, Flocks and Herds, prey upon the Substance and Labours of the Settled Moors, who are of the same Nation Language and Religion; which necessitates the Republic of Arglers to keep an Army always on foot against them.

Leo Africanus, pag. 7. 6. saith they were first suffered to pass the Nile in the year of the Hegira 400. by a Caliph of Grand Cairo, because one of his Sultans had rebelled against him, and with drawn Alcaira and almost all Barbary from his Obedience. This People has ever since been the Plague of all the Moors, and perhaps may at last prove the bane of that Nation; as they have ruined all Palestine and Syria in the Turkish Empire, and spread further into the Lesser Asia every year, to the Ruine of the Tillage, Trade, Traveling and Commerce of that Country: They are a lazy, thievish and unprofitable People, depending upon their Cattle and what they can steal for a Subsistence.

Places of most note in it, in the elder times 1. Adrumetum, or Adrumysus, now called Machometta, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena; by consequence, in the times of Christianity, an Archbishop's See: walled and repaired by the Emperor Justinian, and by his Command called Justiniana. 2. Zama, the incamping place of Annibal, before his Battel with Scipio. 3. Nadagara, memorable for the great Battel betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage; not parallel'd since their own times, nor in those before them; in which the great Controversie between those Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day tell unto the Romans: For though Annibal shewed his singular Judgment in ordering his Souldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in Horse, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage, constrained to fight in a place of disadvantage, he could do no marvels: The Romans, with the loss of no more than 1500 of their own Men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians in the Fight and Chase. 4. Salera, the first place took by Scipio, after the landing of his Army. 5. Utica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greatest Ships; much spoken of in the Wars of Carthage, and memorable for the Death of Cato (hence surnamed Utican) who here slew himself, for fear of falling into the Hands of Cæsar. It is now called Biserta. This City, in the Nubian Geographer, p. 87. is called Benexert, who saith it is a Maritim City of very great Strength, but Less than Susa, and that it lyes a days Journey from TUNIS (by Sea.) On the East of it lyes a Lake of the same Name, 16 Miles long and 8 broad, which passeth into the Sea by a Mouth it has; and this serves instead of a Haven to the Town. On the West of the Town the River Bagrada or Megrada falls into the Sea, so that it seems to be naturally a place of Strength, and seated for Trade. From it to Tubarca by Sea is 70 miles, by Land about 58 to the Westward. Leo Africanus pag. 244. saith it is also called Benzart and was founded by the Africans 35 miles from TUNIS, but in his time was meanly Inhabited by a beggarly people, who were Fishers in that Lake mentioned by Nabienus (between which and the River it stands, having the River on the West and the Lake on the East) but the King of TUNIS and the Arabians so vexed the Inhabitants with their Exactions, that it fell into this wretched State pag. 244. In the Map of Carthage, this place is exactly represented by Mercator. 6. Byzacium, seated in a liberal and fruitful Soil, as was shewn before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7. Russinum, made by Cæsar the seat of his War in Africk, against the Sons and Faction of Pompey; as memorable in the times succeeding, for being the Episcopal See of St. Fulgentius. 8. Thystrus, remarkable for the Tragedy of Gordiani: Of which the Father in this City was saluted Emperor by the Souldiers, in hatred to Maximinus then their Emperor, whose Procurator they had slain in a tumult: But his party being dissolved by Capellianus, whom Maximinus sent against him, and his Son killed in the defeat; upon the hearing of the News, he here hanged himself. 9. Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held it out longest for the Mercenaries, in their desperate Rebellion against the Carthaginians; by which the Estate of that great City was in danger of Ruine at the end of the first Punick War. 10. Carthage, once the Lady and Mistress of Africk, called by the Grecians καρχηδών, built by Queen Didio a Tyrian Princess, Anno. Mundi 3725. 72 years after Rome was founded, 874 years before the Birth of our Saviour; situate in the bottom of a safe and capacious Bay, the entrances whereof were very strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, environed with the Sea, except upon one side only, where joyned unto the Land by a narrow Isthmus, about two miles and an half in breadth, in compass 24 miles but measuring by the outward Wall, it was 45. for without the Wall of the City it self there were three Walls more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults underground of 30 foot deep; wherein they had place for 300 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horse, and all their Provender, and Lodging in those out streets for the Riders of the said Horse, and for 20000 Foot besides, which never came within the City to annoy or pester it. On the South-side stood the Castle called Byrsa; which took up two miles and an half in compass: First built by Dido, on that ground which she obtained of the Libians, when she got leave to buy only so much Land of them, as she could compass round about with an Oxes Hide. In that the sumptuous Temple of their ancient Deities, Juno, Appollo, Æsculapius, Belus. On the West side a standing Pool made of the Sea-water, let into it by so narrow a passage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a stately Arsenal, with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the Foundation and Affairs of this mighty City we have spoke already. The Government of it first by Kings, those absolute enough at first, afterwards limited by the Senate; and finally made merely titular by the Power of the people: which unproportionable mixture is much condemned by Aristotle, in the Second of his Politicks. Their Territories, before the second Punick War, when they were at the greatest, extended on the Sea-coasts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syrtis to the Streights, and unto the River Iberus, for the space of 2000 miles in length: their Revenues answerable, and readily brought in, by reason of their infinite Trading. Which made the Roman People think themselves unsafe, whilst this City stood. Resolved on the destruction of it, they sent against it L. Martius, and M. Manlius, their two Consuls, with a puissant Army: To whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the Preservation of the City it self, which was faithfully promised. But when they had withal given up the Sons of their Principal Men to be sent to Rome for Pledges of their future Loyalty; they were told, That a City consisted not in Walls, but in Laws and Government. These, with the Corporation, should remain as formerly; the Town to be removed Ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was resolved to abide the utmost: but they wanted Necessaries for Resistance. That want supplied for want of Iron to make Arms with Gold and Silver; the Houses pulled down to furnish them with Timber to build a Navy; the noble Ladies cutting off the Hair of their Heads, to make Ropes and Cordage, 25000 Women listed to defend the Walls. But the fatal moment being come, a second Scipio is sent thither to dispatch the Work; by whom at last the Town was taken; and for 17 days together consumed with fire: The Queen and multitudes of the People burning themselves in the Temple of Æsculapius, because they would not fall into the Hands of the Romans. Re-edified by Julius Cæsar, and made a Colony, it recovered some part of her former lustre; but so, that her chief Glory was rather to be sought for in her ancient, than her present Fortunes. Populi Romani Colonia, olim Imperii ejus pertinax amula, et prius excidia rerum, quam opa, presentium clarior, was her Character in the times of Pomponius Mela. But in the last estate, accounted for the Metropolis of the Diocese of Africk, the Residence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Bishops under under him in that one Province wherein Carthage stood. Destroyed in the succeeding time by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it revived again, and had the Reputation of a City of no mean Importance, till the year 1270. at what time being forced by the French, under Lewis the 9th. and thereupon deserted by its old Inhabitants, it began to languish, and was at last reduced to nothing but a few scattered Houses, not above five and twenty Shops, one Temple; all the rest a Ruine. So truly said the ancient Poet:

Sic patet exemplis Oppida posse mori.

Thus by Examples do we see,
That Towns may die as well as we.

It sustained 3 sharp Wars with Rome; the first of which lasted 24 years, the Second 18. and had ended in the Ruine of Rome if the Carthaginians had but supplied their General effectually, and in time; the third lasted 3 years, and ended in the Total Subversion of this City, Anno Mundi 3803. Yet it was made a Roman Colony, and rebuilt under the Gracchi 25 years after the Ruine of it, and was, as Vell. Paternulus affirms, the first Colony the Romans sent out of Italy. After this, it flourished greatly. and the Primate of this City had 125. Suffragan Bishops under him, Anno Christi 432. It was taken by the Vandals from which time it was their Royal Seat, till the year 533. it was recovered to the Roman Empire Under Justinian. In 617 it was taken and Sackt by Cosroes King of Persia, who came through Egypt as far as this City. About 632 this City fell into the hands of the Saracens, who made it Tributary only; before the year 684 they took it again, and treated the Inhabitants barbarously. About 690 Justinian 2 recovered it again from them. About 703 the Saracens returned the third time and made a perfect Conquest of it; since which they have enjoyed it to the total Ruine of Christianity. Boniface Earle of Corfica being deserted by his Christian Neighbours, and driven out by the Saracens in 830. landed in Africa between Carthage and Utica, and fought 4 Prosperous Battels against them; by which he forced them to recall their Forces out of Sicily. In 1030. the Pisans took this City from the Saracens, or as others suppose rather TUNIS, ho it is called Carthage; and in the year 1269 it was retaken by Lewis the Ninth. In Camden's Letters, pag. 378. mention is made of Alphonfus Comte de A'la who died under the Walls of Carthage in the Kingdom of Tunis in September 1270. which Words are graven upon his Tomb-stone at St. Denis, the same year the King of France died here (viz.) 24 of August. After his Death they went to the Seige of Tunis, which is called in the Inscription Carthage: Here they had no good Success by reason of a Plague in the Army, but were forced to take Money of the King of Tunis, and return as they came. So that Carthage was then extant, but an open place; and Tunis was called also Carthage, because built out of the Ruines of it. In the Life of St. Lewis, Paulus Emilius saith the Castle was taken before the City, and by the Mariners whilst the Garrison of Carthage made a Sally, so that then it seemed to be a place of some Strength. Yet he calls Tunis a nobler City than Carthage, and the King's Seat. Mr. Eversham an English Man, saw this City in 1586. It was narrow and long; for yet there is to be seen saith he a Street 3 English Miles long. But the rest was then Desolate and uninhabited Hackl. T. 2 page 282.

Of chief note at the present, 1. Tunis, supposed to be the Themisa, or Thumisa of Ptolemy; of small account till the last destruction of Carthage, by whose fall it rose. Situate not far from the Ruines of that famous City, in compass above five miles; and in that compass said to contain 10000 Houholds. Of great Traffick, and well frequented by the Merchants of foreign Nations; chiefly from Genoa and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the Seiges and Successes of two of our English Princes; that namely, of King Edward the First, in his Fathers times; and that of Henry the Fourth, then but Earl of Derby: by both which (though the last served only under the Command of the French) the City was compelled to a Composition; Lewis the 9th commonly called St. Lewis, dying at the First Siege of it. 2. Goleta, a strong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a demy-Iland, divided from the main Land by two narrow passages, but so that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extreme difficulty, by Charles the 5th. Anno. 1535. together with the Turkish Navy riding in the Lake fast by it; but again recovered by the Turks about 40 years alter, An. 1574. 3. Cairean, built by Huchar, who first conquered Africa for the Saracens, in a sandy Desert, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36 from any of the Sea, to secure himself from any Invasion, which the commodiousness of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the First Founder of it, with an admirable Temple raised on Pillars of Marble: who placed also in it a Colledge of Priests, and made it the chief Residence of his Posterity for the space of 170 years, who reigned here under the great Caliphs as the Sultans of Africa. Destroyed by the Arabians, in the 424th. year of their Higra, but regained from them by the King of Morocco, and still of such esteem amongst these Mohammittans, that their chief Men are brought hither to be buried from all parts of the Country, hoping by the Prayers of those Priests to find a shorter way to Heaven, than in other places. This was intended only a Retreat for that Nation to store up the Spoils of Africa; to that end it was surrounded with impregnable Walls: This was in the year of Christ 991. when this General led 80000 Men to the Conquest of Africa; after which he made the Arabs conquer Spain. It is leated in a Sandy Plain which beareth neither Corn nor Trees, but has plenty of Water from Mount Guslet, 12 miles from it. For a great while it was the Seat of the Arabian Learning in Africa. Afterwards it was sackd, and could never recover its ancient splendour, being only now inhabited by Tanners, and subject to the Kings of TUNIS. It can have no trade, but with difficulty; and therefore it is not to be wonder'd it was so easily at once destroyed. A Court may raise, but it is Trade that must preserve A City, when the other is removed.

4. More Westward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, so called from Constantina the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hippomites, now named Guadilbarbar, to Constantine a Mountain bordering on Bugia, which I conceive to be the same with Mons Audus in Ptolemy: The Soyl hereof said to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of Fruits, and great store of Butter. Rubricatus, by Orisius called Ordalio, now Ludog, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Tabraca, on the East; and 2. Hippo Regius, on the Western Bank of Rubricatus; Both Roman Colonies, but this last most famous, in being the Episcopal See of renowned St. Augustine. 3. Bona, the Birth-place of that Father, built by the Romans about a hundred miles from the Sea; but situate in a large Plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25 in breadth: so Rich and Fertile, that the Town flourisheth to this day; adorned with a sumptuous Mosque, and never without the Company of Merchants coming from Genoa, Tunis and the Ile of Zerby, for their Fruits, and Butter. It is seated on the West of TUNIS 216 miles on the South of Mount Jadogh, which was taken by the Saracens, Anno Christi 8165. Nubiensis 88. and seems to have been the last place that held out against the Moors, in their Conquest of Barbary. Mount Jadogh is very high, and affords Mines of Iron. The Sea Charts place Bona 45 Leagues West of TUNIS, and 35 from Sardinia to the South. It was taken by Hutmen the Third, Calif of the Saracens (between 644 and 654.) and utterly destroyed; and what now stands, was built out of the Ruines of Hippo, 2 miles distant. It contains now 300 Families, who live in mean Houses: They are ingenious, and have some Trade for Linnen, which they carry into Numidia; their greatest Want is good Water, for they have none but what falls from Heaven and is reserved served in Cisterns. They have Coral, but know not how to get it, which turns to the Advantage of the Genouese, Leo Africanus pag 241. It is strong, and has a large Haven, Baudrand. 4. Thuburnica, another Colony of the Romans. 5. Sicca Veneria, another Town of the same nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6. Culcua, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moors now called Cucutina, but Constantina by the Latins, and most Nations else, now the chief City of this Province, situate near a Mountain of the same name, near the edge of Bugia. An ancient City, but containing still 8000 Families; many sumptuous Buildings, amongst which a large Temple, two Colledges, and three or four Monasteries; Frequently visited by the Merchants, every Trade having here its peculiar Street; their chief Commodities Wool, Cloth, Silks, Oyl, and some sorts of Fruits, which they exchange for Dates, or Slaves, who are here good Merchandise. The City for the most part fenced about with high craggy Rocks; and where those want, with strong Walls, of a great height, and most exquisite workmanship, declaring the Antiquity of it. A further Argument whereof may be a fair Triumphal Arch, not far from the City, and some Hot Baths, after the manner of the Romans. This City is called by Nubiensis, Constantina. It stands upon the River Ladogh which runs Round the Walls as a Ring. It had only 2 Gates, Mila on the West, and Alcantara to the East: The River having fetch'd a Compass to secure this City, runs to the North. Leo Africanus observeth the Wall is strongest to the North, the rest being secured by Rocks as well as the River, and is the Main for the Numidian Trade. In his time it was under the King of Tunis, but had been before a distinct Kingdom. Leo Afr. pag 238. It is now subject to the City of Argier.

5. Most Westward lieth the Province of BUGIA, extended from Mount Constantine to the River Ampsia, now called Chello, or Sef-Gemar: which, with so much of Constantina, as lieth on the West side of Rubricatus, made up that province which the Romans called by the name of Numidia. The length hereof 150 miles on the Mediterranean, the breadth not above half so much. Narrower than Mauritania, as is said by Pliny; Sed ditior & magis culta, but the richer of the two, and the better peopled. The Country of a fat Soyl, plentiful both in Fruits and Corn, but most fit for Pasturage, to which the people were so addicted, that many of them cared not for building Houses, (instead whereof they used the Hold of a ship with the Keel turned upwards) but removed from one place to another, as their Pastures failed them. From thence called Nomades by the Grecians, ἀπό τοῦ νέμεν, signifying to feed or graze. The people of good metal, swift of Foot, and well skilled in Horsemanship: but better in the Onset, & to give a Charge, than in standing to it; such as the wild Arabians are now said to be. So here was anciently a people like to them, but fixed I suppose before they entered Africa, to renew that sort or way of Living, which is one of the worst Mankind can betake them to.

Chief Towns hereof (besides Thuburnica, Culena, Bona, Hippo, spoken of before, belonging to Numidia though not to Bugia) 1. Bugia, built by the Romans on the side of a lofty Mountain looking into the Sea; by some conceived to have been the Thebuacha of Ptolemy, now the chief City of this Province, adorned with many sumptuous Mosques, some Monasteries and Colledges for Students in the Law of Mahomet, and many fair Hospitals for relief of the Poor; fenced also with a strong Castle. Secured by strength whereof, and growing rich by the fruitfulness of the situation, the Citizens began to grow proud and wanton, working much mischief to the Spaniards by their Gallies, which they had at Sea; till taught more modestly by Peter of Newarr a Spanish Captain An. 1508. by whom the Town was taken, and the people plundered. This City was retaken by the Turks and is now under the Algerines. In 1671. Sr. Edward Sprague, an English Admiral, took and burnt under the Guns of this Castle 9 of the best Men of War the Algerines had; who thereupon cut of the Head of their King, and made a Peace with us much to the Advantage of England. Geo Nubiensis p. 82. saith it is seated upon a Rock at the foot of Mount Amesum to the South; That it was employed for an Arsenal to build Ships, having plenty of Timber and Mines of Iron. He calls it Begiaia. The Inhabitants were always at War with the Spaniards, who took it at last without any Resistance, and sacked it 6 years after. Barbarossa endeavoured to retake the Forts the Spaniards had built in 1508 but was beaten off with great Loss. 2. Chello, upon the Sea-side, the Chollopbus Magna (as I take it) of Ptolemy; reported for a wealthy City. 3. Nicaus, seated towards Mount Ailas in a pleasant and delightful Country: which though interspersed with many Hills, yet being those Hills are clothed with Woods, yield them good store of Goats and Horses, and feed the Vallies with fresh Springs, which do issue from them; they rather add than detract any thing from the pleasures of it. 4. Madaura, by some called Madurus, the birth-place of Apuleius. 5. Tunudromum, another of the Roman Colonies. 6. Cirta, or Cirta Julia, the Metropolis of Numidia, when a Roman Province, and formerly the Seat-Royal of Syphax King of the Maslyli, within whose Country it was reckoned in former times, though afterwards laid unto this Province. Situate near the mouth of the River Amsaga, and memorable for the Tragedy of Sophonisby, the Daughter of Ajdrubal of Carthage; a Lady of most exquisite beauty, and yet carried more Charms in her Tongue than in her Eyes. Espoused first unto Masinissa King of the Numidians, but after, upon the Reason of State, married unto Syphax; who being took Prisoner by his Rival, and brought to Cirta, the Lady upon hopes of liberty and honour both, bestowed her self on her first Lover: But Scipio fearing lest that marriage might withdraw Masinissa from the Roman party, caused the Lady to be seized on; which Masinissa not being otherwise able to prevent or remedy, sent her a Cup of Poyson, which she drank, and died.

Of these Numidians there is much mention in the Stories of Rome and Carthage; employed by this last City in all their Wars, both in Spain, Italy, and Sicily. Siding at last with Scipio against that State, they did good Service to the Romans in the weakning and destruction of that City, whose fall they did not long survive: First conquered in the War of Jugurth; after the death of Juba, made a Roman Province. Their Kings, as far as I can trace the succession of them, follow in this Order.

The Kings of the NUMIDIANS.

1. Gala the Father of Masinissa.
2. Desulces, the Brother of Gala, according to the Law of the Country, which gave the Crown unto the Brother, not the Son of the former King, (like the Law of Tanistry in Ireland) succeeded Gala.
3. N. N. a Son of Desulces, in the absence of Masinissa then serving under the Carthaginians in the Wars of Spain, possessed himself of the Throne: Slain not long after by a Rebel.
4. Masinissa, Son of Gala, recovered the Kingdom of his Father; but again outed by Syphax and the Carthaginians, betwixt whom and Masinissa, touching Sophonisba there was deadly Feud. Aided by Scipio and the Romans, with whom associated against Carthage, he not only recovered his own Kingdom, but was gratified with the greatest part of that which belonged to Syphax. A professed Enemy to Carthage, (the final ruine whereof he lived to see) till the time of his death, being then Ninety years of age.
5. Micipsa, the Son of Masinissa, of whom nothing memorable.
6. Jugurth, the Son of Mastanabalus, one of the brethren of Micipsa, having wickedly made away the two Sons of Micipsa, usurped the Kingdom, and manifestly withstood the Romans, whose attempts sometimes by force, sometimes by subtilty, but chiefly by Money and Bribes, he overthrew and made frustrate: Et fuit in Jugurtha (saith Florus) quod post Annibalem timeretur. At last being broken by Metellus, vanquished by Marius, and by Bocchus delivered into the hands of Sylla, he was by Marius led in Triumph to Rome. In this Triumph was carried 3700 pound weight in Gold; in Silver wedges, 5775 pounds weight; and in ready Coin, 28900 Crowns: it being the custom of the Romans in their Triumphs, to have carried before them all the Riches and Money, which they had brought out of the conquered Countries, to put into the common Treasury.
7. Hiempsal, Son of Bocchus King of Mauritania, gratified for his Father's Treachery in betraying Jugurth, with the Kingdom of Numidia; Relieved Marius in his Exile.
8. Hiarbas, another of the Maurian Faction, preferred to the Numidian Crown, but vanquished and deprived by Pompey, at that time one of Sylla's Captains.
9. Hiempsal II. preferred by Pompey to this Kingdom.
10. Juba, the Son of Hiempsal the Second, who siding with Pompey against Caesar in the Civil Wars, gave a great Overthrow to Curio, one of Caesar's Lieutenants; Curio himself slain, his whole Army routed, such as were taken prisoners murdered in cold Blood. But being discomfited by Caesar, after Pompey's death, Numidia was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

Thus by the fall of Carthage, and the death of Juba, came the whole Provinces of Africa Propria, and Numidia (containing the now Kingdom of Tunis) into the power of the Romans. Of which, the Nations of most Note were the Nigritimi, on the Eastern parts of the Mediterranean, the Machini, near the lesser Syrtis; the Lybia-Phanices, and Mudini, bordering upon Carthage; the Jonii, Nuvatrae and Certesii, taking up all the Sea-coasts of Numidia. Such as inhabited more Southwards on the back of these, not so much considerable; None of them to be staid upon, but the Lybia-Phanices, a mixt People of the old Libyans, and new Phanicians, as the Liby-Egyptii were of the said Libyans and the neighbouring Egyptians. The memory of all of them so defaced by the violent Inundation of the Arabians, that there is scarce any tract, or footsteps in all the Country. When conquered by the Saracens, they were at first subject to the Caliph of Grand Cairo, and after that to the Sultan of Cairo; after the Spoil whereof by the Arabians, subdued by Abdul Mumen King of Morocco, and by him added to that Kingdom. In the distractions of that State, made a peculiar Kingdom by some one of the Relicts of the Stock of the Almoheads, who took unto himself the Title of King of Tunis, that City being his Chief Seat. By him transmitted unto his Posterity, till the days of our Grandfathers; when Muleasses, one of the youngest Sons of Sultan Mahomet, having first murdered Maimun his eldest Brother, and put out the Eyes of 20 of the rest, usurped the Sovereignty. Rafetta, the only one of those Princes who escaped this Massacre, upheld a while by the Arabians, and by them deserted, was slain to put himself into the hand of Barbarossa King of Algiers, and Admiral of the Turkish Navy; by whom he was carried to Constantinople, and so presented to Solyman, who under colour of restoring him to the Throne of his Fathers, conquered that Kingdom for himself; outed thereof not long after by Charles the Fifth, appearing in favour of Muleasses. An. 1535. But the Tyrant did not long enjoy his gotten Sovereignty, when his Eyes were also put out by his own Son Amyda, and so committed to close Prison: Nor did Amyda enjoy it long, dispossessed by Abdamelech his Father's Brother. To Abdamelech Muomet his Son succeeded; who being a Child, and his Affairs ill governed by his Tutors, and other Ministers of State, gave opportunity to Amyda to regain the Kingdom, During which broils the Turks again recovered footing, possessed themselves of a great part of the Country, and forced Amyda into exile, who flying to Don John of Austria, then newly victorious at Lepanto, invaded him to the Conquest of Tunis, but he got little by the bargain; for Don John having subdued the Kingdom, conferred the same on Mahomet the Brother of Amyda, and carried Amyda in Bonds to the Isle of Sicily, where he after died. Nor did Mahomet enjoy it long; for the next year the Turks besieged and took the City of Tunis, with the strong Fort of Gazetta, with all the other Forts and Holds of that Kingdom, made ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire; the poor King being carried Prisoner to Constantinople at the end of the War, which was in the year 1574. and the last of Selimus the Second. This Kingdom is at this day subject to the Republick of Algiers; but when, or how Conquer'd, I cannot Assign Till the year 1642. that State was subject to the Port, or Ottoman Family, and then freed it self; and as I suppose, took Possession of this Province.

2. TREMESEN, or ALGIERS.

THE Kingdom of TREMESEN is bounded on the East with the River Amfaga, (now called Major) by which parted from the Kingdom of Tunis; on the West, with the Kingdom of Fesse and Morocco, from which separated by the River of Malutha, or Malwa. So called from Tremesen, or Teleusine, the chief City of it. Called also the Kingdom of Algiers, from the City so named, sometimes the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

In the flourish of the Roman Empire, it had the name of Mauritania Caesariensis: Mauritania, because of the Kingdom of Juba King of Mauritania, of which more anon; Caesariensis from Casarea the chief City of it, as that so called in honour of Augustus Caesar, on whom the King hereof depended. More anciently the Kingdom of the Masæsyli, one of the most powerful Nations in all this Tract, over whom Reigned Syphax before-mentioned, called therefore by Strabo, Masæsyliæ, with good Propriety; and corruptedly, Massyliæ.

The

The Kingdom extended in length from East to West, for the space of 380 Miles, but of breadth not answerable; is generally of the same nature (as to the Soil and Air) with the rest of Barbary: sufficiently fruitful towards the Sea, more barren and uncomfortable in the Southern parts; but meanly peopled, by reason of the continual spoils made by the Arabians, who possess the Desarts; and the Cities of it much wasted by continual Wars. Nor have the People any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of these Africans also.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Guagya, inconveniently seated, as paying their accustomed Tributes to the King of Tremesen, their natural Prince; and contribution to the Arabians, who are here so numerous and powerful, that the Kings themselves of this small Kingdom were fain to buy their Peace of them at excessive Rates. 2. Tigedent, sometimes famous, and abounding with Men of Learning; now almost forsaken, by reason of the ill neighborhood of these Arabians. 3. Tebocrit, inhabited for the most part by Weavers. 4. Bresch, the Inhabitants whereof use to paint a black Cross on their Cheek, and another on the Palm of their Hands: The reason of which Custom they are ignorant of, but some conceive it to be a remembrance of their Christianity. 5. Ned-Roma built, as the People do pretend, by the ancient Romans, as an Epitome, or Abridgment of that mighty City, to which it is said to have some resemblance; and that imported by the name, which signifieth in their Language, Like to Rome, perhaps the same which Ptolemy calleth Novum Oppidum, or the New Town, then a Roman Colony. 6. Batha, once a great City, since decay'd by Wars. 7. Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, said to contain no fewer than 10000 Families. Powerful at Sea, and much infesting with their Gallies the Coasts of Spain; till taken for Ferdinand the Catholick by Peter of Navarr, An. 1506. It was taken in the year 1509. by the Cardinal of Ximenes for the Spaniards, in whose hands it still is. Natalis Comes, upon occasion of a Siege which it suffered in the year 1556. from the Moors, saith its ancient Name was Buyza, Populous and great, seated over against Barcelona in Spain (but it lies above three Degrees more to the West) and not far from the Straights of Gibraltar (that is 300 Italian Miles to the East) that it lies extended on the shoars of the Mediterranean Sea. There was but 2000 Men in Garrison then in the Town, and they were attacked by 12000 Turks, yet they defended the Place with that Bravery, that the Turk was forced to draw off with great Shame and Loss. In 1687. the Spaniards sent thither a greater Garrison than formerly it had. Nubienfis p. 80. placeth it three Stations from Tremesen to the North; he calls it Vabaran, and says it stood near the Sea, and fortified with strong earthen Works (Propugnacula Terrea) that had spacious Streets, many Trades, and much Merchandise, and stood over against Almaria in Spain, the Sea between them being two Days Journey (35 Leagues) and in his time the Sea-coasts of Spain had their Corn from hence; at its Gates the Harbour was unsafe, but two Miles off it had both a large and safe one; and that a River from the Continent gave Drink to the Inhabitants. Thus far Nub p. 80. It stands, saith he, p. 81. 204 Miles from Temes (30 Leagues Eng.) to the West. Leo Africanus, p. 225. calls it a great and populous Town that had once 6000 Families, and was built by the Africans. Its distance from Tremesen is 140 Miles, well built as to its Mosques, Colledges, Baths, Inns, &c. encompassed with high and strong Walls, a Plain on one side, and Mountains on the other: it Trades with Venice, Genova and Spain, and the Inhabitants were free from the King of Tremesen, and lived much by Piracy, which filled them with Christian Slaves: This provoked Ferdinand King of Spain to send an Army against it, who took it A. C. 1597. with great slaughter of the Inhabitants; the King sending no Relief: Since which time Peopled and Possessed by the Spaniards: in vain besieged by the Turks, An. 1562. 8. Musalquiver, a fair and spacious Haven on the same Sea also, and taken by the said Peter of Navarr about the same time. 9. Haresgol, in former times of much esteem amongst the Moors; but being destroyed by the King or Sultan of Castroan, it bequeathed its Greatness unto Tremesen, which after grew into Renown. 10. Tremesen, once Adorned with many beautiful Mosques, and five sumptuous Colledges, curiously wrought with Mosaick work: so Populous, that there were reckoned in it 16000 Families: and so well fortified, that it held out seven Years against Joseph the Great King of Fesse: nor taken after that, though they were very much weakened by Abulhasen, or Albobacen his Son and Successor, under a Siege of 30 Months. By those, and the succeeding Troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in Strength and Beauty. The Nubian Geographer saith, it stands nine Days Journey from Fesse, and is compassed with very strong and antient Walls: the City was parted also within by a Wall. On the South, at some distance stood Mount Sachratain, and out of it sprung a Fountain which turned some Mills. Upon this River stand Monasteries, Oratories, and other Religious Houses, &c. 11. Siga, an African City, and a Roman Colony; the retiring place of Syphax and Bocchus, sometimes Kings of this Country. 12. Arsenaria, another Colony of the Romans. 13. Jol, the Seat-Royal of King Bocchus, after such time as this Country was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth: called afterwards Cæsarea, in Honour of Augustus Cæsar, whose Feudatories the Kings hereof were then accounted, or as some say, in honour of Claudius Cæsar; by whom made a Colony: the Metropolis of it also when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Cæsariensis. Situate in, or near the place where Oran now stands, which seemeth to have risen out of the Ruins of it. 14. Saldie, a Roman Colony, also, out of whose Ruins rose Algiers. 15. Algiers, by the Arabians called Gezeir, now the chief City of this Kingdom, situate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven to it; but neither great, nor safe from the North Winds, which do much annoy it. The Buildings very beautiful; the publick Inns, Baths, and Mosques, exceeding sumptuous; every Trade having a several Place, or Street by it self: but that which is the greatest grace of it, is the situation of the Houses standing in even Streets one above another, upon the rising of a steep Hill; so that the Windows of one Street, or row of Housing, do all along over-look the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a most pleasant prospect. A City, not so large as strong; and not so strong as famous. Famous for being the receptacle and retreating place of the Turkish Pyrates, who domineer so infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great damage of the Merchants of all Nations that frequent those Seas. Famous also for the Shipwrack which Charles the Fifth here suffered who besieged this Town, lost in the Haven of it at one Tempest, besides an infinite number of Karvals and small Boats, divers strong Gallies, 140 Ships, a great many excellent pieces of Ordnance; such a number of gallant Horses, that in Spain the Race of Horses for Service had like to have been lost for ever; and above half his Men. It long enjoyed the benefit of Proprietary Princes, (but Homagers, or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremesen,) till such time as Selimes and Mabomet, falling out, made the first, and that an irreparable Breach in the Government. So Selimes to strengthen his side, implored the aid of Hairaccius Barbarossa, a noble Pyrate; who taking his best advantage, slew the disjointed Brethren, and settled himself in the Kingdom: which he had scarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Barbarossa his Brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Rugia, and was so renowned for Martial Prowess, that Solyman the Magnificent made him Lord High-Admiral of his Fleet: Which Office, when to the prejudice of Christendom he had fortunately, and for long time undergone, he died lamented, and made the Turk the Heir of his Kingdom; the Kingdom of Tremesen being made subject to the the Turk much about that time. This Kingdom and City continued subject to the Turks to the year 1642. and then taking the opportunity of their Bassas's absence, they slew him, and Revolted from the Turks, the Port has since sent them Bassas, and they receive them, but they sit not in the Divan (Senate) nor have any Authority over them: Thereupon they chose a Dey or Governor. Between 1642, and 1672 there were Thirteen of these Officers, and but one had died in his Bed, and all the rest were murder'd by the Tumults of this City: He has under him a Lieutenant without the City for the Commanding the Land Army, and an Aga within for the Government of the City. The Divan formerly 1000 Persons is now reduced to 48. which has made the Government much more easie and peaceable. In 1688 Lewis 14. of France sent 48 Gallies to Bomb this City, which more provoked than hurt the Inhabitants: and the Year after he made a dishonourable Peace with them. Marmolinus, in his Africa, observeth, That this is now the richest and most splendid City in Africa; it having many noble splendid Palaces, that were built by the Admirals and other Renegado Christians, who have grown Rich by their Pyracies. This Author wrote about 1636. I suspect the Case is much alter'd, the English having twice destroyed their Fleets since that time. The English or Dutch might easily Ruine this City, but it's said to be their Interest to preserve it, because thereby they have a great share in the Trade of the Mediterranean Seas, which would be taken from them by the small Vessels of other Nations, if this Town by preying upon their Ships did not prevent it. 16. Tetuan. And 17. Sargel, situate Westward of Algiers; Towns of Trade and Pyracies.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpeditani, Tiladusi, Ibalussi, Malchubii, Maccurebi, Cittiva, and others of as little note; the most predominant Nation being the Musæyli, over whom (and in that over all the rest) Reigned Syphax, spoken of before, unfortunately famous for his Tragical Love to Sophonisba: For whose sake, siding with the Carthaginians against the Romans, he was vanquished and sent Prisoner to Rome; his Kingdom given to Masiniussa King of the Numidians, continued in his Line till the death of Jugurth, and then bestowed upon the Kings of Mauritania; part of whose Kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperor Claudius; won from the Romans by the Vandals, and then by the Saracens; it followed the fortunes of these last, while they stood and flourished: But growing into many Distractions, and every Sultan, or Provincial Governor shifting for himself, it became a Kingdom, under the Style and Title of the Kingdom of Tremesen. The Majesty of it much impaired by Abulbasen or Albobaecen King of Fesse, who brought it not long after under his Command. Recovering after some short time its former Liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and so continued till the time of Abuchemen: who incurring the Hatred of his People, because by his supine Neglect the Spaniards had surprized and taken Oran and Musalquivet, their two best Havens, made an easie passage for his Brother Abuzeiden to the Regal Diadem. Abuzeiden scarce well settled, lost it to Haïradine Barbarossa, An. 1515. and he to Charles the Fifth, by whom Abuchemen was restored, becoming Homager and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his Successor Abdulla, weary of the Spanish Servitude, put himself under the Protection of Solyman the Magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his decease, he left the possession of his Kingdom also: ever since subject to the Turks: whose Beglerbeg, or Supreme Officer for these African Provinces, resides for the most part in Algiers, and hath 4000 Timariots under his Command, which continued to 1640, as is said above.

3. F E S S E and M O R O C C O.

These Kingdoms I have joined in Title, because united for the most part in the Story and Affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Estate under the Ariffs of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of History, though of a different Consideration in the way of Chorography.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly so called; divided anciently into Tingitana and Sutisoris; Cæsarica being naturally a Numidian Region, the Musæyli and the rest of the Inhabitants of it, of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accounted any part thereof till the death of Jugurth, when given to Bocchus King hereof in regard of his Treason, for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, when that name was first given; the word Tania, signifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britania, Lybætanica, Aquitania, and perhaps some others; and the name of Mauri given them αὐτὸς ὁ σκῆνος which signifieth amongst other things obscure or black, by reason of the darkness of their Complexion. Accounted in these times an hardy, but a bloody People; careless of life, ready of Death; implacable if once offended. Their thirst of Revenge not to be quenched but by Blood. genus hominum sumpsit natura cæcis aversum, nilque non facile audens, & desperatus simile, contra vitam, & mortis & periculum. A Character given of them in Herodian's time; and it holds good still, notwithstanding the intermixture of Gæths and Saracens incorporated into the same Nation with them, and passing by the same name to the Writers of the middle time. Post hæc Mauri totam Hispaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam, &c. Dominos se emanciparunt, as my Author hath it; where by Mauri we are to understand the Saracens, which came out of Africa.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1. Atlas minor, so called, to difference it from the greater Mountain of that name, from which it is seven degrees more North, but shooteth as that doth with a Point or Promontory into the main Atlantick Ocean, on the South of Salé. 2. Durdus extended also into Cæsarica. 3. Diur. 4. Plana, of which little memorable. Rivers of most note, 1. Salé. 2. Salur. 3. Zilia. 4. Phath. 5. Diur. 6. Cusa; all falling into the Atlantick: The last the same, as I conjecture, which our Modern Writers call Ommirabli. And for the rest, we must find amongst them. 1. Sifemel. 2. Tefsa. 3. Niffis, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans were the Metagonitæ, near the Straits, giving name unto Metagonitis an adjoining Promontory, the Succæ, Carbia, Nétiæres, Vacuatæ, Volæ; and on the East side the Maurusii: These last participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Maurusii: The Etymology as before. Their descent originally from Phut, the Son of Cham: whose memory preserved here in the River Phat. To that, the coming of the Canaanites, of the same extraction, served but as an Accessory. From those two Fountains sprang the whole Nation of the Mauri, Governed by Kings: the most considerable of which, when first known to the Romans, was that Bocchus, who betrayed Jugurth his Friend and Son-in-law, into the hands of the Romans; gratified for that Treachery with the Country of the Musæyli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hompfal one of his Sons was not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole Estates of Bocchus, Syphax and Masiniussa, united by this means in the Person of Juba, one of his Posterity, the most potent Prince of all these parts: who falling in the African War against Julius Cæsar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Conf- pus Salustius, the Roman Historian, being made the first Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Amsagus, he gave to Bocchus and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but descended of the old Regal Family. Bogud unluckily taking part with Mark Antony against Augustus, was by Bocchus, who declared for the other side, dispossessed of his part, (that which now makes the Kingdom of Fesse) in which confirmed for his good Service, by the Conquering Emperour. Juba, the Son of the former Juba, grown Famous for his Eminent Learning, was of a Prisoner made a Prince: invested after the death of Bocchus in all the Dominions of his Father, except Numidia: and by the Bounty of Augustus, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the Marriage of Selene, Daughter of Anthony and Cleopatra. After whose death, and the death of Ptolemy their Son, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the Patrimony of the Roman Empire: divided into two Provinces, viz. Cæsariensis, betwixt the two Rivers Malva and Amsaga, now the Kingdom of Tremesen; and Tingitana, from the River Malva to the Western Ocean. This last divided into Tingitana and Sitifensis, (the River now called Omirabili being the Boundary betwixt them) by the Emperour Constantine: who leaving Sitifensis to the Diocese of Africk, laid Tingitana (why, I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens, they became Members of those Empires; in the declining of the last, divided into the two Kingdoms of Fesse and Morocco, to the Description and History whereof, we now proceed.

3. MOROCCO.

THE Kingdom of MOROCCO hath on the East, the River Malva, by which parted from Tremesen; on the West, the Atlantick Ocean; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, the Kingdom of Fesse, so called from Morocco, the chief City of it, in former times known by the name of Mauritania Sitifensis, from Sitiphis, in those times the principal City, as Procopius telleth us.

The Country said to be fruitful of all things necessary to life, pleasing to the sight, and sweet to smell to; particularly, well stored with Grain and Pulse, plentiful of Oyl, Honey, and Sugar, liberally furnished with Dates, Grapes, Figs, Apples, Pears, and all sorts of Fruits: exceedingly well stocked with Cattel, but with Goats especially; whose Skins afford a very excellent kind of Cordovan Leather, and their Fleece Materials for the finest Chamlets, which are here made in most of their Cities. The whole Country divided commonly into these seven parts viz. 1. Guzzula, 2. Sus, 3. Morocco, specially so called. 4. Hea, 5. Hascora, 6. Duccala, and 7. Tedles.

1. GUZZULA, the most Southern Province of this Kingdom, hath on the East, some part of Tremesen; on the West, Sus or Susa, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains called Ilda; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, part of the Territory of Morocco, and the rest of Susa. The Country rich in Mines of Brass, Iron and other Metals; of which are made many Ustensils for domestick uses, exported hence into other places; for which they return Linen Wollen and Horses.

The People barbarous and rude, not easily acknowledging Subjection to the Kings of Morocco, and at continual Wars amongst themselves, except only for two months in the year; which being the time of their publick Marts, and then much visited with Strangers from other Countries, they lay aside their private quarrels, and cheerfully entertain such Merchants as repair unto them. They have neither King nor Governour, but every one is his own Captain and Commander, and consequently ever imbroil'd with Wars at home. Once a year they have a Fair, where Merchants of all Countries do resort: and during this time they make a Truce, and appoint Officers to do Justice and keep the Peace. Leo Africanus p. 80. Tho' this was the State of the Country in that time, yet it may be presumed very different now and perfectly conquered by the Kings of Fesse who were then beginning to do it. He wrote in 1515. or thereabouts. Walled Towns here are not any, but some very great Villages: the chief where of, 1. Guzzula, on the Northern bank of the River Sus, whence the name of the Province. 2. Tagressa, not far off, but on the other side of the water towards the foot of Mount Atlas, 3. Tedza, inclining towards the borders of Morocco. Of these nothing memorable.

2. West of Guzzula lieth the Province of SUS or SUSA, so called from the River Sus, (with which well watered) or giving name to it. Rich in Gold Mines, the cause of continual Wars amongst the people: well stored with Sugar-Canes, which the Inhabitants know neither how to boil or purifie; and on the Sea-shores furnished with great plenty of Amber, bought by the Portugals of the people at an easie rate. Nubiensis p. 75 saith it hath plenty of excellent Fruits. Between Taradant and Teyuying, its 2 greatest Towns, is a days Journey through Vineyards, Gardens, and Orchards, which makes it very pleasant. To the North by a Ledge of Mountains it is divided from Morocco, which extend from the Atlantick Ocean to Mount Atlas, and are called Serra de Quique. Taradante is called Sus. In the Nubian Geographer's time it was independent and distinct. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Cape D'Aguer, on a Promontory so called; a place of so great Importance to the Portugals, that the taking of it by Mahomet, then King of Sus, (after of Morocco also) made them quit all the Forts which they had in this Country. 2. Tagavast, a rich and wealthy Town; the greatest in the Province, and situate in a large Plain near the foot of Mount Atlas; containing 8000 Families, walled with Stone, seated 60 miles from the Ocean to the East, and 50 from the Atlas South; built by the Africans. The Inhabitants are at War among themselves and employ the Wild Arabs (their mortal Enemies) as their Auxiliaries. Corn and Cattle is plenty, but the Wool coarse; yet they make Cloth of it, and send it to Tombuto. 3. Teijent, situate in a spacious Plain also, but on the Banks of the River Sus, divided into three parts, each a mile from the other, which joynted together, make the exact figure of a Triangle. This City was built by the Africans; it yeilds plenty of Corn, Grapes, Sugar, Figs, Peaches, and Gold: it contains 4000 Families, who only trade with Gold and Iron. Their Leather is excellent. The Inhabitants are rude, fierce and warlike. In Civil Cases they have Judges; but Murder is revenged by Conspiracies against the Murderer, or Banishment for 7 years. The Jews here are many, and pay no Tribute. It is seated on the Sus, South of Messa. 4. Messa, or Massa, seated at the Influx of the said River on the Promontory called Cape Gillon; three Towns in one; not much the better for the Sea, and but ill befriended by the Land; as seated in a barren and unpleasing Soil; remarkable for a fair Temple, the Beams and Rafter of which are made of the Bones of Whales, which usually are left dead on the shore. 5. Taradant, a large Town built by the Africans, before the conquest of this Country by the Goths or Saracens: The Residence of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Fesse, when the Lords of this Kingdom; but more enriched of late by the Merchants of France and England, who have here a Staple for their Sugars. By this Commerce, the people made more civil than in other parts of this Province: The whole number of them thought to amount to 3000 Families. This City is governed as a Common Wealth by its Nobility, who govern by turns 6 Months. The Inhabitants being at War with the wandering Arabs, who inhabit the Deserts on the South side of their City, in the year of the Hegyra 920. they yeilded to the Seriffo, or Prince of Morocco, for Protection. This Seriffo was a Mahometan Prince, set up by the Inhabitants of SUS about that time against the Portuguese, having before been their General. From Tedza to Taradant is 30 miles to the West. Leo Africanus. 6. Tedza, more within the Land, bigger than Taradant, but less wealthy; the chief Ornament of of it being a fair Mahometan Temple, liberally furnished with Priests and Readers of that Law, at the common charge. Not far from hence the Hill Anchisa, where it snoweth at all seasons of the year, and yet the people go extream thin in the sharpest Winter. Nothing else memorable of this Province, but that a little before the Xeriff made himself King of Morocco, it had the Title of a Kingdom; and gave the Title of King to Mahomet the Second Xeriff, made King of Taradant, or Sus, before he dispossessed his Brother of the Crown of Morocco.

3. Northward of Sus, lieth the Province of MOROCO, specially so called, the most fruitfull and best peopled Part of Barbary; not much unlike to Lombardy in wealth and pleasures; the very Hills thereof as fruitful as the Valleys in other places. To which Fertility of the Soil, the Rivers, 1. Tensift, and 2. Asifnuad, give no small advantage. This River Tensift, saith Nubieusis, rising from that part of the Atlas, and running West, takes in the Niftis, the Sifibuel, and the Aghmat; passeth within 3 miles of Morocco; 100 miles beneath which, it falls into the Atlantick Ocean. Leo Africanus, p. 326. saith, near Morocco there is a Bridge over this River of 15 Arches, thought the best of the African Buildings: But Abu Dubius last Calif of Morocco, broke three of the Arches, to hinder the Passage of Jacob the First, King of Effe, but it had not that effect. This is thought the Asama of Ptolemy, though much defaced by frequent Incursions of the Portugals, who have extreamly spoiled this Country. Places of most observation in it, 1. Delgumaba, built upon a very high Mountain, and environed with many other Hills; at the foot whereof the Fountain of Asifnuad. 2. Elgiumba, a small, but ancient Town on the River Siffewa. 3. Tefrast, a small Town upon Asifnuad. 4. Imizimi, situate on a Rock, spacious and seated near the entrance of a narrow way leading into Guzzula. 5. Tenezze, an old Town, but very well fortified. 6. Agnet, upon the River Tensift; all ruined, except this Fort, and some scattered houses: Formerly second unto none but Morocco (from which distant 24 miles) the Hills and Valleys about it adorned with pleasant Gardens, fruitful Vineyards, a fair River, and Fields so fertile, that they yield a fifty-fold increase. 7. Secfina, where they have snow at all times in the year. 8. Tennella, an Heresical Town, differing in Opinion from the rest of the Mahometan Sects; and so well grounded in their Tenets, that they challenge all their Opposites to a Disputation. 9. Hantera, very full of Jews. 10. Morocco, the principal of this Province, and of all the Kingdom, situate in or near the place where once stood the Bocanum Hemerum of Ptolemy. Once reckoned amongst the greatest Cities of the World, at what time it was said to contain 100000 Families: Since so defaced and wasted by the Depredations of the Arabians, and the Removal of the Seat-Royal to Fesse, when that Kingdom was in the Ascendant, that it is hardly a third part so great as formerly. The Founder of it, Joseph, surnamed Tefsinus, the second King of the House of the Amoravides; but much enlarged and beautified by Abdul-Mumen, one of his Successors. The principal Buildings in it, are the Church and the Castle: The Church or Mosque, one of the greatest in the World, adorned with many sumptuous Pillars brought out of Spain; when the Moors had the possession of that Country; and beautified with a stately Steeple, in compass at the bottom an hundred yards, and of so great height, that the Hills of Azati (one of the Branches of the lesser Atlas) being 130 miles distant, may be thence easily discerned: The Castle very large and strong, on a Tower whereof stands three Globes made of pure Gold, weighing 130000 Barbary Ducats: Which divers Kings have gone about to take down, and convert into Money, but all desisted in regard of some cross accident or other which befell them in it; insomuch that the common people think them to be guarded with Spirits. The Nubian Geographer p. 76. saith, this City was built by Joseph, King of Tefsin, in the year of the Hegyrd 470 Ann. C.

1187. which was in the Century he lived in, That the Ground it was built on, he bought of the Inhabitants of Aghmat Varicha, a City at the foot of Mount Atlas, 17 miles to the South. It stands in a Plain: the Water for their Gardens is drawn by a wheel out of a Well. This City was then a mile square; and about 3 miles from the City ran the River Tensift, which tho' not great was yet never dry. He saith in that Plain there was but one small Hill, called Aigilin, which afforded the City Quarries of Stone for their Buildings. This is one of the greatest Cities in the World, saith Leo Afr. p. 68. In Hali's time, the Son of Joseph, it had 100000 Families, 24 Gates, and a Stone Wall very strong and thick. It is seated 6 miles from Tensift; Not one third part of the City was inhabited in his time, the rest filled up with Ruines which made its passage difficult. It was built in the year 424. In 516 it was taken by a Rebel Prince, whose Posterity Reigned till the year 668. when those of the Tribe of Marin ruled till 785. whose Seat was at Fesse; and Morocco was managed by *Viceroy*s ever after. There is in it a Vast strong Castle, built all of Marble, as big as a small City: the greatest part of this noble Castle is now desolate, with its Gardens and Park, and the former used for a Dungfield to the City.

4. North of Morocco, on the further side of Tensift and Asifnuad, is the Province of HEA: Hea is bounded on the West and North with the Atlantick Ocean; on the South with Mount Atlas, which separates it from SUS; and on the East with the Esfivale, which falls into the Tensift. It is uneven, Mountainous and Rocky, but well Watered, Rich and Populous. Their Fruit is scarce; no Corn but Barly, Milk not plenty, but much Honey. Leo Africanus, Rough, Mountainous, and Woody, yet watered with many pleasant Rivers, and would be plentiful enough in all Commodities, if the Industry of the People were not wanting to it. A sort of People little better than merely Barbarous; without all Artists, either Ingenious or Mechanick; except some Chyrurgeons, whom they keep to Circumcise their Children; and some few Teachers of their Law, which can hardly read. Their Food a Pap, made of Barly-meal, which in stead of Spoons, they claw with their Fingers; the Ground they eat on, serving for Table, Stools and Napkins: At endless feud with one another; yet so kind to Strangers, that in one of their chief Towns, called Tedneft, the Gentlemen used to cast lots who should entertain them: A Town of good esteem in former time, situate in a large plain on the River Tensift; but in the year 1514 almost wholly abandoned, upon a rumor, that the Arabians had a purpose to sell it to the Portugals. 2. Teculeth, seated on a good Port, and once very well traded, there being in it at that time 1000 Families, some Hospitals and a beautiful Mosque; in the year 1514. destroyed by the Portugals. 3. Tenent, a Sea-Town in the hands of the Portugals. 4. Elmuriden, a strong place, as the name importeth, the word signifying the Disciples Fort; so called because a certain Heresick in the Law of Mahomet (whereof this Kingdom yields great plenty) retired hither with his Disciples; fortified it, and defended it against the King of Morocco. 5. Iguilinguil, seated on the top of all, and fortified by the Country-people (or old African Moors) against the Arabians. 6. Tefetbne, beautified with a pretty Haven, but not capable of any great Shipping. It is seated on the North side of Mount Atlas 3 days Journey from Messa (N.) in the Province of Sus. It consists of about 600 Families. The Portugal Merchants frequent it for Goat Skins and Wax. It was built by the Africans and the Wall of it of Stone and Brick. The Inhabitants are now Mahometans, who have Judges for their Civil Causes, but revenge Murders by the next of Kin by way of Retaliation; but if the Murderer escapes he is Banished 7 years, and returns and pays a fine, and is then acquitted. Leo Africanus. 7. Tagles, a den of Thieves and Cut-Throats. 8. Tefegdel, as courteous and as civil, as the other barbarous; at the Gates whereof a Guard is set for entertainment of Strangers; whom, if they they have no Acquaintance there, they are to provide of Accommodation in some Gentleman's House, where it costs them nothing but Thanks, and some kind Acknowledgment.

5. Northwards of Hea, stands the Province of DUCALIA, bounded on the West, with the main Atlantick; and on the North, with the River Ommirobili, by which parted from the Kingdom of Fesse. Of three days journey long, about two in breadth; thrusting into the Ocean with a craggy Promontory, which some of the Ancients called Ulagum, others the Promontory of the Sun, but by the Christians of Europe, called the Cape of Cantin; by the Mos, Gschubdic. This and Tedles were Inhabited by the Arabian Family called Eibeg, which was the most Noble in Arabia, and maintained their Possession against the Kings of Portugal and Fesse with 100000 Men, most Horse. This Family, saith Leo Africanus, p. 14. being assaulted by the King of Portugal, who took Asafi and Fesse, and divided into Factions at home; a Famine following, forced them to yield Slaves to the Portuguese for Bread, and so exported or destroyed, ib. p. 24. Populous enough, the quality of the Men considered; ignorant both of Letters and all Good Manners: Yet not so populous as it hath been in former times, much of the Country being abandoned for fear of the Portugals, who have taken all their best Towns on the Sea-coasts, and destroyed the rest. Amongst these, 1. Asafi, at the foot of the Hill so called; surpris'd by the Portugals, under colour of making a Store house for their Merchandise. Leo Africanus p. 82. saith it was built by the Africans, and contain'd 4000 Families, but Rude and Barbarous. The Soil is fertile, but they know not how to improve it. The Portuguese, by the Disorders of these People, took advantage, pretending fear of their Lives, fortified their Factory, and furnished it with Ammunition and Cannon, and then picking a Quarrel with a Townsman slew him, and after it 150 Townsmen who should have revenged his Death. The King of Portugal thereupon sent an Army of 5000 Men, who joining to them the Arabians, conquered the greatest part of the Kingdom of Morocco, and burnt and laid desolate the most populous and flourishing Cities in it. 2. Azme, seated at the Mouth of the River Ommirobili, the furthest Town of this Kingdom towards that of Fesse; the People whereof were extremely addicted unto Sodomy, till subdued by the Portuguese. 3. Elmedina, once the Metropolis of this Province, but now for fear of those Invaders, in a manner desolated. It stands upon the Atlantick Ocean, between Asafi to the South, and Tu to the North, on the South side of a Bay made by Cape Cantin, Leo Africanus, p. 85. Ortelius. 4. Comte, of the Foundation of the Gibbs. 5. Tic, built by the old African Moors, but possessed by the Portugals. 6. Subeit. 7. Teneracost. 8. Cempuis. 9. Terga. 10. Culubuan; all sacked and ruined by the same People, when they took Azamor (the Key of this Province) which was in the year 1513. At which time it is said, that Atahmet King of Fesse passing through this Province with an Army, to repress these Insolencies, at every Altar (whereof here are many in the Roads) kneeled, and said unto this effect: Lord, thou knowest that the cause of my coming into this wild Place, is only to free this people of Duccala from the rebellious and wicked Arabians, and their cruel enemies the Christians; which purpose, if thou dost not approve of, let the punishment fall upon my Person, but not upon my Followers, who deserve it not. With greater Piety than could be looked for from a blind Mahometan.

6. Eastward of Duccala, along the Banks of Ommirobili, lieth the Province of HA SCOR A, a fruitful Country, intermixt of rich fields and pleasant Gardens: furnished with most sorts of choicest Fruits; and amongst others, Grapes of such extraordinary greatness, that they are said to be as big as a Pullets Eggs. Good store of Honey it hath also, and some Mines of Iron: Inhabited by a more civil People than any of the rest, and consequently more deserving so rich a Soil, Leo Africanus p. 90, 91. This Province and Town was subdued to the King of Fesse in the 15th Century, after which the Inhabitants lived in greater Peace, p. 92. Places of most importance in it, 1. Ezo, an old Town, situate on a lofty Mountain. 2. Elvinina, of a later erection. 3. Almedine, conquered for the King of Fesse by a Merchant, whose Paramour the Prince or Governor hereof had taken from him: Situate in a pleasant but little Valley, but begirt with Hills, and well inhabited by Gentlemen, Merchants, and Artificers. 4. Togodest, on the top of an Hill, environed with four others of equal height.

7. More East, between Hascora and the River Malva, is the Province of TEDLES, bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Tremesen; and on the North, with that of Fesse, from which last parted by the River Servi which on the North-East border of it meets with Ommirobili. The whole Province in form Triangular, of no great length or breadth, but sufficiently fruitful, and well inhabited for the bigness. Some Towns it hath, and those not meanly populous for so small a Province; the Chief whereof, 1. Tefza, built by the old African Moors, and beautified with many Mahometan Mosques; the Walls of which made of a kind of Marble, which they here call Tifza, whence the Name of the Town. 2. Efsa, seated on the River Ommirobili, where it receiveth that of Deym; which rising out of Atlas Minor, and passing by Tifza last mentioned, doth here lose its Name. 3. Chyrbite, renowned for the stout resistance which it hath made from time to time against those of Fesse. 4. Ethaid, abounding in all sorts of Victual.

These Provinces make up the Kingdom of Morocco: infested miserably while it remained subject to the Kings of Fesse, by the Portugals on the one side, and the wild Arabians on the other. Concerning which last People, we are to know, that when the Saracens conquered Africk they contented themselves with the Command, and left unto the Natives the Possession of it, forbidding the Arabians (with whose course of Life they were well acquainted) to pass over Nilus. Elcain, the last of the Successors of Hucha in the Kingdom of Cairoan, having subdued the rest of Africk, and added it unto his Estate, passed forward into Egypt, which he had conquered also; assuming to himself the Title of Caliph: But in his absence, the Lieutenant, whom he left in Africk, rebelled against him; and acknowledging the Caliph of Bagdet for his Lawful Lord, received of him for his good Service, the Kingdom of Africa. Elcain thus dispossessed of Africk, despairing to recover his lost Estate, and yet not willing that it should be useful unto his Enemies, licensed the Arabians, for a Ducat a Man, to pass over the Nile with their Tents and Families. On which Agreement, almost half the Tribes of Arabia Deserta, and many of Arabia Felix, went into Africa; where they sacked Tripolis, Cairoan, and the rest of the principal Cities; Tyrannizing over all Barbary, till restrained at last by Joseph the Founder of Morocco, (of whom more hereafter.) Since which time, though they lost their unlimited Empire, yet they still swarm like Locusts over all the Country, and neither apply themselves to Tillage, or building Houses, or any civil course of Life; nor suffer those to Live in quiet, who would otherwise Manure and Improve the Country. The rest of the Story of these Kingdoms we shall have anon, when we have taken a Survey of the Kingdom of Fesse.

4. F E S S E.

THE Kingdom of F E S S E is bounded on the South with the Realm of Morocco; on the North, with part of the Atlantick and Mediterranean; on the East, with Malva, parting it from the Kingdom of Tremesen, and on the West, with the Atlantick wholly.

It takes this name from Fesse, the chief City of it. Known to the ancients by the name of Mauritania Tingitana, so called from the City of Tingis (now Tangier) then of greatest note. Called also Hispania Transfretana, Spain on on the other side of the Sea, because a part of that Dioceſe: And by ſome (Pliny amongſt others) Bogudiana, from Bogud one of the Kings hereof, to whom given by Cæſar; by others Ampeluſia, from its abundance of Vines. The Inhabitants of it, by the Spaniards, now called Alarbes.

The Country of good temperature in regard of the Air, if not in ſome places of the coldeſt: but very unequally diſpoſed of in reſpect of the Earth; here being in it many Deſerts and large Forreſts, not well inhabited; but intermixt with many rich and delightful Fields. So that taking the eſtimate in the groſs, it may be ſaid to be a rich and flouriſhing Country, hardly inferior unto any. Its Soil yields Corn, Cattle, and Fruit in great plenty, yet it is meanly Peopled as to the Plains and Valleys, Leo Africanus, p. 116. The particularities of which are to be conſidered in the Characters of the ſeveral Provinces, into which it now ſtands divided, that is to ſay, 1. Temefna, 2. Fefſe, eſpecially ſo called, 3. Elchams, or Chaus, 4. Garet, 5. Afgara, 6. Erriſſe, and 7. Habat.

1. TEMEſNA hath on the South, the River Ommirabili; on the Weſt, the Ocean; extended in length from Weſt to Eaſt 80 miles, and in breadth 70. A Champain Country, very level; and once ſo populous, that it contained 40 Cities, and 300 Caſtles; moſt of them ruined by the Wars, and the wild Arabians, the greater deſtroyer of the two. The principal of thoſe remaining, 1. Teyeger, near the River Ommirabili, once of greater note, but now inhabited only by poor People, and a few Smiths compelled to live there for the making of Iron Inſtruments to manure the Land. 2. Thagia, on the courſe of the ſaid River; much viſited by thoſe of Fefſe, for the Sepulchre of an Holy Prophet, who was there interred; the Fiffians going thither in Pilgrimage with ſuch numbers of Men, Women, and Children, that their Tents ſeem ſufficient to lodge an Army. 3. Alendum, more towards the Sea, but on a ſmall River called Guirlu; well walled, and fenced on one ſide by a Lake or Poll. 4. Amsu, on the ſhore of the Atlantick, once of great Trade, and well frequented, both by the Engliſh and Portugals, by which laſt deſtroyed. 5. Munſor, deſtroyed in like manner by the wild Arabians. 6. Nuchaida, ſituate in ſo fertile and rich a Soil, that the Inhabitants would have given a Camels burden of Corn for a pair of Shoes. Nothing now left of it but one Steeple, and a piece of the Wall. 7. Rabut, or Rubut, built by Manſor, or Almanſor, a King of Morocco, near the mouth of the River Burugrug; and by him made one of the beſt Peopled Towns in Africk: built after the Model of Morocco, but now ſo waſted that there are not in it above 500 Families; moſt of the Ground within the Walls being turned into Meadows, Vineyards, and Gardens. 8. Fanzara on the River Subu, the Subur of Ptolemy, falling not far off into the other. 9. Mobmora, in the ſame tract alſo, once poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; near which the Portugals received a great defeat by the King of Fefſe, for want of good Intelligence betwixt them and the Caſtilians. 10. Salla, the Sala of Ptolemy, by the Inhabitants called Zale, or ordinary Maps by miſtaking, Cale; at the Mouth of the River Rebato, which the ancient Writers called Sala, as they named the Town. Beautified by King Almanſor (who is here interred) with a ſtately Palace, a goodly Hoſpital, a fair Temple, and a Hall of Marble, cut in Moſaick works; intended for the Burial-place of his Poſterity. A Town much traded formerly by the Chriſtian Merchants of England, Flanders, Genoa, and the Gulph of Venice. Took by the Spaniards, An. 1287. and within ten days loſt again; and of late times made a Neſt of Pirates, as dangerous to thoſe which ſailed in the Ocean, as the Pirates of Algiers to the Mediterranean. Whole Intolencies the King of Morocco not able to ſuppreſs for want of Shipping, deſired the Aid of his Maſteſty Charles, King of Great Britain; by whom the Town being blocked up by Sea, and beſieged to the Landward by the King of Morocco, it was at laſt compelled to yield; the Works thereof diſmantled, the Pirates executed, and 300 Chriſtian Captives ſent unto his Maſteſty, to be by him reſtored to their former Liberty; to the great Honour of his Maſteſty, and the Engliſh Nation, An. 1632. The Nubian Geographer ſaith, it ſtands nine days Journey from Morocco to the North; and that the old Town ſtood two miles more remote from the Sea, than the preſent Sale doth. The preſent new Town is ſeated on ſo ſteep a Rock, that from the Sea it is not approachable; the Soil is barren, yet the City is beautiful, and wants nothing, the Ships importing into its River whatever it needs. This City ſtands 12 miles from Fadhala, another Sea port to the North, 85 from Aſaphi or Aſuſi, (now C. Cantin) the old Boundary of the Known World to the South, p. 76. The River of Sale is called Rebata, and is one of the greateſt in that Kingdom. The Ships that come there are not ſecure till entred into the River, the Road being too much expoſed to all Winds. Leo Africanus, p. 116. calls it Sella, and ſaith it was built by the Romans, ſack'd by the Goths, and rebuilt by Tarick the Celebrated Arabian Captain; the Buildings repreſenting a Majellick Antiquity, Splendid and Coſtly, frequented much by the Engliſh, Dutch, and Genouefe: This was the ſtate of it in the Times of Leo Africanus. After it came into the Hands of the King of Fefſe it was kept in order for ſome time, but then relapſing into the former Trade of Piracy; this Town has been a grievous Plague to our Trade on the Ocean, and eſpecially to our Plantation Trades, many of which Ships it takes, and makes our People Slaves. Some have attempted to renew the Trade which we had anciently here; but the Ships have been ſeized after they were Laden, and the Men made Slaves; this Nation being become ſo barbarous, that they do not underſtand the Benefit of a Trade. The Reader may be Admoniſhed here, that all the Deſcriptions are taken from Leo Africanus; and ſo great a Change for the Worſe, has ſince that time been brought upon the Country, that there is ſcarce any one Place in the Country which is not in a worſe Condition than it was then.

As for the Fortunes of this Province, they have been ſomewhat different from the reſt of this Kingdom: trained by a factious Prophet to revolt from the King of Fefſe and Morocco, whoſe Eſtate they very much endangered; ſending an Army of 50000 Men to the Gates of Morocco. But being diſcomfited, by Joſeph ſurnamed Telephus, he followed them into their own Country, which he waſted with great Cruelty for ten Months together; conſuming above a Million of them, and leaving the Province to the mercy of Wolves and Lions. Repeopled afterwards by Almanſor with Arabian Colonies: Given about Fifty years after that, by the Princes of the Marine Family, to more civil Inhabitants; by whom the Arabians were expelled, and the Province conſequently reduced into ſome good order.

2. Weſtward of Temefna lieth the Province of FESSE, properly and ſpecially ſo called; Extended in length from the River Burugrug to the River Inavis, for the ſpace of 100 miles. A very fruitful Province, well ſtored with Cattel, and exceeding Populous; the Villages hereof as big as the better ſort of Towns in other places; but contrary to the Cuſtom of other Countries, better inhabited on the Hills than among the Vallies; the People making choice of the Mountains for their Habitation, as places of Defence and Safety, but Huſbanding the Vallies which lie neareſt to them. This Cuſtom of Inhabiting the Mountains and Tilling the Valleys, depended upon two Reaſons; 1. The Heats of the Valleys in the Summer time: 2. The Security the Mountains afford againſt the Wandering Arabs, or any other Enemy that ſhall aſſault them, to which theſe Countries have been heretofore much Expoſed; for I have not of late heard any mention of the Wild Arabs, and therefore I believe they have been wholly driven out of this Part by the late Kings of Fefſe. Places of moſt conſideration in it. 1. Macarmedo, on the River Inavis, in a goodly Plain, but in a manner all ruined, except the Wall. This Town lies 20 miles Eaſt

East of Fesse upon the Bank of a beautiful River, anciently Strong, Rich, and Populous; but in Leo Africanus his time wholly laid Desolate by the Wars, p. 166. 2. Gazili, memorable for the Sepulchre of Idris, the first Founder of Fesse. 3. Petra Rossa, where they have some Lions so tame, that they will gather up Bones in the Streets like Dogs, without hurting any body. 4. Agla, where they have brought their Lions to so strange a cowardise, that they will run away at the voice of a Child; whence a Brachadochis is called proverbially a Lion of Agla. 5. Pharao, by reason of the name thought by the vulgar to be founded by some King of Egypt; but the Latine Inscriptions therein found, declare it to have been some work of the ancient Romans. 6. Maquille, of more antiquity than note. 7. Fesse, the Metropolis of this Province, and the chief of the Kingdom, supposed to be the Volubilis of Ptolemy, but much enlarged and beautified by some new Accessions. Situate for the most part upon little Hillocks, and watered by a pleasant and gentle River (derived by Aqueducts and Conducts into all parts of the City) which they now call the River of Fesse, conceived by some learned Men to be that which was anciently called Phuth, from Phut the first Planter of the African Nations. A City so beautiful and well seated, as if Nature and Art had plaid the Wantons, and brought this forth as the fruit of their Dalliance. The Founder or enlarger of it, one of the Race of the false Prophet Mahomet, his name Idris, who built on the East side of the River; that on the West side, being the work of one of his Sons: both so increasing, that at last they were joyned together. To these the Suburbs being added, have made a Third. The whole called Fesse, from Fez, an Arabick word signifying Gold; whereof great quantity was found when they digged the Foundations. Divided into three parts by the River, all of which contain 28000 Households, and 700 Moschees, or Saracenic Temples: the chief of which is Carne, or Carnven, being a mile and a half in compass. It hath 31 Gates, great and high, the Roof 150 yards long, and 80 broad: round about, divers Porches, containing 40 yards in length, and 30 in breadth; under which, the publick Store-houses of the Town. About the Walls are Pulpits of divers sorts, wherein the Masters of their Law read unto the People such things, as they think to pertain to their Salvation. The Revenue hereof is 200 Ducats a day of the old Rents; for so it was, An. 1526. when Leo Afr. wrote. The Merchants have here a Court, or Exchange, inclosed with a strong Wall, with 12 Gates, and 15 Streets. There is also a Colledge called Amoradoc, a most curious and delicate Building. It hath three Cloysters, of admirable Beauty, supported with eight square Pillars of divers colours; the Roof curiously carved, the Arches of Mosaique work of Gold and Azure; the Gates of Brass, fair wrought; and the Doors of the private Chambers of Inlaid work. This Colledge did cost the Founder King Abuchenen, or Abu Henen, 380000 Crowns. Here are finally said to be in it many Hospitals, little inferior to the Colleges in Building and Beauty, all very liberally endowed; and about an hundred Hot Baths well built, with four Halls to each, and certain Galleries without, where they put off their Cloaths when they go to bathe themselves: And besides these, 200 Inns, built three Stories high, each of them having 120 Chambers in it, with Galleries before all the Doors for their Guests to walk in.

3. Eastward of the Territory of Fesse, lieth the Province of CHADUS, extended in length from the River Gurgut, or Gurguigurn, by which parted from Tremesen and Fesse, to the borders of Tremesen, for the space of 190 Miles, and 170 Miles in breadth. So that it is thought to contain one third part of the whole Kingdom; but meanly populous for the bigness, the Country being poor and barren, and the Inhabitants fierce and warlike; more given to prosecute their Quarrels, than to Trade or Tillage. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Tedza, Tezza, Teza, This City is five Miles from Mount Atlas, fifty from Fesse to the South: and a hundred and thirty from the Ocean to the East, and from the Mediterranean a hundred and seventy; of old, it had about five thousand Families, and was stately built, especially the Palaces Colledges, and Temples: A small River ariseth out of the Atlas, which heretofore passed through the Mosque, but diverted to the great damage of the Inhabitants, when they quarrell'd with their Neighbours; so that they have been forced to use Cistern Water: The Inhabitants are more Liberal and Civil than those of Fesse. It has a bigger Temple, three Colledges, and divers Baths, fruitful Fields, and learned and rich Inhabitants; and about 500 Families of Jews, who make the best Wine in Africa. In the Castle resides the Governor, who is the King of Fesse his second Son and to defend it from the wild Arabs the King often visits it; the Jurisdiction is very large which belongs to it, and extends over divers Mountains. Thus far Leo Africanus, who saw it. p. 104, 105. 2. Ham Lisnan, a Town built in the more Mountainous parts of the Country, by the old Africans. Famous for the Temple of an Idol here worshipped; to which at certain times Men and Women resorted in the night; where, after their Devotion's ended, and the Candles put out, every Man lay with the Woman he first touched; the exact Platform of the Family of Love, if all be true which is told us of them; and anciently, but falsely, charged on the Primitive Christians. In both these Towns Men of the same Trade have a Street by themselves. Leo Africanus, p. 200. Turerto was the Capital of it, whose Walls are Marble; and it had once Three thousand Families in it. The present Capital City is Tezza Tedza. 3. Dubdu, an ancient Town, but not much observable. This City was built by the Africans on an exceeding high Mountain, from the top of which fall Springs that supply the Town; the Ascent is five Miles to it by crooked winding ways; it hath Gardens on each side of a small River; the Corn is not sufficient for the Inhabitants, but what comes from Tezza or Tedza; being only considered as a Fortress by the old Kings of the Marni Family, where they subsisted when driven out of Fesse, and vanquished by the Arabians and Fessians in War. These Kings were Mose, Ibnu, Chamu, Acmed, Mahomet, who in the year 1495. repelled the King of Fesse, and slew 3000 of his Army; and that King made a Peace with him, and Married his Daughter to Mahomet his Son who was King of this City in the year 1526. Leo Africanus, p. 202. 4. Twert, seated on the top of an Hill, in the midst of a Plain, but compassed about with Desarts. 5. Beni Fesseten, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greatest Bravery and Wealth consisteth: the Women here wearing Iron Rings for Ornaments to their Ears and Fingers. 6. Tezargui, subject to the Arabians. 7. Adaggia, the most Eastern Town of all the Region; situate in a Peninsula made by the confluence of Mulufo and Malwa. In this Country is the head of the River Subur, which rising out of a great Lake in the Woods of the Mountains Scelligus, and receiving many lesser Waters, with a large and Navigable Stream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northward of Chaus lieth the Region called G A R E T, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean; and reaching East and West, from the River Malwa, where it bordereth on Tremesen, to that of Nochor, where it toucheth on Errif and Ascara. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth but 20. The Soil in most places dry and desart, like the Sands of Numidia; especially all along the Banks of the Malwa; near unto which from the Mediterranean to Chaus, it is wholly desart and unpeopled, not well Inhabited in the most fruitful parts of it, being full of Mountains; the worse for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, possessed of 1. Cbesusa, and 2. Medela, two chief Towns hereof. 3. Pennon de Velez, by some called Pelez de Gomera, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains, built by the Africans or Gorbs; but now in the possession of the Spaniards also. 4. Jasserin, situate on the Sea also, founded by the Mahometans metans of the Marine Family. 5. Tessora, standing on an Hill, to which there is but one passage only.

5. Westward of Garet lieth ASCARA, extended from thence unto the Ocean: shut up on the South-East side with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaren, and Gomara, out of which last runneth the River Luccus, called Lix, by Ptolemy. The Air hereof very temperate, and the Soil as fertile; supplying with the overplus of its Commodities the Mountainous parts of Fesse, and the Desarts of Garet. These Desarts are a part of the said Province, and begin Northward from the Mediterranean Sea, and run South to the Desart of Chaurz. West it hath the Mountain of Guardan; and East the River Mulvra; it's 60 Miles in length, and 30 in breadth; there is no Water, but the River; full of wild Beasts; but in Summer the Arabians take up the parts about the River, and the Batalisæ, a fierce People in War with the wild Arabs, possess great numbers of Horses, Camels, and other Cattle, and fight for Pasture with them, Leo Africanus, p. 200. Once full of Towns, till ruined and destroyed by the Wars. A Monument whereof, 1. Giumba, built by the Ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditches. 2. Larace, in Latine Larissa, the Lixa of Ptolemy, situate at the mouth of the Lix or Luccus, and furnished with a good Port, but of difficult entrance; Garison'd when possessed by the Moors with 300 light Horse, and 300 Harcabusters; but better fortified than before, since possessed by the Spiniards, into whose hands it was put by Muley-Sheck King of Morocco and Fesse, when worsted by Muley-Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the Civil Wars betwixt them. This Town was lately taken from the Spiniards by the Moors, I think in 1689. 3. Cular Elcibir, given by Almanzor to a poor Fisher, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his Cottage, when he lost his Company in Hunting: Adorned with many Temples, one Colledge of Students, and a stately Hospital.

6. On the North of Ajara is the Province of E L H A B A T, or H A B A T, coasting along the Atlantic Ocean to the mouth of the Streits, in length 100 Miles, about 80 in breadth. The Country very plentiful of all manner of necessities, and very well Peopled; the Mountains, which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times replenished with many Cities, both of the Foundation of the Goths, Romans and old African Moors, now much diminished by the Wars. Those of most note, 1. Asaggen, the Inhabitants whereof by ancient Privilege granted by the King of Fesse, were licenced to drink Wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a Mountain near the River Guarga, about 35 Leagues from Fesse; and Garison'd with 400 Horse for fear of the Portugals, who sometimes make their excursions thither. 2. Bafra, once a Walled Town, and the Walls still standing, but very little or no Town in them; it lies 30 Miles distant from Sala Eastwards, and not far from the confines of the Province of Afgar. Leo Africanus, p. 177. saith it is seated between two Mountains, 80 Miles from Fesse, and has its name from a City so called in Arabia; it did once contain 2000 Families, and strongly Walled, but became Desolate by the Wars, when the Family of Ibris failed. 3. Homar, sometimes well Peopled, but now little Inhabited, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Portugals, who command that Coast. 4. Bamirenda, in a manner deserted for the same reason. 5. Alcazaer, to distinguish it from another of this name, called Alcazer Guer, taken, together with Arzilla and Tangier, by Alfonso the sixth of Portugal, An. 1470, nigh to which Town the three Kings, Sebastian of Portugal, Mahomet and Abdelmelech, Competitors for this Kingdom, were slain in a day. There was also slain at the same time, the great English Rebel Struckley, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, An. 1570. where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church: by whom appointed for the Conquest of Ireland, and for that end furnished with 800 Soldiers, paid by the King of Spain; and by his Holiness created Marquis of Lomper, Earl of Wexford and Carolagh, Viscount Marraugh, and Baron of R. Thus furnished, he began his Journey towards Ireland, An. 1578. but hearing of these Wars, and desirous to make a party in them, he lost all his Honour with his Life. 6. Arzilla, a Sea-Town, 70 Miles distant from the Streits, now possessed by the Portugals; This is a great City built by the Romans, on the Coast of the Ocean, 140 Miles from Fesse, N. W. An. C. 685. it was taken by the Moors. In the year 905. the Saxons took it, and totally destroyed and laid it waste many Years. In 1473. The Portuguese surprized it. It seems to be retaken by the Moors in 1512, Leo Afr. p. 177. 7. Tangier, a great Town and very ancient, distant from the Streits about 30 Miles, belonging to the Portugals also. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Cananites, and by them built at their first coming thither, when they fled from the Sword of Jshua; testified by the two Pillars erected near this City, which before we spoke of: and from that name caused all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingitania; made afterwards a Colony by the Emperor Claudius, who named it Treducta Julia; but the old name prevailed, and outlived the new. Near to this Town, it is said, that Hercules overcame Anteus a monstrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was a high Mountain called Abyla, opposite to which in the Coast of Spain was another called Calpe, on which the said Hercules placed his so famous Pillars; it stands at the mouth of the Streits of Gibraltar, towards the Atlantic Ocean, 32 Miles from Cuta, to the W. and a days journey from Arzilla to the N. Nub. p. 150. placeth it in the 4th. Climate. Leo Africanus, p. 179. maketh it a Roman work (he knowing nothing of the more ancient Stories) he placeth it from Fesse 150 Miles: it was won by the Moors about the year 685. with Arzilla. The fields about it are fruitful; it was well Peopled, till Arzilla, in the year 1473. was taken by the Portuguese; when being deserted by the Inhabitants, the Portuguese took Possession of it without opposition; from which time they kept it, and was anciently an Arch-Bishop's See. In the year 1662. the Portuguese put it into the hands of the English; and Charles II. having been at an immense Charge upon the Haven, and outworks of it, after it had prosperously repelled several Attacks of the Moors in 1663, 1664, and 1682. in the year 1683, the Lord Dartmouth was ordered to blow up all the Ports and Works, and the Mole to be slighted, and the Garison withdrew into England; the Benefit being not equal to the Charge of keeping it. Thus one of the oldest Cities in the World was destroyed in a few days. 8. Septa or Senta, situate on or near that Mountain, unfortunately memorable for giving the Title of an Earl to Julian, who first brought the Saracens into Spain; beautified in the following times with many Temples, Colledges, and Learned Men; taken by the Portugals with the help of the English, An. 1415. and now in the possession of the King of Spain. The only Town of all the Estates of Portugal, which in the late Revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. This lies on the Eastern point of the Streits of Gibraltar, over against the City of Gibraltar in Spain, from which it stands eight French Leagues to the South, being seated upon a Peninsula, and surrounded on all sides by the Sea, except that to the W. The Nubian Geo. calls this place Insula Viridis, the Green Island; and that against it the Ile of Taris, and he calls it Sabta, as Leo doth Septa; and the latter saith the Portuguese call it Seupta: The Nubian placeth it 18 Miles from Gibraltar. (Tarif) It is built on Seven Hills, stretching from East to West: to the West about a Mile it hath fruitful Grounds, affording such plenty of Fruit as furnishes distant places: This Place is called Belunes, and by reason of the fertility of the Soil, and quantity of Springs, 'tis mighty pleasant. Leo Afr. in his 3 Book, saith, it was a Roman Building. An. C. 709. the Saracens took it, and in 1435. it was taken by the Portuguese from them: now it is in the hands of the Spaniards, and strongly Fortify'd and Garison'd. Bunon. 9. Julia Constantia, so called, and made a Roman Colony by Augustus Cæsar. 10. Laxus, a Roman Colony of the Plantation of Claudius, in old times said to have been the Court or Palace of the Giant Antæus. Not far from whence (that Antæus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the Habitation of Geryon, as proper a Gentleman as himself, in a small Island of the Streits, called Geryonis Insula, and by some Erythia.

7. Eastward of Habat is the Province of E R R I F, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joyneth to Habat, as far as to the River Nachor, (supposed to be the Melochath of the ancient Writers) by which parted from Garet: A Mountainous and cold Country in respect of the rest of Barbary, full of Woods and Forests; but plentiful enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives; and not without some Herds of Goats, though otherwise not well stored with Cattel. In Length 140 Miles, in Breadth 40 only; inhabited by a race of valiant Men, but excessive Drunkards. The Towns hereof not many, though full of Villages. The Chief of which, 1. Mazagon, near unto the Streits; a very strong Town and of great importance, but possessed by the Portugals: in vain Belieged by Abdalla the first, with an Army of 200000 Men, An. 1562. 2. Mazemme, seated on a Mountain. 3. Beni Ferfo, of like situation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Professors of the Mahometan Law, who here publickly taught it, as in an University; the Inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all exactions. Destroyed, together with the Library of it, by some wicked Tyrant, An. 1509. the Books therein being valued at 4000 Ducats, 4. Terga. 5. Togassa. 6. Gebbe, of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of these two Kingdoms, we must next look upon them also in the general Story, from the time of the Saracenic Conquest; first let into this Country by the Treason of Julian, and for a while subject to the great Caliph, or Successor of Mahomet: Afterwards to the King, or Caliph, of Caircan, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, these Provinces, with the rest, were afflicted by them till the rising of the Kingdom of Fesse; begun in the Person of Idris, of the blood of Mahomet, by Hali, and his Daughter Fatima, commonly called the Family of Alaweci; who persecuted by the opposite Faction, fled into Mauritania; where he grew into such Reputation, that in short time he got both Swords into his Hands. Dying about the 185th. year of the Hegira, he left his Power unto his Son, of the same name with his Father, the first Founder of Fesse. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the Water, one of his Sons (but his name I find not) built another City, which in time grew into emulation with it; and raising by that means a Faction in the House of Idris, which occasioned the subversion of the Kingdom of Fesse, after it had continued in the Family of the Alaweci for the space of 270 Years. The Estate hereof first weakned by Abu Tifin, or Texifien, of the House of the Almoravides or Lautunes, and so weakened, that he thereby gave an opportunity to Joseph Aben, Teifin, or Telephine his Son and Successor, then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the City of Morocco, to suppress that Family: Who killing the Princes of that Line, and 30000 of their Subjects, brake down the Walls which parted the Two Cities from one another, united them by Bridges, and so made them one. Drawn into Spain by the dissention of the Saracens there amongst themselves, he added all which they held in that Kingdom unto his Dominions, held by his Successors, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: The Catalogue of which Princes, called the House or Family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almohades, is this which followeth.

The Kings or Miramomolins of MOROCCO.

A. Ch. 1. T Eifin, Texien, or Telephine, the first of the Almoravides that Reigned in Africk. 668.

2. Joseph, surnamed Telefinus, the Son of Teifin, founded Morocco, subdued the Kingdom of Fesse; and added the Estate of the Moors in Spain unto his Dominions, An. 1091.

3. Hali, the Son of Joseph.

4. Abu-Halus, the Son of Hali, supposed to be the Publisher of the Works now extant in the name of Avicenna, compiled at his Command by some of the most learned Arabian Doctors: vanquished and slain by

5. Addelmon, or Abdel-Mumen, the first of the Almohades, of obscure Parentage, but raised to so great Power by the practices of Almohade, a juggling Prophet of those times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the Kingdom of Almoravides both in Spain, and Africk, An. 1150. to which he also added the Realm of Tunis and Cairoan.

6. Joseph II. or Aben Joseph, the Son of Abdelmon.

7. Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, surnamed Almansor, a puissant and prudent Prince, of whom much before: Son of Joseph II.

8. Mahomet surnamed Enasur, or the Green, the Brother of Almansor. Discomfited by the Christians of Spain, at the Battle of Sierra Morena, An. 1214. lost his Dominions, there being slain in this Battel 200000 of the Moors, as some Writers say; who added, that the Spaniards for two days together burnt no other Fuel but the Pikes, Launces and Arrows of their slaughtered Enemies, yet could not consume the one half of them.

9. Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Enasur, by his Son Buxaf: slain at the Siege of Tremezexir, a Castle of Tremelin, which was held against him.

10. Almorcada, a Kinsman of Caid Arrax, outed of his Estate, and slain by Budebuz, of the same House of the Almohades.

11. Budebuz, the last of the House of the Almohades, settled in his Estate by the Aid and Valour of Jacob Ben-Joseph; the new King of Fesse: but dealing faithlessly and ungratefully with him, he was Warred on by the said Jacob Ben-Joseph, vanquished and slain in Battel; the Sovereignty by that means translated unto those of the Marine Family, An. 1270. or thereabouts.

But before I do proceed further with this Marine Family, I must again look back upon Mahomet Enasur, whom I conceive (the computation of the time being so agreeable) to be the Admiratus Mummelinus, mentioned by Matthew Paris, to whom our King John, An. 1214. is said to have sent such a degenerate and unchristian Ambassage. Which strange name of Admiratus Mummelinus, was by that good Writer unhappily stumbled at instead of Miramomolin which also is corrupted from Amir Elmumenim, that is to say, Princeps Fidelium: An Attribute which the great Kings of the Saracen-Moors did much affect, and retained it long time amongst them. The Story this; King John being overlaid by his Barons Wars, and the Invasions of the French, sent Ambassadors to this great Prince (then Ruling over a great part of Spain and Barbary) for aid against them; offering to hold his Kingdom of him, and to receive withal the Law of Mahomet. The Moor exceedingly offended at it, told the Ambassadors, that he had lately read the Book of Paul's Epistles; which he liked so well, that were he now to choose a Religion, he would have have embraced Christianity before any other. But every Man (saith he) ought to die in his own Religion; the greatest thing which he disliked in that Apostle, being (as he said) the changing of the Earth in which he was born: This said, he called unto him Robert of London, Clerk, one of the Ambassadors (a Man ill chose for such an Errand, if the Tale be true) of whom he demanded the Form of the English Government, the Situation and Wealth of the Country, the Manners of the People, the Life and Person of the King; in which being satisfied, he grew into such a dislike of that King, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. This is the Substance of the Story in Matthew Paris: But you must know he was a Monk, to which brood of Men King John was held for a mortal Enemy; and therefore this Relation is not to pass for Gospel.

But whatsoever opinion King John might have of the Power of this King, to whom 'tis possible enough he might send for Aid, certain it is, that he was grown so low in his Reputation, after the loss of that great Battel in Sierra Morena, that not only the Spanish Moors withdrew their Obedience from him (as a Prince unable to support them) but those of Africa did revolt also from the Crown of Morocco (extreamly weakened by that blow) after his decease: For Gomoranca Aben Zein of the house of Abdeluad, seized upon Tremesen, in the time of Cord Arrax his Successor; as Bucar Aben Merin of the noble Marine Family, (descended from a Christian Stock) did the like at Fesse. Settled in his Estate by the Vanquishment of Almoracada the Miramamolim, he left it to Hiya his Son, under the Governance and Protection of a Brother of his called Jacob Ben-Joseph. But the young Prince dying shortly after, left his new Kingdom to his Uncle; who aiding Budebuz (before mentioned) dispossessed Almoracada of the Realm of Morocco: And afterwards having just cause of Quarrel against this Budebuz, invaded his Dominions, overcame and slew him; and once again transferred the Imperial Seat from Morocco to Fesse. In him began the Empire of the Marine Family, who held their Residence in Fesse, as the first Seat of their Power; Morocco being govern'd by an under-King, the rest of the Provinces of that Kingdom Cantoned into several States; the Sea coasts in some tract of time being gained by the Portugals. And in his Line (but with great confusions) the Royal Dignity remained till the year 1500. and somewhat after. Three only were of note in the course of Business, that is to say, 1. Jacob Ben-Joseph, the Advancer of the Marine Family to the Realm of Morocco; the Establisher thereof in that of Fesse, and of great power and influence in the Affairs of the Moors in Spain, where he held Algazir and Tariffe, Towns of great importance: slain treacherously by one of his familiar Friends, at the Siege of Tremesen. 2. Aben-Joseph the Second, a younger Son of the first Joseph (the Issue of Bucalo his elder Brother being quite extinct) succeeded after Abortane, the sixth of the Marine Family in the Throne of his Father; and had added thereunto the Realm of Tremesen, if not diverted by the Revolt of Albuali his eldest Son, continually in Arms against him. 3. Alboacen, the Son of this Aben-

Joseph, and the eighth of the Marine Family, who after a Siege of 30 Months took the City of Tremesen, and with that the Kingdom. But not so fortunate in his Wars against the Christian Kings of Spain; against whom he led an Army of 12000 Foot, and 7000 Horse, with all other necessaries: but vanquished by the two Kings of Castile and Portugal, with far lesser forces; (their Army consisting but of 25000 Foot, and 1200 Horse) at the River of Salado, not far from Tangier, Anno 1340. Deceased soon after his return, by his Son Abelacan, who lost all which his Father and the first of the Aben-Joseph had gained in Spain; their Empire after this declining, even in Africa it self: the Kingdom of Tremesen, and the greatest part of the now Kingdom of Tunis, withdrawing themselves from their Obedience in the East parts of Barbary, as the Portugals prevailed upon them in the West. The Kingdom of the Marins thus approaching near its fatal Period, it fortuned about the year 1508. that Mahomet Ben-Amet, a Native of Dra, in the farther Numidia or Bibulgerid, pretending a Descent from their Prophet Mahomet, caused himself to be called Xoriff, the Name by which the Kindred and Successors of that Imam came to call themselves, and being a poor Hermite (with which Mountebanks, and the high opinion of their sanctity, this People have from time to time been extremely fooled) plotted to make his sons the Chief Prince of Morocco. To this end he sent them in Pilgrimage to Mecca, whence they returned with such an opinion of Sanctity, that Mahomet King of Fesse, made Amet the second of them Governor of the famous Couege of Amadorach; the youngest called Mahomet, Tutor to his Children; the eldest named Abdel, staying at home with his Father, to expect the issue; slain afterwards in the War undertaken by the other two against the Portugals. In those days the Portugals grievously infested the Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; to repress whose Insolencies, Mahomet and Amet obtained Commission, though much opposed therein by Muley the King's Brother, who told him how unsafe it was to trust to an armed Hypocrite: Assuring him, That if they once came unto any Power (which under colour of Religion they might quickly raise) it would not be easie to suppress them. But this good Counsel was rejected, and the War went forward. Furnished with an Army, they discomfit Lopes Barriga, Commander of the Portugal Forces under King Emmanuel, compell'd that King to abandon all his footing there; they subdued Ducala, Sus, and Ilea, three Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; enter that City, poison the tributary King, and salute Amet King thereof, by the Name of the Xoriff of Morocco, investing Mahomet, the other Brother, in the Kingdom of Sus. In the Career of their Successes died the King of Fesse; and Amet his Successor, an Improvident young Prince, confirms his Quondam Tutors in their new Estates, conditioned they should hold of him as the Lord in Chief, and pay him the accustomed Tributes.

The Xeriffs of MOROCCO.

- A. C. 1. A MET denied both Tribute and Supertority to the King of Fesse, whom he overthrew in a set Field; and was after vanquished and dispossessed of his Kingdom, (upon some quarrel breaking out) by his Brother Mahomet.
 1544. 2. Mahomet King of Sus, having got the Kingdom of Morocco, united Fesse unto it also by the vanquishment of Amet the King thereof; slain after all his Victories by the Turks of his Guard.
 1557. 3. Abdalla, the Son of Mahomet.
 1572. 4. Abdalla II. Son of the former, had twelve Brothers, of which he slew ten, Hamet being spared by reason of his supposed simplicity, and Abdelmelech escaping to the Turks.
 5. Mahomet II. Son of Abdalla the Second, ex-

- pelled by Abdelmelech and the Turks, fled to Sebastian King of Portugal, who, together, with the two Competitors, were slain in one day at the Battel of Alcazar Guer, Anno 1578.
 1578. 6. Hamet II. the Brother of Abdalla II. who added parts of Libya and Numidia to the Realm of Morocco, not absolutely subdued before.
 1603. 7. Muley Sheck, the eldest Son of Hamet, opposed in his Succession by Roseres and Sidan, his two younger Brethren, in which War he died; as did also Roseres his Brother. From whom Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sheck had regained Morocco.
 1607. 8. Sidan the third Son of Hamet, immediately on the Death of his Father, caused himself to be proclaimed King of Fesse (where he was with his Father when he died) and having won Morocco from Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sbeck, became Master of that Kingdom also. Stripped afterwards of Fesse and Morocco both, by the opposite Factions, distressed by Hamet Ben Abdulla a Religious Hermit, who hoped to get all for himself; and aided by Sidi Ham one of like Hypocrisy, who seemed to aim but at a Limb of that great Estate, by whose assistance he was once more possessed of Morocco. These Tumults on the Land being pacified in long tract of time, and the Country brought to some degree of Peace and Quietness, (though never absolutely reduced under his Command, as in former times;) a Rabble of Pyrates nest themselves in Salla, a Port Town of the Realm of Fesse; creating thence great Mischief to him both by Sea and Land; and not to him only, but to all the Merchants of other Countries, whose Business led them towards those Seas. Unable to suppress them for want of Shipping, he craved Aid of King Charles of England: by whose assistance he became Master of the Port, destroyed the Pyrates, and sent Three hundred Christian Captives for a present to His Sacred Majesty, An. 1632. Nor staid he here; but aiming at the general Good of Trade and Mankind, he sent a Letter to His Majesty, to lend him the like Aid against those of Algiers, who did as much infest the Mediterranean, as the Pyrates, of Salla did the Ocean.
 X X X X X his

The Tenor of which Letter, as favouring of more Piety than could be possibly expected from a Mahometan, and much conducing to the Honour of His Sacred Majesty, I have here subjoined.

The Letter of the King of MOROCCO to the King of ENGLAND.

When these our Letters shall be so happy as to come to your Majesty's sight, I wish the Spirit of the righteous God may so direct your Mind, that you may joyfully embrace the Message I send, presenting to you the means of exalting the Majesty of God, and your own Reward amongst Men. The Regal power allotted to us makes us common Servants to our Creator; then, of those People whom we govern: So that observing the Duties we owe to God, we deliver Blessings to the World, in providing for the Publick Good of our States, we magnifie the Honour of God, like the Cælestial Bodies, which though they have much veneration, yet serve only to the Benefit of the World. It is the excellency of our Office, to be Instruments, whereby happiness is delivered unto the Nations. Pardon me, Sir, This is not to instruct, (for I know I speak to one of a more clear and quick sight than myself) but I speak this, because God hath pleased to grant me a happy Victory over some part of those rebellious Pyrates, that have so long molested the peaceful Trade of Europe; and hath presented further occasion to root out the Generation of those who have been so pernicious to the good of our Nations: I mean, since it hath pleased God to be so auspicious to our beginnings in the Conquest of Salla, that we might join and proceed in hope of like success in the War against Tunis, Algier, and other Places (Dens and Receptacles for the inhumane Villanies of those who abhor Rule and Government.) Herein whilst we interrupt the Corruption of malignant Spirits of the World, we shall glorifie the great God; and perform a Duty that will shine as glorious as the Sun and Moon, which all the Earth may see and reverence: A Work that shall ascend as sweet as the Perfume of the most precious Odours, in the Nostrils of the Lord; A Work grateful and happy to Man: A Work whose Memory shall be revered so long as there shall be any that delight to hear the Actions of Heroick and Magnanimous Spirits; that shall last as long as there be any remaining amongst Men that love and honour the Piety and Virtue of Noble Minds. This Action I here willingly present to you, whose Piety and Virtues equal the Greatness of your Power, that we, who are Servants to the Great and Mighty GOD, may hand in hand triumph in the glory which this Action presents unto us. Now because the Islands which you govern have been ever famous for the Unconquered Strength of their Shipping, I have sent this my trusty Servant and Ambassador, to know whether in your Princely wisdom you shall think fit to assist me with such Forces by Sea, as shall be answerable to those I provide by Land: which if you please to grant, I doubt not but the Lord of Hosts will protect and assist those that Fight in so glorious a Cause. Nor ought you to think this strange, that I, who much reverence the Peace and Accord of Nations, should exhort to a War. Your great Prophet CHRIST JESUS was the Lion of the Tribe of JUDAH, as well as the Lord and Giver of Peace: Which may signifie unto you, that he which is a Lover and Maintainer of Peace, must always appear with the terror of his Sword, and wading through Seas of Blood, must arrive to Tranquillity. This made JAMES your Father of Glorious Memory, so happily renowned amongst all Nations. It was the most noble Fame of your Princely Virtues, which resounds to the utmost Corners of the Earth, that perswaded me to invite you to partake of that Blessing, wherein I boast my self most happy. I wish GOD may heap the Riches of his Blessing on you, increase your Happiness with your Days, and hereafter Perpetuate the Greatness of your Name in Ages.

Such was the Letter of that King; whose motion in all probability might have took effect, had not the Troubles, which not long after brake out in Scotland, put off the design. And therefore laying by the thoughts of his future purposes, let us take a view of the Revenues and Forces of this mighty Empire; before the late distractions made it less considerable. And first for the Revenues of it, the Xeriffs are the absolute Lords of the whole Estate, and of his Subjects Goods and Bodies. The tenth and first Fruits of all sorts of Fruits, Corn and Cartel, he demands of course; though many times contented in the name of the first fruits, with one in twenty. The fifth part of a Ducat he receiveth for every Acre of Land throughout his Dominions; the other four parts for every Fire, and as much for every Head, whether Male or Female, which is above fifteen years of age. In Merchandise he receiveth of every Native two in the hundred, of an Alien ten; and hath a large Impost also upon every Mill. When any of his greater Officers or Judges die, he is sole Heir of all their Goods; and yet advanceth great Sums by the sale of those Offices. And in the levying of such Taxes as are extraordinary, he useth to demand more than he means to take; that the People finding him content to abate somewhat of his Due, may think themselves to be fairly dealt with.

As for their Forces, it is evident in matter of Fact, that Abdulla the first, at the siege of Mazagen, a Town held by the Portugals, An. 1562. had no less then 20000 Men; and that Abdel-Melech at the Battel of Alcazar Guex, against King Sebastian, had 40000 Horse, and 80000 Foot, besides Voluntaries, and wild Arabians; it being supposed that he might have raised 20000 Horse more (notwithstanding the strong part which was made against him) had he thought it necessary. It is said also that Abdulla kept in constant pay 60000 Horse of which 15000 were quartered in the Realm of Sus, 25000 in Morocco, and the other 20000 in the Kingdom of Fesse: out of which he called 5000 of the best and ablest for the guard of his Person, well mounted, and as richly furnished. Besides these he hath Bodies of Horse in continual readiness, maintained according to the manner of the Turks Timariots: and by Pensions given amongst the Chiefs of the Arabians, who live like Outlaws in the Mountains, and up and down in the Skirts of this Country, is furnished at his need with Supplies from them. Well stored with Ammunition also, there being 46 Quintals of Gunpowder laid up monthly in his famous Arsenal at Morocco: and yet not able to stay long (not above 3 Months) upon any action, in regard that all his Souldiers live on his daily allowance; which maketh them, when his Provisions are consumed, to dissolve and scatter. I can give no account of the Prince since the time in which the Author Wrote.

The ISLES of BARBARY.

THE ISLES of BARBARY, which make up the fifth and last part thereof, are situate near the African shores of the Mediterranean, assigned by Ptolemy to the Province of Africa Propria. In number sixteen: 1. Hydras, 2. Calatbe, 3. Draconus, now called Chelbi, 4. Egymnus, by Strabo called Egynarus, and now Gaietta, 5. Larunessa, now Mollium, 6. Lapedusa, now Lampedusa, 7. Mesyrus, 8. Pontia, 9. Gaia; all of little note. 10. Insula Glauconus, with a City of the same name in it, now called Goxa, and subject to the Knights of Malta; 11. Etbusa, by some called Egusa, and consequently mistaken for Egates, which lieth near Sicily. Of more note are the five that follow: Viz.

1. COSTRA, now called Pantalania, equally distant from Africk and the Isle of Sicily, 60 miles from each. In length about thirty miles, and in breadth not above ten: Mountainous for the most part, and full of black kind of Stone, the Soil not very proper for Corn, and void of Rivers; but plentiful of Figs, Melons, and Cotton-Wool; well stored with Kine and Oxen, but without Horses. The People Poor; by Religion Christians, and subject to the King of Spain. Very good Swimmers of both Sexes, and in their speech and habit differing from the Mors. It hath a Town in it of the same name with the Island, situate on the Sea side in the Northern part of it; defended with a very strong Castle. On this Island the 13 of July 1586. there was a Sea fight between 3 English Ships and 11 Spanish Gallies and 2 Frigates, in which the Spaniards were sufficiently beaten: but so few English, being Turkey Merchants heavy Laden, that none of them taken. This was the first Fleet the Dutch Company (then incorporated) sent into the Mediterranean Sea, before this time they traded with single Ships. This fight lasted 5 hours; yet the English lost but 2 Men and one Wounded. Hackl. T. 2. p. 288.

2. CERCINA, now with little difference called Carchana, situate near the Coast of Africk, at the entrance (as it were) of the lesser Syrtis: in length twenty five miles, in breadth half as much, but in some places not above five. Exceeding fruitful in old times, able to furnish (as they did) the wants of Cicero and his Army, when he warred in Africk; Magna frumenti numero Cercinæ invento, naves onerarias, quantum ibi satis magna copia, complet, atque in castra ad Casertem mittit, are the words of the History. It hath a Town of the same name. Of no great note in way of Story, but for an handsome piece of Wit here shewed by Annibal; who flying from Carthage, met here some Merchants of that City, who had there some Shipping in the Haven; and standing in some doubt, lest by their discovery of his flight, he might be pursued, pretended a Sacrifice to Hercules the Tyrian Deity, to which he invited all the Sailors, and borrowed all their Sails to set up a Tent for their Entertainment; which having got into his hands, and leaving them asleep, he made on for Asia; secure enough not to be pursued, until out of danger.

3. LOTOPHAGITIS, now called Zebby, and by some Gerbe, is situate in the bottom of the Bay of Tripolis, divided from the Main Land by a narrow Ford. The Island full of Bogs and Marishes, without other Water, and in the midst of it somewhat hilly; indifferently fruitful, yeilding Dates, Olives, Barley, Mill, and the like Commodities; inhabited by 30000 Men, dwelling in low Cottages, and but simply apparelled: it had in it anciently two Cities, 1. Meninx, which sometimes gave name unto the Island, called Meninx by some elder Writers. 2. Gerrapolis; both now destroyed: instead whereof there is now one of more note than the rest, called by the same name with the Island, and fortified with a very strong Castle. Subject unto the Turks, but governed by a poor King of its own. Both Fort and Island taken by the Christian Fleet, in the year 1559. for the King of Spain, to whom Caravanus the King thereof did submit himself, conditioning to pay the yearly Tribute of 6000 Crowns, one Camel, four Ostriches, four Sparrow-Hawks, and four Faulcons. But the Christians were scarce warm in their new possession, when besieged in the Castle by Paul Bassa, to whom after some extremities they were fain to yield; there perishing in this unfortunate Action, by Sword, Famine, and Sicknes, 15000 Christians.

4. GAULOS, or GAUDUS, by the inhabitants called Gaudica, is distant about five miles from the Isle of Malta; to the Knights whereof it doth belong: given to them by the bounty of Charles the Fifth. The Island 30 miles in compass, well watered, and very fruitful. So great an Enemy to Serpents, and all venomous Creatures, that they neither breed here, nor will live here, brought from other places. The People Christians, but they speak the same Language with the neighbouring Saracens. The chief Town is of the same name with the Island, beautified with a capacious Haven, lying betwixt the West and South, and strongly fortified. Cruelly pillaged by the Turks in the year 1551. who carried hence 3000 Souls into endless Thraldome.

5. MALTA, the chief of the African Islands, lieth betwixt Tripolis in Barbary, and the Isle of Sicily; distant from this last about 60 miles, and from the other 180. In circuit about 60 miles, in length 20, and in breadth 12. Situate in the Beginning of the fourth Clime, and eight Parallel; so that the longest day in Summer is but 14 hours.

Anciently it was called Melite, and by that name occurreth not only in Ptolemy and other Writers, but also in the Book of the Acts, in the Story of St. Paul's Shipwreck; this being the place where he and all his company were cast on Land; in memory whereof was built a little Chapel in the place of his Landing. So called most probably, ἀπό τῆς μέλιτος, from the abundance of Honey which it yielded in former times; Cicero charging it on Verres, that he came home loaded with 400 measures of Honey, and store of Melitenian Raiments; Fam non quero unde 400 amphoras mellis habueris, unde tantum Melitenium Vestium, saith that famous Orator. The joyning of which two together, declare that he had robbed the same place for both; this Island being a near Neighbour of Sicily, which Verres governed then as Prator. Nor is it strange, that an Island of the Coast of Africa, and using for the most part the Phenician or Punick Language, should borrow its Appellation from the Greek: many of that Nation coming thither from the Isle of Sicily, and inhabiting here, and the whole Island sometimes subject to the power of Sicilian Greeks, though for the most part under the command of the State of Carthage.

It is situate wholly on a Rock, being not above three foot deep in earth; by consequence of no great fertility, the want of which is supplied with the plenty of Sicily. Yet have they here no small store of Pomegranates, Citrons, Oranges, Melons, and other excellent Fruits, both for taste and colour. They have also great abundance of Cotton-Wool (Gossypium the Latinists call it) which they sow as we do our Corn; the growth and ordering of which Wooll, hath been shewn already, when we were in Syria. For the commodity of this Wool, and the Cloth made of it, the Romans had this Island in great esteem; thinking themselves happy when they gained it from the Carthaginians. Montieur Thevenot, says this Island lyes low, and is only a white soft Rock, fit for building and Lime, but yeilds too soon to the South East Winds that eat it away. The Earth on the Rock is little and stony, yet its product is excellent Mellons, Figs and Grapes: Their Cottons they plant, and thrive well; but their Corn comes from Sicily. In Summer the heat is not to be endured, and the Musketoos, flies, at Night as insufferable. A Serene wholsom Air and no Winter. By Order of the Viceroy of Naples in 1590 a Calculation was made, and they found in the Bourg, the Old Town, Valetta, the Isle of St. Michael, and 36 Villa Isles 27000 Men, besides the Knights and their Servants. The Natives speak the Arabian Tongue; but the Italian is very Comon. It has 2 great and safe Havens, opening to the East North East, which are secured by Castles and strong Forts. Tavern p. 78. It has an Arsenal, in which are Arms for 20000 Men, kept in good Order. In the year 1692 this Island and Sicily suffered so much by an Earthquake, both at the same time, that it was feared they would be both destroyed. This happened January 11. N. S.

The natural Inhabitants of it are said to be churlish and uncivil; of the African Language and Complexion, but Followers of the Church of Rome, the Religion whereof these Knights are sworn to defend. The Women fair, but hating company, and going covered. The whole number of both Sexes, supposed to be 20000, possessed of 90 Villages, and four Cities. Places of note, 1. Malta, so called by the name of the Island, in the middle of which it is situate; built on an hill, but counted of no great importance, the strength and safety of the Island lying in the defence of the shores and Havens. 2. St. Hermes, a strong Castle at the point of a long Languet, or Tongue of Rock, thrusting out betwixt the two best Havens, both which it notably defendeth. Took by the Turks, Ann 1565. but at no cheaper rate than 2000 shot of Cannon, and the loss of 10000 of their Men. 3. Valetta, situate on the same Languet, not far from the Castle of St. Hermes, (or rather lying close unto it) extended the whole breadth of the said Languet, from the one Sea to the other; and so commanding both the Havens. Built since the departure of the Turks, impregnable fortified, and called thus by the name of Valette the Great Master, who so gallantly repulsed their Fury. In this Town the Great Master hath his Palace, and the Knights their several Alberges or Seminaries; all very fair and handsome Buildings. 4. Burgo, a little Town or City on another Languet, lying in the Eastern Haven; at the extremity of which Promontory in a demy-Island stands the strong Castle of 5. St. Angelo, built on a Rock, opposite to Valette, on the other side of the Haven, and found impregnable by the Turks; who in vain besieged it. 6. Isoia, a small City, and better deserving the name of a Town, situate in another Promontory on the South of the other, defended on the West-side by a strong Platform, at the point of the Foreland; and on the East-side by the impregnable Castle of St. Michael; in vain assaulted by the Turks, who on their ill success at the Siege hereof, gave over the Enterprize, and sailed home.

The People of this Island originally were a Tyrian or Phenician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with some Greek Plantations, coming thither out of Sicily, as before was said. For the most part dependant on the Fortunes of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till subdued by the Saracens: by the Spaniards taken from the Moors, and by Charles the Fifth given to the Knights of Rhodes, not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, An. 1522. These Knights are in number 1000; of whom 500 are always to be resident in the Island. The other 500 are dispersed through Christendom, at their several Seminaries in France, Spain, Italy, and Germany; and at any Summons are to make their personal Appearance. These Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number seven, viz, one of France in general, one of Auvergn, one of Provence, one of Castile, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany; over every one of which, they have a Grand Prior, who in the Country where he liveth, is of great reputation. An eighth Seminary they had in England, till the suppression of it by Henry the Eighth; yet they have some one or other, to whom they give the Title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the original and riches of these Knights, we have spoken when we were in Palestine; now a word or two only of their places, and the Election of their Great Master. None are admitted into the Order, but such as can bring a Testimony of their Gentry for six Descents; and when the Ceremonies of their admission (which are many) are performed, they swear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiors, to live upon the Revenues of their Order only, and withal to live chastly. Of these there be 16 of great Authority (Counsellors of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Crosses; out of whom the Officers of their order, as the Marshal, the Admiral, the Chancellour, &c. are chosen: and who, together with the Master, punish such as are convict of any Crime, 1. by degrading him, 2. by strangling him; and 3. by throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Master is dead, they suffer no Vessel to go out of this Island till another be Elected, lest the Pope should intrude on their Election; which is performed in this manner: The several Seminaries nominate two Knights, and two also are nominated for the English: these 16 from amongst themselves choose eight; these eight choose a Knight, a Priest, and a Friar-servant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Crosses, elect the Great Master. The Great Master being thus chosen, is stiled (though but a Friar) The most Illustrious and most Reverend Prince, The Lord Prior, N. N. Great Master of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, Prince of Malta, Malta, Gaules, and Goza. Far different, I assure you, from that of the first Masters of this Order, who called themselves only Servants to the poor Servitors of the Hospital of Jerusalem; or that of the Master of the Temple, who was only entituled, The humble Minister of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Island is conceived to yield to the Great Master the yearly Rent of 1000 Ducats, the greatest part whereof ariseth out of Cotton-Wool: besides which, he hath towards the maintaining of his Estate, the tenth part of the Prizes which are won from the Turks; and certain thousands of Crowns yearly out of the Treasure of the Order, which is great and rich; and one of the best Commanders in every Nation. And for the securing of the Seas and securing of their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Soldiers, and to carry 16 pieces of Ordnance, with which they make Excursions many times to the Coasts of Greece.

And so much for BARBARY.

MOUNT ATLAS.

IN our way from Barbary to Libya Interior, we must pass over Mount Atlas, a ridge of Hills of exceeding great height, and of no small length. So high, that the top, or Summit of it, is above the Clouds, at least so high, that the eye of Man is not able to discern the top of it. Exstat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen Atlas (scilicet Herodotus) ita sublimis, ut ad illius verticem oculi mortaliū pervenire non possint. Yet notwithstanding, it is always covered with snow in the heats of Summer. Difficult of ascent, by reason of the sharp and craggy Precipices, which occur in many places of it; the rest were plainer and more even, of such wonderful steepness, that the Precipices of the Rocks seem the safer way. Full of thick Woods, and yeilding to the Countries on the North-side of it, the greatest part of the Rivers which refresh and moisten them: and where it bordereth on the proper, or Roman Africa, of such self-fertility, that it affordeth excellent fruits of its natural growth, not planted, grafted, or inoculated by the hand of Man. The beginning of it on the shores of the Western Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantick Ocean; in the 26 Degree and 30 Minutes of the Northern Latitude: and passing on directly Eastward, draw near unto the Borders of Egypt, part of Mauritania, or the Roman Libya, only interposing. It is now called Archija, and Montes Clari: And took the name of Atlas, from Atlas King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; feigned by the Poets to be turned into this Hill by Perseus, and the head of Medusa. Of the Daughters of this King, their golden Fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Hesperides, we have spoke already, though some remove the place of their habitation more into the West (then by us disposed of) and others into certain Islands of the Western Ocean, which we shall meet withal hereafter. He was said to have been a Man of such wonderful height, that the Heavens rested on his Shoulders; of which, when weary, he discharged his burthen on the Shoulders of Hercules. The ground of the fiction is either taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof seemeth to touch the Sky; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Astronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets; in which Knowledge he instructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentick description of it, take it thus from Virgil:

— Jamq; volans apicem & latera ardua cernis
Atlantis duri, Caelum qui vertice fulcit;
Atlantis, cinctum assidue cui nubibus atris
Pmiferum caput, & vento pulsatur & imbrī.
Nix humeros infusa tegit, tum flamina mento
Præcipiant sens, & glaci riget horri la barba.

Which may be Englisht in these words:

Then flying, he the top and sides descries
; Of Atlas, whose proud head supports the Skies.

Atlas, whose Piny head with Clouds inclos'd,
Is to the Storms of Wind and Rain expos'd.
Now hides the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with Ice o'er-grown.

The Nubian Geographer p. 75 tells us Near the Rise of this Mountain it is called Mount Dara, which exceeds most of the Mountains in the World in Height, Fertility, Length and plenty of its Castles and other Buildings. It begins from the West Ocean in the borders of the Kingdom of SUS to the South, and running East as far as Tripoli; where it ends: the most Eastern part of it being called Natsua. There is upon this Mountain above 70 Castles and Strong holds, The most inaccessible of which is Tanimal. This Mountain begins at Cape de Non, or Nao, in 28.40 Lat. between the Desarts of Zanbaga to the South and Tessit to the North; and running East to almost 15 Degrees of Long. it turns North East as far as the Borders of the Kingdom of Fesse, separating Tessit, Sus and Morocco on the West, from Biledulgerid to the East at 29 Degrees of Latitude, it turns North-East and divides Barbary to the North from Biledulgerid to the South: and tho' about Tripoli it takes the Name of Serviz, yet it continues its Course by various Turnings to the Red Sea, parting Nubia from Egypt, where the Nile crosseth it. It is called Giandel, and ends at Bugia on the Red Sea; yet the Author's account of its ending at Tripolis is not to be blamed, because there it grows very low, and those that begin there turn South till they meet with Mount Schuba, which runs parallel with Mount Atlas at the South of Biledulgerid till it Joyns with those that encompass the Kingdom of Gagaa on the West, South and East, and encompassing Nubia on the North West, and North, they pass South East to Bugia; the Nile cutting them above Ziquan in Egypt. It is still inhabited by the old Natural Africans, who speak their old Tongue and tho' they are Tributaries to the Arabians, are still under their own Princes; and some are perfectly free, and continue in the Pagan Idolatry of their Ancestors: this is also true of the other Mountainous Countries Leo p. 26: They worship the Sun and Fire, which have had stately Temples where the fires were never suffered to go out: They also worship'd each a distinct Planet. Mount Atlas beginneth at the Atlantick, and rangeth East to the Borders of Egypt, about 190 miles, at its greatest distance from the Mediterranean Sea, p. 30: They are exceeding cold and baren, and yeild but little Corn; they are covered also with Woods replenish'd with wild Beasts, and produce most of the Rivers, that water the North of Africa, whose Springs in Summer are very cold. The North sides of it are covered with such deep Snows, that if they continue there too long in the Winter, they destroy both Men and Beast; but in the Summer they yeild good Pasture, p. 29 31. The Winter on it begins in October and ends in April.

OF LIBYA INTERIOR.

LIBYA INTERIOR is boundeth on the North, with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary and Cyrenaica; on the East, with Libya Marmarica, interposed betwixt it and Egypt, and part of Aethiopia Superior, or the Habassine Empire; on the South with Aethiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Negroes; and on the West with the main Atlantick Ocean.

The reason of the name we have seen before, given to this Country in regard of its countiguoulness and resemblance to the other Libya; or else because descended from the Children of Lebabin, by which that Country was first planted. For of King Lybs, or Queen Libya (the Daughter of Epachus, and Cassiope) and other the like fictions of the Greeks, I shall take no notice. Distinguished from the other by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main Land of Africa, the other being partly a Maritime Country.

Of the nature of the Soil and People we shall speak anon, when we come to take a view of its several parts. Look we on it now as it stood in the time of the Romans, when though not so well travelled, or discovered, as in these last times; yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and situation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns, than any of our late Writers have presented to us. The Rivers of most note, 1. Salathus, 2. Chusarus, 3. Ophiodus, 4. Noius, 5. Mussa, 6. Sobus, 7. Daradus, 8. Stachiris, and 9. Mathisobus; all of them paying tribute to the Western or Atlantick Ocean. Mountains of most note, 1. Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salathus, 2. Sagapula, which gives being to the River Sobus, 3. Rysadus, from whence Stachiris, 4. the Mountain called Deorum Currus (of which more anon) whence Mathisobus, and Mount Capus; out of which Daradus have there first Originals. Then there are, 5. Mount Ujurgala, and 6. Mount Gurginis, from the first of which the River Bagradas, and from the last that of Cynypbus do derive there waters: and Passing through the breaches of Atlas (of which these Mountains seem to be some dismembred Limbs) cross the whole breadth of the Roman Africk, to make themselves a way to the Mediterranean. Besides these, more within the Land we find the famous Rivers of Gir and Niger, of which the first maketh the two great Lakes of Nubia and Cheloidas: the second those as great, or greater, called Nigritis, and the Lake of Libya. Which makes me wonder by the way, that in a Country so well watered as this seems to be, our Modern Writers should complain of such want of water: as if there were neither Spring, nor River, nor Pond, nor Lake, nor any thing to moisten and refresh the Earth, but the Dews of Heaven, or some Pits of salt and brakish water, not worth the tasting. Ptolemy must either be mistaken, which I hardly think; or our late Travellers not so punctual in their Observations, which I rather credit: or else the Rivers which were here in the time of my Author, In his arenarum vastitatibus disperduntur, must be dried up and swallowed in these sandy Deserts, as Maginus telleth us; or finally there hath happened some later Conflagration than that of Phaeton, to which the want of water may be better attributed than it was to his. Of which thus the Poet:

Hinc facta est Libya, raptis humoribus aestu, Arida.

Which Geo. Sandys thus rendereth;

A Sandy Desert Libya then became,
Her full veins emptied by the thirsty flame.

Places of note and name in those elder times, 1. Salathus, on the River so named, 2. Bagaxi, 3. Jarziba, and 4. Babiba, all honoured with the name of Cities, 5. Gamara,

6. Gira, and Nigira, the Metropolis of their several Nations. Then there were two Havens of some good esteem, the one called Magnus Portus, the other Portus Perphosius, besides 43 other Towns and Cities (twelve of these on the banks of the River Niger) whose names and situation do occur in Ptolemy, which shews the Country not to be so uninhabitable and void of People, as was pretended by some other (but less diligent) Writers.

Nations of most note in it in the former times, were 1. the Getuli, on the back of Mauritania, a resolute and unconquered people, Genus insuperabile bello, as we find in Virgil. 2. the Garamantes, dwelling South of Cyrenaica, and giving name to a large and spacious Territory, called Vallis Garamantica, supposed to be the most remote Nation towards the South, as the Indians were towards the East; whence we have ultra Garamantas & Indos, in another Poet; 3. the Pyrrhai, an Ethiopic Nation on the South of the River Gir; 4. the Nigritæ, originally Ethiopian, also inhabiting on the North of the River Niger, 5. the Odranguli, of the same original extraction, possessing the Country between the Mountains Capha and Tbala; 6. the Perorsori, dwelling near the Hills called Deorum Currus; 7. the Minaci, at the foot of Mount Tbala; 8. the Nubæ, on the West of Vallis Garamantica; 9. the Derbi, dwelling on the West of the Hill Aranga; and 10. the Pjylli, placed by Ptolemy amongst the Inhabitants of Cyrene, but so near the Borders of this Country, and so far from the Civilities of those Nations which conversed either with Rome or Carthage, that they may more properly be thought to belong to this. Of a Nature so venomous, that they could poison a Snake. Inasmuch, that when their Wives were delivered; they would throw their Children amongst a bed of Serpents, supposing that child to be born of an adulterate bed, the very smell of whose Body would not drive away a whole brood of the like poisonous Vermin. Others there were of less note, which that Author calleth Minores Gentes; many in number, of small fame, and therefore not material to be here inserted; those of most note, the Africæ, (whom some Authors call the Gampaphantes) honoured with the Attribute of Gens Magna, the greatest as it seems of those lesser Nations. None of them of much note in the way of Story, except they were these Libyans, which are so famous in Herodotus, for an Expedition they made against the South-Wind. For when this Wind, blowing abroad the Hills and Deserts of Sand, had dried up those many pools and waters they had among them; they to revenge this injury, by common consent armed themselves, and went to fight against him. But they took not the South-Wind unprepared. For he mustered up his forces, and encountered them with such a brave volley of Sand, that he overwhelmed and slew them all. A better Friend was the North-Wind to the Citizens of Rhegium in Italy, and better was he rewarded for it: for having scattered a mighty Fleet, which Dionisius prepared against them, he was by the Common-Council made free of their City. That part of Cæsar's War which was managed here, we shall hereafter meet with on another occasion.

Thus having took a view of the state of this Country, as it stood of old; we will next look upon it in its present condition; as comprehending the whole Provinces of 1. Biledulgerid or Numidia; 2. Libya Deserta, or Sarara; and 3. a great part of that Country which is now called Terra Nigritarum. But because the greatest part of this last Country is to come under another Account; we will here only take the two first into consideration.

1. NUMIDIA.

NUMIDIA, is bounded on the East, with Egypt; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with Mount Atlas, which parteth it from Barbary and Cyrene; on the South, with Libya Deserta.

It was thus first called by John Leo, an African Writer, to whose description of all Africa we are much beholding; because of that resemblance which the People of it have to the old Numidians; which is after the Custom of the Nomades, living without Houses, under their Wagons and Carts, as Lucan testifieth of them, thus:

*Nulla domus, planstris habitant, migrare per arva
Mos, atque errantes circumvecitare Penates.*

They dwell in Wains not Houses; and do stray Through Fields, and with them lead their Gods each way.

And worthily may they owe their Names to them, from whom they borrow so much of their Nature, for the People to this day spend their lives in Hunting, and stay but three or four days in a place, as long as the Grass will serve the Camels. This is the cause why this Country is so ill Peopled, the Towns so small in themselves, and so remote from others. An example hereof is Taffer, a great City in their esteem, which yet containeth but 400 Households and hath no Neighbours within 300 Miles of it.

The Country aboundeth with Dates, whence it is called Dactylorum Regio, and in the Arabick, Biledulgerid, which signifieth also a Date-region. These Dates (to speak properly) the Fruit of the Palm-trees, usually growing in hot Countries, of which some are Male, some Female; the first bringing forth only Flowers, the other Fruit: and yet the Male so beneficial to the increase of the Dates, that unless a Flowred Bough of the Male be ingrafted into the Female, the Dates never prove good, in case they bear any Dates at all, as before was noted. This Fruit is the chief Diet of the People; but this sweet Meat hath sower Sauce, for it commonly rotteth their Teeth betimes. As for the Stones of these Dates, they feed their Goats with them, whereby they grow Fat and yield store of Milk. The Air hereof of so found a nature, that if a Man be troubled with the French Disease, he shall there, without any course of Physick find a present Remedy: The capital City lies 500 English Miles to the South West from Tunis, and something more from Algiers to the South East Ortelius. Leo Africanus saith, it was called by the Antients, Numidia; and that the Arabians gave it the new name. It beginneth East at Elocat, a Hundred Miles West of Egypt; to the West he bordereth it to the Atlantick Ocean, including Teffet in it. The natural Inhabitants of this Country are said to be a base and vile People, Thieves, Murderers, Treacherous, and ignorant of all things; feeding most commonly on Dates, Barley and Carrion; accounting Bread a Diet for their Festival days. But the Arabians, who are intermingled with them, in most part of the Country, affirmed to be (comparatively with the Natives) Ingenious, Liberal and Civil. The Garments of these Numidians, of the coarsest Cloth, so short, that they cover not half the Body: the richer sort, distinguished by a Jacket of Blew Cotton with wide Sleeves. Their Steeds are Camels, which they ride on without Stirrups or so much as a Saddle, a Leather thrust through an hole made in the Nose of the Camel, serves them for a Bridle; and to save the charge of Spurs, they make use of a Goad. Their Religion Mahometism, to which perverted (Christianity having once had some footing here) in the year 710. the Azanaghi and other People of those parts then subdued by the Saracens; who held them for a Nation of so little reckoning, that no Man of account amongst them would descend so low as to be their Prince; but left them to be ruled as in former times, by the Chiefs or Heads of their several Clans. They are jealous of their Women to an implacable Rage, and will never marry a Whore. Leo Afric. p. 20. Those that live on the borders of Tremesen and Tunis, being in the Pay of those Kings, are more rich and noble than the rest, but as Thievish as they, addicted much to Poetry, and fond of their Women, who Paint to attract more their Love and Regard. Leo, p. 24. The Soil of this Country is generally Sandy. The Moors began the Conquest of this Country in the year of Christ 710.

The chief River which is left, hath the name of Dara, and possibly enough may be the Daradus of Ptolemy. The rest which are mentioned in that Author, rising out of Mount Atlas, and falling headily this way, finding these barren Wildernesses to afford them the readiest Channels, are trained along by the allurements of the Sands, and are either swallowed up in great Lakes; or being too liberal to the thirsty Sands in their way to the Sea, die at the last for Thirst in the midst of the Desarts.

The Principal of their Provinces (if capable of a distinction into better and worse) 1. DARA; more cultivated than the rest, because of the River running thorough it, whence it hath its name: 250 Miles in length, indifferently fruitful, where the River doth overflow and water it; and of so different a nature from all the rest, that here the Country People have some scattered Villages, the better sort their several Castles. 2. PESCARA, so called from the chief Town of it: exceedingly infested with Scorpions; the sting whereof is present death. 3. FIGHIG, so called from the chief Town also; inhabited by an industrious and witty People (in respect of the rest) some of which betake themselves to Merchandise; some to the study of the Law, which they study at Fesse, and grow rich upon it. 4. TEGORARIN, a large Region, and well inhabited better than any except Dara; as having in it 50 Castles or Gentlemens Houses, and 100 Villages. The People wealthy, in regard of the great Trade which they drive with the Negroes; and pretty good Husbands in manuring their Land, on which they are forced to lay much Soil; and will therefore let some of it Rent-free to Strangers, reserving only the dung of themselves and their Cattel. 5. BILEDULGERID, specially so called, abundantly fruitful in Dates, whence it had the name; but destitute of Corn, by reason of the extreme drinels of the Soil: and yet hath in it many Towns of good Note among them. of less Note, Teffet. This City lies towards the Atlantick Ocean, containing (with Leo Africanus) 400 Families, and seated 300 Miles from any habitable place; it was anciently Built by the Numidians in the borders of Lybia (Nigritia) and Walled with Bricks dried in the Sun in a Sandy Plain, which yields some Dates, Mill-Seed and Barley, on which they live and pay Tribute to the wandering Arabs. They Trade into the Negro Countries, Guzula. They are Black and Unlearned, and inured betimes to hard Labour, Ibid. p. 266. English. 7. Segelmess. This City is regardable for its greatness and number of Inhabitants, and a Center of Trade, having delightful Gardens and beautiful Meadows. It has no Castle, but is full of Houses, all built upon a River full of Water, which swells in the Summer as the Nile doth, and makes the Fields as fruitful as Egypt. Nub. p. 74. The name of the River is Zis, which springing from Mount Atlas, Waters many considerable places above and below Segelmess: the reason of its increase is the melting of the Snow on Mount Atlas in the Summer. But then Segelmess stands in a Land of Rivers; to the East fall the Gir, and two other small Rivers; to the West the Dara, and two more that have no Names; all which to the South of it unite their Streams in the Gir. From Segelmess to Sighamat Varichae is almost eight days journey: To Dara is three days journey West. Nub. p. 78. says it is 13 days journey from Fesse, which stands to the N. W. beyond the Atlas. In the year of the Hegyra, Five hundred and thirty, the Marubetens travelled from Grand Cairo to Segelmess, through the frightful Desarts of America in 41 days, though they found no Water in three or four days sometimes. Nub. p. 160. This Voyage was performed in the year of Christ 1147. Leo Africanus p. 269. The Province stretcheth from N. to S. by the River Zis 120 Miles. On the W. it hath Dara, on the N. Fesse and Tunis, on the E. Tigorain, and on the S. Lybia, now Nigritia. The Inhabitants are mostly barbarous Africans. It was subject to the King of Fesse, and after to its own Princes; the last of which being slain in a Rebellion, the City of Segelmessa was destroyed, and is now desolate. Some suppose it built by the Romans; the Africans call it Bieri: It stood upon a Plain, and was environ'd with a high and strong Wall, part of which is still remaining. The Moors sack'd the old City, and then rebuilt it, and it grew rich by the Negro Trade. The Air is temperate, but unhealthful in Winter. 8 Zeb. 9. Tebelbeti. And 10. Fessin, so called from the chiefest of their Towns and Villages.

Towns of most Note, both now and in former times, besides those spoken of before, 1. Timugadi, in the Province of Dara, the Birth-place of Mahomet Ben Amet and his three Sons, the Founders of the Xeriffian Empire. 2. Tassilette, in the said Province, to which place Mahomet the second of these Sons, and second King of Morocco of that Family, confined his elder Brother Amet, having took him Prisoner, Anno 1544. 3. Tiffer, a great Town of 400 Houses, but so poorly neighboured, that there is no other inhabited place within 300 Miles of it; but of that before. 4. Techont, the Inhabitants whereof are very courteous to Strangers whom they entertain at Free cost; and chuse rather to Marry their Daughters to them, than to any of the Natives. This City was built by the Numidians upon a Hill, near a River, over which it hath a Draw-bridge. On three sides the Walls are Freestone, and a Rock on the fourth; it stands Five hundred Miles from the Mediterranean Sea to the S. and Three hundred from Tegorom to the S. E. and may contain Two thousand five hundred Families. The Houses are built with Brick dried in the Sun, but the Temples more stately. They exchange Dates for Corn with Constantina. 'Twas then subject to the King of Tunis, and paid 50000 Ducats Tribute a year; But the Governour Levied 130000. Leo Af. p. 275. 5. Eboacab, the most Eastern Town in all this Country, distant about 100 Miles from the Borders of Egypt. 6. Debris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for the Wells or Fountains of the Sun: The Water whereof being Luke-warm at the Sun-rising, cooled more and more till Noon, and was then very cold, and so continued until Midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter; as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hottest when that was farthest off, and cold when nearest. 7. Masuche, seated on a Rock, Garison'd by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Marius in the prosecution of that War. 8. Cupsa, the chief City of all this Tract, said to be built by Heracles; but questionless of very great strength; Anguibus arenisque vallata, made inaccessible (saith the Historian) by the thick Sands, and a multitude of Serpents which were harboured in them; but easily forced by Marius in his Wars with Jugurth, and utterly destroyed by Cæsar in his War against Juba.

It seems by this, that those People neighbouring Mount Atlas, were much at the disposal of the Kings of Mauritania, in the times foregoing; and so they have been also in these later times. For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of Wisdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saracens had not long possessed themselves of those parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698, but within Twelve years (An. 710.) they subdued this Country, and planted their Religion in it, though not themselves. Nor was Amet, the first Xeriffe of Morocco, warm in that Estate, when he thought it best for him to secure himself in it by the Conquest of this: to whose Successors, the Chiefs of the Tribes hereof render some acknowledgments.

2. LIBYA DESERTA.

LIBYA DESERTA, is bounded on the North with Numidia or Biledulgerid; towards the South with the Land of Negroes wholly; and on the West with Gulata, another Province of these Negroes, interposed betwixt it and the Atlantic.

The reason of the name of Libya we have had before. To which Deserta was added upon very good reasons, as well to difference it from the other Libya, a Province of Egypt, as to express the barren and sandy condition of it; in which respect by the Arabians called Sarra, signifying in their Language a rude and uninhabitable Desert, as this Country is so truly such, that Men may travel in it eight days together without finding Water, or seeing any Tree, and no Grass at all. The Water which they have is drawn out of Pits, exceeding Brackish; and many times those Pits so covered with the Sands, that Men die for Thirst: the Merchants therefore carrying their Water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, and drink a Water which they wring out of their Guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as these Deserts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Resse and Tremesen, trading to Agades and Tambutum, in the Land of Negroes. Leo p. 34. saith, it Raineth in the middle of October, and continueth till February; during all which time they have wonderful plenty of Grass and Milk, and great Lakes of Water; and therefore they travel in, or soon after those times of Rain, to the Land of Negroes, through these Deserts.

The People differ not much from the Numidians in Shape or Qualities; but if a worse Quality, it must be the Libyan. They did once worship a God called Pasaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then set at liberty, to say these words, viz. Pasaphon is a great God; which the simple People hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine Honours. Converted at last to the Christian Faith, they remained a while in the profession of the Gospel: Exterminated by the Saracens, about the year 710. who having added Numidia or Biledulgerid to their former Conquests, planted their Superstitions in this Country also.

This Country is divided, (as others into Provinces) into five great Deserts, to which those of less Note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the borders of Gualata, (interposed betwixt it and the Atlantic Ocean) and extending Eastward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza; having on the South Gualata and Tombutum in the Land of Negroes; so destitute of Water, that there is one Pit only at the end of each hundred Mile, brackish and unwholesome; and in the Deserts of Azaoa and Araoan, which are parts of this, but one in 150 or 200 Miles riding.

2. ZUENZIGA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eastward, to the Desert of Targa: bounded on the North with Segelmess and Tebelbaty, Numidian Provinces; and on the South, with the Desert, and Ghir and Guber. So void of Water, (especially in that part thereof which is called Goguden) that in Nine days Travel there is not so much as one drop to be seen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended Eastward to the Desert of Ighidi, and reaching from Tegerarin in the North, to the Desert of Agades in the South; the best Conditioned part of all this Country, well Watered, of a temperate Air, and a Soil reasonably Fruitful. In length from North to South 300 Miles, and liberally stored with Manna, which they gather into little Vessels, and carry to Agades to sell; mingled in Water, or with Pottage, it is very cooling; and drank of in their Feasts, as a special Dainty.

4. LEMBETA, extended from the Deserts of Ighidi, unto that of Bordea.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of these two there is little to be said in several, but that this last was lately discovered by one Hmar, a guide to a Caravan of Merchants; who blinded with the Sands, wandered out of his way, and causing Sand to be given him at every Twenty Miles end, found by the smell at last, that they began to draw nigh some inhabited place; and told them of it Forty Miles before they came to it.

Cities of Note we hope for none, where we find no Water. Of such as go for Cities here, the most considerable, 1. Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, resembling Marble; which the Inhabitants, being Twenty days distant from any Habitation, and consequently many times in danger to die for famine, exchange for Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutum, who come hither for it. Much troubled with the South-Wind, which doth so drive the Sands upon them, that it causeth many of them to lose their sight. 2. Huaden, or Hoden, a known resting place, and a great refreshment to the Merchant in the midst of these Deserts. 3. Guargata, on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot Water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building, and inhabited by a wealthy people. 4. Toberaum, of little note, but that it serveth for a Stage or halting-place to the weary Traveller. Of which kind there are said to be others at the extremities or ends of each several Desert; the Harvans of such men as sail in those Sandy Seas; but not else observable.

Nor is there much, if any thing observable of them in the way of Story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerors, either Greeks or Romans, much of the Country possessed by Arabian Colonies, (men fit enough to plant in such barbarous Nations) at such time as the Savacens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Country since, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their several Clans or Families; who as they know no Law themselves, so do the people shew as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions, differing but little from brute Beasts, more than in shape and speech. The vast greatness of these Deserts, and the Barbarity of its Inhabitants, were the Causes that the Ancients knew of no People beyond them to the South; so that this is the Boundary of All the old Geography; what lies further that way having been since discovered by the Arabians and the Portuguese.

And so much for LIBIA INTERIOR.

O F

TERRA NIGRITARUM.

TERRA NIGRITARUM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the East, with Aethiopia Superior; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with Libya Deserta; and on the South, with the Aethiopic Ocean and part of Aethiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigritæ, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolemy, and they so named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

This Vast Tract of Land extending from East to West on both sides of the Niger, and upon the Rivers that fall into it to the North and South, is bounded by Desolate Sandy Deserts, uninhabited for want of Water, which is not to be found but at great distances, once in 5, 6 or 14 days Journey, and therefore carried by the Caravans from Place to Place. Nubiensis, p. 7. There are no Fruits to be found in it but Dates, which are brought by the Inhabitants of Vareclan from Segelmessa, or Zab. On the Banks of the Niger there grow Indian Reeds or Canes, and Woods of Ebony, Box, Sallows, Tamarisk, &c. of great extent, in which the Negroes and their Cattle Shelter themselves in the heat of the day from the Scorplings of the Sun. In these Woods are also Lyons, Leopards, Deer, Hares, white Weasels, and Hedgehogs: And the Niger affords excellent Fish of severall sorts. Bows and Arrows, and Clubs of Ebony are their Arms, which they use with great Dexterity and Courage: Their Bows and Arrows are made of Recus; their Houses are built of Earth and small Timbers, and their Bravery lies in Necklaces and Bracelets, and going almost naked by the excessive heat of the Country. Near the Cities they plant Onions, Gourds, and Mellons, which grow to great Bulk; they have little Corn, besides Gumma Wheat, of which they make their Drink; and Camels Flesh and Fish is their best Flesh-Meat. Nubiensis p. 9. Leo Africanus, p. 2. bounds this Country East on Egypt or Gagaa, West on Gualata and the Atlantick Ocean. The truth is, the Ocean runs in from 5 to 35 Degrees of Longitude, and was then the utmost Bound they heard of by the Merchants of Tombuto; for in Truth it extends much further even to the River Zaire.

The Country very hot, by reason of its situation under the Torrid Zone; yet very well inhabited, full of people, and in some places always green: well watered, and exceeding fruitful, especially in those parts which lie within the compass of the overflowings of the River Niger; and on the further side of the River Sanaga: abundantly well stored both with Corn, Cattel and Garden-ware for the use of their Kitchens; well Wooded, and those Woods well furnished with Elephants and other Beasts, both wild and tame. Their greatest wants (but such a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-Trees, few of which they have; and those they have, bear one kind of Fruit only, which is like the Chestnut, but somewhat bitterer. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greatest welfare consisting in the overflowings of Niger; as that of Egypt in the inundations of Nile. In some parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and silver; very fine and pure: so that had not the Portugals affected the honour of discovering New Worlds, as much as Wealib, they might have made as rich a Factory here, as the Indies.

The Inhabitants, till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the most part so rude and barbarous, that they seem'd to want that use of Reason which is peculiar unto Man; of little Wit, and destitute of all Arts and Sciences; prone to Luxury, and for the greatest part Idolaters, though not without some small admixture of Mahometans. When the Portugals first sailed into these Coasts, the People hereof took the Ships for great Birds with white Wings: and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were casually painted on the Beaks of the Ships were the Eyes by which they saw how to direct themselves in their course. Guns seemed to them, for their hideous noise, to be the work of the Devil; and for Bag-pipes, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had been permitted to feel them, would they be persuaded but that they were the work of God's own Hand. The very Nobles (if so noble a name may without offence be given to such blockish people) are so dull and stupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to Civil Society: and yet so reverent to their King, that when they are in his presence, they never look him in the face, but sit flat on their buttocks, with their elbows on their knee, and their hands on their faces. They use to anoint their hair with the fat of Fishes, which makes them stink more wretchedly than they would do otherwise. Of Complexion they are for the most part Cole black, whence the name of Negroes; but on the South side of the River Sanaga they they are only Tawny: the Blacks so much in love with their own Complexion, that they use to paint the Devil White; which I find thus verified:

*The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
Never extended to th' Atlantick Main;
Wherein the Black Prince keeps his residence,
Attended by his fatty-coloured Train:
Who in their Native Beauty must delight,
And in contempt do paint the Devil White.*

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the first, as other the Descendants of Chavn: Afterwards it is said, that they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occasion of it I do nowhere find) in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the last, Christianity prevailed in some Kingdoms of it. In the year 973. Mahometism began to get ground amongst them, by the diligence and zeal of some of the Preachers of that Law: the first who were seduced that way, being those of Melli: after which Tombuto, and then Gualata, were infected with the same poyson also. In the end, all the rest of this Country followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, some part of Nubia, and the Coasts of the Atlantick Ocean which continue in their ancient Gentilism; Christianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if still there remaining) and some few Garrisons belonging to the Crown of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, so are they also of several Languages; those of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutum, Melli, and Gugonti, speaking the Language called Sungai; the Guberio, Canonies, Chæsenæ, and Gangretes, &c. that called Guber: Gualata, a language of its own: and those of Nubia, one resembling the Arabick, Chaldean and Egyptain.

Mountains of most note in it, in the former times, were those of 1. Arvaltes, and 2. Arangus, and 3. that called Deorum Currus; this last supposed to be the same which is now called Puntæ de Lopes Gonfales, but that more probably, which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Promontory, thrusting it self into the Sea; discerned afar off by the Sailers and the Country people, as well by reason of its height, reaching to the Clouds, as the continual Lightnings and Thunders which do issue thence.

Rivers of most note, besides Nile, which watereth it on the East, 1. Senaga, or Canaga, which riseth out of the Lake of Guoga, supposed to be the same which Ptolemy calleth Lacum Chelonidem. And if so, then must this be the River Gir; of which he saith, that having fallen into that Lake, and there swallowed up, it thence Produced another River, whose name he telleth not; little inferiour unto Nilus, for the length of its course, the variety of strange Creatures which are bred therein, or the distinction which it maketh in the face of this Country; the People on the one side of it being Black, on the other Tawny; the Soil on the one side very barren, on the other fruitful: In the end, having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantick by two great Outlets. 2. Niger, a River better known to Ptolemy by name than nature; now found to have its rise from a great Lake, within two degrees of the Equinoctial; whence running Northwards for a time, he hideth himself under ground for the space of 60 miles together: when rising up again, and making a great Lake called the Lake of Borneo, he bendeth his course directly Westward; and taking in many less Channels, he teareth the Earth into many Islands, and at last falleth into the Sea. Of as long course, and the same wondrous nature as the River Nilus. For from the fifteenth day of June it overfloweth all the adjacent fields, the space of 40 days together; and in so many more, recollecteth his Waters into their proper Channels: the whole Country being indebted to these Inundations for its Fertility, which otherwise could be but small, since the driness of the Soil can afford no Exhalations, whereby Clouds may be generated, and the Earth refreshed with moistures, or revived with dews.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Ptolemy, 1. Nigua, the Metropolis of the Country, 2. Panagra, 3. Malachath, 4. Anygath, 5. Thumondacana, 6. Suluce, and others, to the number of 17 in all; situate all along the course of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the situation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the ancient Towns and People being quite defaced, we must look upon it now as it standeth divided at this time into several Kingdoms, 25 at the least in all, (some say many more) the chief of which are these that follow.

1. ORA ANTEROSA, a large Tract of Ground on the Western Ocean, extended from Cape Blance to the River Carnuga, sandy and barren, but reasonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hercof called Azanbays, were accounted formerly very rude and barbarous; much civilized since the Portugals and other Christian Nations began to trade there; of middle stature, complexioned between black and ash-colour; great liars, very treacherous, poor, and parsimonious, and very patient in extremities both of heat and hunger. The chief Towns, 1. Porta di Dio (we may call it Gods Port) and 2. Porto del Riscatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occasionally by the Portuguese, at their first coming thither. 3. Arquim, a strong Fortress of the Portugals, situate on or near the Promontory now called Cape Blance; and giving name unto some Islands, five or six in number, lying near unto it, called the Isles of Arquim; inhabited by a barbarous people, named the Azanbays, but of no great note. These Coasts discovered first by the Portugals, Anno 1452. under the Conduct of Prince Henry, Son of John the first, or by his encouragement and directions.

2. GUALATA, distant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Ora Anterosa being interposed) is but a small Country, though a Kingdom; containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with some Territories of ground and petty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitful only in Dates, Mill, and Pulse; but of these two last no great abundance. This was ever the Principall Nation of the Negroes, and the Seat of their Prince, till the Trade in after-times was removed from Gualata to Tombuto; the King of which last conquered Gualata in Leo's time. The Inhabitants Cole-Black, hospitable towards Strangers to their power, but poor and miserable, without Laws, settled form of Government, Gentry and Judges. Their King paid Tribute to the King of Tombuto, Leo Africanus p. 285.

3. AGADEZ, bordering on Targa, one of the five Deserts of Libya; the people of it generally given to grazing, their houses made of green Boughs, which upon every change of Pasture they carry with them upon the Backs of Oxen. So that we are to look for few Towns amongst them, but these movable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the most part by Merchants Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremesen. The Town well walled, the Houses of a better building than the Country promiseth; the people civiler, and more fair conditioned than the rest of the Negroes; seated commodiously on a River which falleth into the Senaga, and by that means hath correspondence with the Ocean also. The City is mostly Inhabited by Barbary, and other Merchants, who Trade between that place, Cano, and Borno. The Subjects of the King of this City are wont frequently to depose him, and set up another: This Kingdom pays the King of Tombuto 150000 Ducats Tribute, Leo Africanus, p. 290. It lies on the North of the Niger, between Tombuto to the West, and Cano to the East, Guber to the South, and Zuinziga to the North.

4. CANO, a large Province on this side of the River Canaga, full of Woods, Mountainous, and in some parts Desert; but plentiful enough of Corn, Rice, Citrons and Pomegranates, with good store of Cotton-Wooll. Well watered, besides that great River, with some lesser Streams. Sufficiently populous, and stored with good Towns and Villages, Villages, the Habitations of the Shepherds and Husbandmen, as the chief Town called Cano is of wealthy Merchants. This is the Seat-Royal of their King, a Tributary also unto him of Tombuto, environed with a Wall, built of a Chalk-stone, as most part of the Houses are.

5. CASENA, on the East of Cano, but less fruitful far; the Country over-grown with vast Woods, and the Soil untractable, affording only Mill and Barly, but of that good plenty. The People as Black as any Coal, with great Noses, and most prominent Lips. They had a King, who was slain by the Victorious Iscbia King of Tombuto. Leo Afric. p. 291. Their Houses very poor and mean, and their Towns accordingly, none of them numbering more than 300 Families.

6. SANAGA, lying on the other side of that River, from which thus named; extendeth to the Atlantick Ocean, as far as to the Promontory which by Ptolemy named Arfinarium, is now called Cape-Vert, or Caput Viride. The Country full of rich Pastures, goodly Trees, and most sorts of Fruits; plentiful enough of Mill and Pulse, but ill provided of other Corn, and no Grapes at all. Well watered both with Lakes and Rivers. No tame Beasts about their Fields, but Goats, Cows, and Oxen; of Lions, Leopards, Wolves, and Elephants, too great a plenty. The People extream black, much given to Lying, Treacherous, very full of Talk, excessively Venerous, and extreamly Jealous. A King they have, but such a one as holdeth but by Courtesie only, having no certain Rents or Revenues, but what is given by his Nobles. The Name of this Country is Communicated to that Branch of the Niger which here falls into the Ocean. At the Mouth it is a Mile broad; John Berros, a Spaniard, asserts, that it springs out of the Lake of Gagoa, but Nub. who knew more than he of it, proves clearly that it ariseth in Ethiopia with the Nile, and shews what People lived upon it from the Ocean to Numidia. The Western Ocean runs up into it 60 Leagues, but it is pestered with Banks of Sand and Gravel, so that it cannot be sailed on. About 150 Leagues from its Mouth, it has a Cataract or great Fall from the Rocks; so that a Man may walk dry under the Stream of it. From the 15th of June, this and the Gamba overflow for 40 Days as the Nile doth, and the same time decreasing, which makes the Land between them wonderfully Fruitful, even like to Egypt; yet it will not Ripen Wheat, Rice, Barley, or Grapes, but wants no Pulse or Millet, and Guinea-Wheat, a wonderful Grain. It Rains every day at Noon between the latter End of October and July, with frequent Thunder and Lightning. This River is the most Northern Bounds of the Negroes. Pory. The same with the Niger. Huckl. T. 2. Part 2. p. 17.

7. GAMBRA, or GAMBFA, a small Kingdom on the River so named, but bordering in some places on the Atlantick. In those Parts very Pleasant, the Trees always flourishing, the Air very hot; in other Parts of the same Nature with Sanaga, but that this affords good store of Rice, which the other doth not.

8. TOMBUTUM, on the further side of the River Sanaga: exceeding plentiful of Corn, Cattel, Milk, and Butter. Destitute of Salt, but what they buy of Foreign Merchants at excessive Rates; and small store of Horses. Well watered by a Branch also of the River Niger, and many Wells of purpose made to receive such Waters as by Artificial Dikes and Channels are derived from both. The People courteous, rich, and pleasant, spending whole days and nights in Singing and Dancing. Their Food, Flesh, Butter, Milk, and Fish, which they mingle together, and make it neither Toothsome nor Wholesome. The chief Towns, 1. Tombuto, which gives Name to this Kingdom, situate about 12 Miles from a Branch of the Niger, and 400 French Leagues from Morocco to the South; and founded by the Saracens or Arabians in the 610th year of their Hegira, Anno Christi 1231. The Houses all of Mud and Thatch, except one fair Church, and the King's Palace, both of Lime and Stone; built by a Granada Moorish Architect. It weaveth Linnen and Cotton, and hath some Cloth brought out of Europe. It is inhabited by wealthy Merchants, who manage a great Trade betwixt this and Fesse, and are become very Rich. They want nothing but Salt, which is very Dear, being brought from Tigra, 500 miles through the Deserts. The King is the Richest Prince in Africa, and has 3000 Horses and a great Body of Foot in Pay: Their Horses come from Barbary. The King's Hatred to the Jews, suffers none of them to Trade there; they prize the Books and Learned Men that come from Barbary, highly. They use Gold for Money, but without any Stamp, Leo African. p. 287. Cabra is the Port of this City, upon the Niger. In later Times, the Kingdom of Tombuto was conquered by the King of Gago. About the year 1590. it was conquered by the King of Morocco and Fesse, who sent one Alexide-Himode, a Moor, for that end, with 1700 Men, the greatest part of which perished in the Deserts for want of Water; yet they that escaped took Gago and Tombuto, and forced the latter to pay 60 Quintals of Gold for a yearly Tribute: In 1594 there came from hence to Morocco 30 Mules laden with Gold, and the King was sending 300 Men and a Viceroy, which were thought enough to conquer all the Lands of the Negroes, they having nothing to defend themselves but poisoned Poles and Arrows; so that a handful of the Moors beat an innumerable Number of them, as Daffel an English Man wrote into England. Huckl. p. 192. T. 2. 2. Gago, the Residence of the King, large, without Walls, the Buildings very poor and mean, except such as belong unto the King, or the chief Nobility. The Merchants rich, and their Wares sumptuous and precious, but excessive Dear. The Town about 400 miles distant from Tombuto, situate in a fruitful Country, for Rice, Fruits, and Flesh, and well replenished with fresh Water. They have a Market for Slaves, which are sold at 15 Ducats a-piece if young. The King in Person decideth Controversies between his Subjects. The Trade here is wonderful great, a Barbary Horse is sold for 10 Ducats, and an Ell of Scarlet for 30. and Salt much dearer. The People of this Kingdom are either Shepherds or Husbandmen, who in Winter wear Beasts Skins, and in Summer go Naked. Very Ignorant and Unlearned, not one in 100 miles being able to Write or Read, and they pay excessive Taxes to the King, Leo African. p. 289. 3. Cabra, a large Town, but unwalled, and of no better building than the other two. This is the Port of Tombuto upon the Niger, seated 12 miles from it, where all that pass to Guinea and Melli, imbarck, and to which many Negroes resort for Trade. The King of Tombuto has here a Judge to end all Controversies. The Town is large, but the People are silly, by reason of their mixing Fish, Flesh, Milk, and Butter, in their Diet; which is also used at Tombuto, Leo African. p. 288.

9. MELLI, lying on the East of Tombutum, is a spacious and fruitful Province, situate all along on a Branch of the River Niger, in breadth 300 miles, and abundantly fertile, especially in Corn, Cattel, and Cotton-Wool: The People generally very wealthy; of greater Wit, Civility, and Industry, than the rest of the Negroes. The chief Town of it is called Melli, unwalled, but large, as containing in it 600 Families; furnished with many Temples, Priests, and Readers of the Mahometan Law, which those of this Country did first unhappily admit of. This the Seat-Royal of their Kings, who are very courteous unto Strangers; but Homagers and Tributaries to the King of Tombutum.

10. GHENEOA, situate betwixt Gualata, Tombutum and Melli, but so, that it bordereth in one place on the Ocean also; is a wealthy Country; but hath neither Town or Castle in it, except that wherein the King resideth, who is a Vassal also to the King of Tombutum. That Town the Residence also of their Priests, Doctors and Merchants; of which the Priests and Doctors are apparell'd in white, but all the rest in black or blue Cotton. The People have great Traffick with the Merchants of Barbary, and though made very rich by the overflowings of the Niger, and the wealth wealth of the Country, they have great store of Gold uncoined; yet in buying and selling at Home they use Iron-Money. This Country was called by the Ancients Auto-lux, Ichthyophagi, and by Pliny, Autoles. The Coastiers at this day live mostly of Fish; the rest eat Lizards, or any other Vermin. During the Summer they keep in all Day, and Travel and Labour in the Night, to avoid the scorching of the Sun; so little fond of their Children, that they sell them for Slaves, believing them more happy elsewhere. They have no Trees, and little Corn, which is often devoured by the Locusts, which swarm here. The People on the contrary kill and dry them for Food, which is the common practice of all Countries they afflict, Pory p. 42. Leo Africanus, p. 286. saith, This Nation from North to South, was 500 miles; and from East to West, on the Niger 250. It yeilds, Barly, Rice, Cattel, Fish, and Cotton in abundance: no Fruit but Dates. This Kingdom gave the Name of Guinea to that which lies more South, when it came to be discovered by the Portuguese.

11. GUBER lieth on the East of the former Provinces; of the same length, and naturally well fenced with lofty Mountains. Exceeding populous, and thick set with Villages, in which dwell their Husbandmen and Shepherds; rich in their numerous herds of all sorts of Cattel, as also great quantities of Rice and Pulse: the People very Industrious and good Artificers. Their Principal Town is called Guber also, a Town of 6000 Families; the usual Residence of their King; full of wealthy Merchants, and rich in Manufactures.

12. GLALOFI lieth betwixt the two great Rivers of Sanaga and Gambia. The People whereof are of such admirable dexterity, that they can leap upon an Horse when he is in his full Gallop, stand in the Saddle when he runneth fastest, turn themselves about upon his Back, and suddenly down. Of their Country I find little, of their Story nothing, but that Bemcin, one of their Kings, being overlaid with Civil Wars, in the year 1489. went for Aid to the King of Portugal, and gave great hopes of his Conversion to the Christian Faith. But being shamefully murdered by Petro de Vaz, the Portugal General, the hopes of Christianity in these Parts fell together with him.

13. GUINEA, is a Sea-coast Country, extended from Sierra Leona (so called from the Lyon-like roaring of the Waves beating on that Promontory) in the 10th Degree of Longitude, to the Borders of Benin in the 30th. But the Portugals comprehend under this Name the whole Sea-coast of Africk from Cape Blanco and the Country of Ora Anterosa, to Angola and Congo, inclusively, in the Lower Ethiopia. But take it in the proper Sense, as before-limited, and we shall find it to be rich in Gold, Ivory, Rice, Barly, Cotton-Wool, and a sort of Pepper, which the Portugals call Pimienta del Rabo, the Natives Melegneta, and we Guinea-Pepper, of double the Efficacy of the Pepper which comes from India; and therefore forbidden to be sold by the King of Portugal, for fear their Indian-trade should be discontinued. Well stored with Sheep and Poultry, and of Dates good plenty. All other Fruits which they want, or care for, are brought hither from Gualat. Birds in abundance, and of Elephants and Apes too many. A Tree they have, by them called Mignolo, the Bark whereof being cut, doth afford a most excellent Liquor, more pleasant, strong, and nourishing than the choicest Wines, which they drink of in their great Feasts, even to Drunkennels. The People of both Sexes very rude and barbarous, as well in their Habit as their Manners; yet amongst many barbarous Customs they have one most commendable, which is the breeding of their Maidens. When Marriageable, they place them in a house severed from the rest of their Cities, like a Cloyster or Monastery, where for a space they are trained up by some old Man of best Estimation. At the Years end they are brought out well Apparrelled, with Musick and Dances; where the young Men please themselves in the Choice of their Wives: for whom having bargained with their Parents, they satisfy the old Man for his Care and Pains in their Education. They keep one day of Rest weekly, but therein differ from all Nations of the World besides, that they keep their Sabbath upon the Tuesday. Distracted into as many Kingdoms as great Tribes or Families; the Kings thereof subordinate unto one another, as they lie more within the Land, till they end all in a Subjection to the King of Mandinga. The Multitude of their Kings is the Occasion of frequent and very often unjust Wars amongst them, and all the Prisoners they take they sell to the European Merchants for Slaves; and some times make Wars for no other cause but to take their Neighbours Subjects, and sell them for Merchandizes, who for the most part revenge the Injury in the same manner, and sell the Prisoners to the same Ship that bought of the Aggressor; so that it is a wonder the Country is not laid desolate. Places of most Note, 1. Songus, the Principal of Mandinga, about 100 Leagues distant from the Cape of Palmes. 2. Budem, the chief Town of the Kingdom so called. 3. Uxoo, in the Centre of all the Country. 4. Mina, a strong hold of the Portugals, situate near the Cape called Cabo de trois pontas, the Three Pointed Cape; named sometimes also St. George de Mina, by the Name of the Cappadocian Martyr, and the Mines of Gold, which they hoped to find there: By which, and by the Fort of Arquin, which they have upon Cape Blanco, in the North part of this Land of the Negroes, they command all the Countries, which they call by the Name of Guinea. This Town was not built until the Year 1486. in the beginning of the Reign of John the Second, though the Discovery of these Coasts had been made before, Anno 1452. under the Conduct of Prince Henry Duke of Viseo, Son of John the First. By whose Encouragement the Portuguese did first employ themselves in Foreign Discoveries, and became enamoured of the Seas. For in this Interval, the Portugals being more covetous of new Discoveries, than of fortifying and securing the Old, gave opportunity to the Castilians to look after this Country, who having took a view of it in the year 1477. pursued the Enterprize the next year with a Fleet of 35 Ships, under the Command of Petro de Cobides, who brought thence great quantity of Gold; but in the year 1479. by an Agreement or Capitulation between those Princes, the Trade hereof was again left free to the Portugals; who thereupon discovering the Isle of St. George, and finding it a fit Place to secure and command the rest, built in it the strong Fort or Castle of Mina, which before we spoke of. This Castle was first built, as is pretended, by the French, in 1383. but being forced to leave it, the Portuguese, in 1482. built another in the same Place, which continued in their hands till the year 1637. when the Hollanders took it from them: By this Castle in 1556. was a great Town, called by the Negroes Dondou. The Castle stands about five Leagues to the East of the Cape de Tres pontas. Hackl. To. 2. Part 2. p. 38.

14. BENIN lieth directly East of Guinea, by the Portugals reckoned for a Province, or Kingdom of it; the King whereof is said to have 600 Wives, with all which twice a Year he goeth out in Pomp. The Gentlemen (if I abuse not the Name) have most of them 80 Wives, some more; He that is Poorest 10 or 12, and the more the merrier. The People hereof do cut and raze their Skins with three Lines drawn to the Navil, esteeming it necessary to Salvation. They use all, both Men and Women, to go Naked till they are Married; and then to be Cloathed only from the Waste to the Knees; so that had our Sir Thomas Moor lived in these Parts, he had in some measure had his desire: For he, among other strange Plots in his Utopian Commonwealth, telleth us, how it is the Custom for some Reverend Old Sire to bring in Naked the young Man, and some Hoary Old Matron to present Naked the young Woman, between whom a Marriage is propounded. For, saith he, in buying a Horse, the Chapman not only vieweth his Naked Carcass, but taketh off all his Trappings and Saddle, lest under them them some Blain or Ulcer might be hidden: Why then in chusing of a Wife should we take one, of whom we see no more than the Face, (unius Palmæ spatium) and perhaps scarce that? The Learned and Ingenious Author of the New Atlantis, though he dislike of Marriages made upon such Uncertainties, yet he would have this Discovery made by some Friends of the Parties, not by themselves; it being, as he saith, very inconvenient, that after a plain and familiar Sight of each others Person, there should be a Refusal on either side. But these new Projects I refer to your modest Censures.

15. GUANGARA lieth on the North of Benin, a weakly and well-peopled Country, but their Towns and Villages very mean, except that called by the same Name with the Country, where the King resideth, which is somewhat better than the rest, well Traded and full of rich Merchants. The King hereof of so great Revenues, that he keepeth seven thousand Archers, and five hundred Horse in continual pay; but Homager and Tributary to the King of Bornum. To the South is a Nation rich in Gold, but they were then much laid at by the King of Tombuto, which hindred their Trade; but the King of Gagou lent him Assistance against the King of Borneo, who pressed him at the same time, Leo African. p. 292. Their Slaves carry their Goods.

16. BORNUM, a large and opulent Country on the West of Guangara, is there extended to the length of 500 miles. Distinguished equally in a manner into Hills and Valleys: the Hills inhabited by Neat-herds and Shepherds, breeding great Flocks and Herds of Cattel, with Mill, and many other Fruits to us unknown; the Valleys replenished with many Market-Towns, and as full of Corn. The People are of no Religion, but live like Beasts; without Propriety so much as in their Wives, or Children: Nor are they differenced by Names, as in other Places, but by some Mark upon their Bodies: Which though it seem strange to us of this present Age, yet was it thus in part with our Saxon Ancestors. Whence have we else the names of White, Brown, Black, Grey, Green, and Tawny; or that of Long, Short, Low, Curl, Crisp, and others, but from such Originals? Not to say any thing of the names of Trades and Occupations, so familiar with us. The name of their chief City is Borneo, where the King resideth. A potent Prince, who keepeth in continual pay 3000 Horse, and great numbers of Foot, and yet is said to have no other Revenue, than what he getteth by strong hand from his Enemies. Which if it be true, those Kings must needs be good Warriours, and have great success in their Undertakings: It being also said of these Kings of Borneo, that all the Furniture of their Houses, all the Dishes, Cups, and Platters, which they eat or drink in, yea the very Chains for his Dogs, were of the finest Gold.

17. GAGOA lieth betwixt Borneo, and the Desarts of Nubia: the Country almost square, each side thereof extended 500 miles. The People ignorant, rude, uncivil, but especially those which dwell in the Mountains; their Houses built most of Boughs and Leafs, which once dry, easily take Fire; but the best is, they are soon repaired: their greatest wealth is in their Cattel, which they keep most tenderly. About the year 1420. they were brought into subjection by a Negro Slave, who having slain his Master, by the help of his Wealth grew strong enough to incroach on his Neighbours; and selling such Captives as he took for Horses of Egypt, became King of Gagou; his Son, Brother, and Grandson succeeded him. The Name of the last was Hamara, who made a League with the Soldan of Egypt. He was a great Lover of the Mahometans, and they failed not to bring him rich Presents, which he returned in greater and more valuable Acknowledgments, Leo African. p. 294. and in fine, very gracious with the Mamuluck Sultans. His Successors have since so enlarged their Territories, that they are second unto none but the Kings of Tombuto.

18. NUBIA hath on the West Gagou, bounded on the North with Egypt, extended Eastward unto Nilus, by which parted from Ethiopia Superior, or the Habassine Empire. So called from the Nubæ, an ancient and potent People of this Tract, spoken of by Ptolemy; the great Lake anciently called Nubæ Palus, being hence denominated. A distinct People from those of the same name, dwelling on the shores of the Red-Sea, near unto Sinus Aualites, who from the shortness of their Stature passed in account for Pygmies: Nubæ Πυγμαῖοι, saith Hesychius an old Grammarian; these being a strong and potent Nation, and well skilled in Wars. Inasmuch, as Cynaelus, once a King hereof, understanding of some pressures laid upon the Christians of Egypt, is said to have raised 10000 Horse for their Aid and Succour; but by the persuasions of the Patriarch of Alexandria, went back unsought with. For at that time the Country was wholly Christian, and had been so from the very days of the Apostles; but are now fallen off again to their former Idolatries, or become Mahometans, for want of Ministers to instruct them. It is recorded by Alvarcz, the Writer of the Ethiopic History, that at his being in the Court of the Abassine Emperor, there came Ambassadors out of Nubia, to intreat a supply of Pastors to instruct their Nation, and repair Christianity amongst them; but were Unchristianly rejected. The Nubian Geographer, p. 15. Part 4. of the first Climate, saith, In this Country is also seen the Separation of the two Niles, which from the South do pass through our Country, passing Northward: Upon the Banks of the Eastern Nile are most of the Cities of Egypt built, or within its Island. The Western Nile (the Niger) flows from the East to the most Western part of Africa, and upon that Branch of the Nile are all or at least the principal Places of Nigritia. This Kingdom lies extended so far upon the Nile from North to South, that it cannot be Travelled by the Banks of the Nile in less than two Months. Nub. p. 17. The Reason is, the vast windings of the Nile in Nubia. This Kingdom is bounded to the North by the Mountain Gembita, to the East and South it had in his time Ethiopia, or Habascia, and on the West Vantara, and towards the North the Kingdom of Tagna; but Ethiopia is reduced since into a much less compass; all its Northern Provinces from Bugia to Port Ercoco or Arkiko having defected from it, and that Port too being now in the hands of the Turks.

Here is a Poison in this Country, of which the Tenth part of a Grain will dispatch a Man in a quarter of an Hour, and is sold for Ten Ducats an Ounce: the Custom for which unto the King, is as much as the price unto the Merchant. But for this one ill Commodity they have many good; that is to say, Corn, Sugar, Civet, Sanders, Ivory, all in great abundance; some store of Gold, and other Metals. The Country naturally Sandy, but well refreshed with Lakes and Rivers which do much enrich it, inasmuch as the People generally are very wealthy, and manage a great Trade with the Merchants of Cairo and Egypt. Their chief City is called Dangala, large and well frequented; said to contain no fewer than 10000 Families, but their Houses built of nothing but Thatch and Mortar. In other parts, especially towards the River Nilus, they have many Villages, few or none of them worth the naming.

There are many other Kingdoms in this Land of Negroes, besides these in Gumæa but of lesser Note; as 19. BITO. 20. TEMIANO. 21. ZEGZEG. This Kingdom lies on the S. of the Niger, bounded to the W. by Guber, to the E. by Zanfara, to the N. by Casan, and to the S. by Benin; some parts of it are plain, and the rest Mountainous: the first of it are excessive hot, and the later are very cold. The Fields are well Watered and Fruitful, and the People Trade much with the neighbour Nations; they had a King who was conquered, and slain by the King of Tombuto, Leo Africanus, p. 292. 22. ZANFARA. This Kingdom is bounded to the W. by Zegzeg, to the N. by Gagou, cut off by the Niger, to the S. by Benin and Bosana; the People are bafe and rude, and exceffive black: To this place Ifchia the victorious Mahometan King of Tombuto, pushed his Conquefts, Leo Africanus, p. 292. This Kingdom borders to the Eaft, on Nubia. 23. GOTHAN. 24. MEDRA. This Kingdom lies in the middle of Africa, between 5 and 10 Degrees of N. Lat. The People of which are abominable Sorcerers. Pory. 25. DAUM. This small City and Kingdom lies on the Eaftern fide of Guinea, in Africa, having the Kingdom of Arda to the S. and Guber to the N. Of which there is nothing to be fpoken, but of their Poverty or Riches, Bleffings or Curses, common to them with the reft of thefe Nations, and therefore I purpofely omit them.

The Country, or a great part of it, was anciently accounted part of Lybia Interior, inhabited befides the Nubæ, and Nigritæ fpoken of before, by the Nabathræ dwelling about the Hill Arwater, the Aroncæ, near the Hill Aran-gus, the Agarginæ, Xylince, and Alchalince, Ethiopic Nations. Nor much confiderable in the bufinefs of former times; not much difcovered (not very perfectly at this day) till the year 973. at what time certain Mahometan Preachers, out of a Superftitious Zeal to propagate their Sect, firft opened the way into thefe Countries: the People then living like brute Beasts, without King, Law, or any form of Government, fcarce knowing how to fow their Lands, clad in the Skins of as very Beasts as themfelves, and challenging no propriety in Wives or Children. Firft conquered by Joſeph King of Morocco of the race of the Almohades; and after that by the Five Nations of Lybia Deferta, who divided them into Fifteen parts, every one of thefe five Nations poſſeſſing three of them. One of the Kings of thefe Libyans, named Soni Heli, being ſlain by Abuaci Ifchia, General of his Forces, and the reft terrified with that blow, Anno 1526. the Negroes once again recovered their long loſt Liberty, and inſtituted divers Kings of their own. Amongſt them, Ifchia was moſt deſervedly made King of Tombutum, who managing his Affair ſo well, that he conquered the Kings of Guber, Agaderz, Cano, Melli, Zanfara, Zegzeg, Ghenæoa, Gamben, and Cafena, which he made his Tributaries. So that his Succeſſors are now the greateſt of thefe five Kings, who have the ſupream Power over all the reſt. But yet before the end of that Century, his Succeſſors were again reduced under the obedience of the Kings of Morocco and Fefſe; and I believe this Kingdom is ſtill ſubject to them, and Governed by a Vice Roy. This Conqueſt happened in 1590. Hacklitt. To. 2 p. 192. The other four, 1. the King of Mandinga, lording it over the Realm of Benin, Gioloſi, and the Kings of Guinea; 2. the King of Berne, the only one that is deſcended of the Libyan Race, in greatneſs of Command next to him of Tombuto; 3. the King of Gualata, whoſe Kingdom is confined within that one Province, but therein Abſolute and Supream; and 4. the King of Goaga, Paramount over all the reſt of theſe Provinces.

But becauſe the greateſt Power is in the hands of the King of Tombuto, who poſſibly enough may in ſhort time bring all the reſt under his Command, we will take a more particular view of his Eſtate, affirmed to be the richeſt Prince in theſe parts of Africa, and to have many Plates and Scepters of Gold, ſome of which weigh 1300 pound weight. When any of his Subjects do appear before him, they kneel on both their Knees, and bowing their Heads unto the ground, caſt Sand over their Shoulders and upon their Head, going forward ſtill upon their Knees. His Court he keeps in a Royal manner, continually guarded with 3000 Horſe, but with many more Foot, all armed with Bows and empoifoned Arrows. To the Jews a very bitter Enemy, whom he admitteth not to Trade in his Kingdoms, and conſiſcateth the Goods of all ſuch of his Subjects as hold Traffick with them. Zealous of the Mahometan Law; and liberal in ſtipends to the Doctors and Profeſſors of it. Of greater Power than any other beyond Atlas, but the Haboſſine Emperour. And though Amet the Xeriff of Morocco, in the year 1589. had ſome hand upon him, and conquered a great part of this Kingdom even as far as Gago, extending his Empire ſix Months Journey, by Camels, beyond Morocco, yet it held not long: this King again recovering what was taken from him; and being ſince that time in as eminent Power, as ever in any times before. I think the Slaves lately returned from Barbary, do ſay, that at this day Tombuto doth pay Tribute and ſubmit to a Governour ſent by the King of Morocco; but I have none of their Relations now by me.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR is bounded on the Eaſt with the Red Sea, and the Sinus Barbaricus; on the Weſt with Lybia Interior, the Realm of Nubia in the Land of the Negroes, and part of the Kingdom of Congo in the other Æthiopia; on the North with Egypt, and Lybia Marmarica; and on the South with the Mountains of the Moon, by which parted from the main body of Æthiopia Inferior.

It was firſt called Ætheria, and afterwards Atlantia, as Pliny telleth us. In the end, the Grecians gave it the name of Æthiopia, from the Greek words Alθw, ſignifying to burn, and ἴς a Countenance; becauſe the violent Heats of the Sun had ſo ſcorched the Countenances of the Inhabitants. The Additions of Sub Egypto, Superior and Inferior, ſerve only to diſtinguiſh it from the other Æthiopia, which lyeth further off from Egypt, on the outſide of this. It is called alſo Regnum Abyſſinorum, from the Abajeſi, or Abyſſini, a People of Arabia Felix; who paſſed over the Red Sea, (not above ſeven Miles broad in the narroweſt place) came and ſetled here. And in the Scripture it is ſtiled by the name of Ludim, from Lud the Son of Mizraim, who firſt planted it, as hath been proved by many ſtrong and concluded Arguments in our General Preface.

It is ſituate on both ſides of the Equinoctial, extending from the South Parallel of ſeven Degrees, where it meeteth with ſome part of the other Æthiopia, to the Northern end of the Iſle of Meroe, ſituate under the fifth Parallel on the North of that Circle. And though by this accompt it fall ſhort of the dimensions aſſigned by ſome, who extended it from one Tropick unto the other; yet is it of a very great length, no leſs than 1500 Miles; the breadth about half as much: the whole circumference amounting to 4300 Miles. Yet ſo, that all this vaſt Tract of Ground is not to be underſtood of that part of the Country which is under the Command of the Abaffine Emperour, commonly, but miſtakenly called Prefter John: but of the whole Country of Æthiopia, as before limited and extended, containing beſides his Eſtate, the Kingdom of Adel and Adea, and the Provinces of Quiloa and Melindi; which two laſt are now reckoned of as parts of Æthiopia Inferior. The Iſle of Meroe in the North

North is possessed by Muhometans, the most bitter Enemies of this King: all on the West of Nilus, betwixt it and the South-east of Nubia, inhabited by the Anzichi, an Idolatrous and Man-eating Nation, subject to a great Prince of their own: and all the Coasts of the Red Sea, as well within the Streights of Babel Mandel, as without, except the Port of Erocco only, enjoyed by Arabians and Moors, who do acknowledge no subjection unto his Commands, but are under the Kings of Adel and Adex, before-mentioned.

But taking in the largest signification and extent hereof (according unto which we must here describe it) it comprehenderth the three Countries called antiently Æthiopia sub Egypto, Trogloditica, and Regio Cinnamomifera. Of these, the two last are by some reckoned but as parts of the first; though certainly the Troglodites were a different Nation from the Æthiopians. For past all doubt the Troglodites were originally an Arabian People, so called quia πώγας subeunt, from their living in Caves and Dens, in which respect their part of this Country had the name of Arabia Trogloditica, in Dioscorides, and some others of Ancient Writers. Of these it is affirmed by Pomponius Mela, that they were not the Masters of any Wealth, and their Speech was rather a gnashing of the Teeth, than any articulate and intelligible Pronunciation. Nullarum opum Domini sunt Trogloditæ, strident magis quam loquuntur. As for their Houses, they were (saith he) no better than Caves, and their Food than Serpents. With whom concurrerth Pliny also for their dwelling in Caves, and consequently for the reason of the name, saying positively Trogloditæ speluncas excavant, called for the same reason in the Holy Scripture, 2 Chron. 12. 3. by the name of Succæi, the word Succoth (whence that name derived) not only signifying in the Hebrew, Tents or Tabernacles, but Caves and Dens; and so Translated Psal. 10. v. 9. and Job 38. v. 40. As for that part hereof which was called Regio Cinnamomifera, taking up the Southern parts in the time of Ptolemy, it took that name from the abundance of Cinnamon, which was then growing in it; now not a Tree of it to be found in all this Country, as the Portugals, who have look'd narrowly for it, have affirm'd unto us Shipp'd at Myslon, a noted Emporie, placed by Ptolemy in the ninth degree of Northern Latitude; it was thence transported into Egypt, and other Countries, as is said by Pliny; Portus Mofyritus quo Cinnamomus devehitur: the Spice in some Authors being called Mofulum, by the name of the Town: αἰεῖσεν δὲ τὸ λεγόμενον Μισυρίον, τὸ ἀπὸ Μισέων πλεῖον. Of Cinnamon the best is that which is call'd Mofulum, because brought from the City of that name in Æthiopia, saith Simæon Sethi in his Tract de Facultatibus Ciborum. As for this Cinnamon (I note this only by the way) it is the inner Bark of a Tree as big as an Olive, with Leaves like Bay-leaves: the drying of which maketh it roll together, and every three Years is renewed, and stripped off again. Some think it came first from the Sinæ, or the Country which the Romans called Sinarum Regio, the Moderns China; and that it was so called, quasi Sinæ Amomum, the Amomum of the Sinæ: Amomum being the name of a sweet Perfume growing in Affyria and Armenia: But then it should be written Cinamomum, and not Cinnamomum; yet to give the greater credit to the former Opinion, they of Ormus called it Bar-China, or the Wood of China. But of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Æthiopia it self; the People of it in old times were said to have been great Astrologers; the first Ordainers also of Sacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were also noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longest and strongest Bows of any Nation: the Persian Bow (though those the greatest of all Asia) being only three Cubits long; but these of Æthiopia four. Utuntur etiam Æthiopes quatuor Cubitorum arcibus, as we read in Strabo; the like is said also by Herodotus and Diodorus. Their Arrows small, but strong, for the most part poisoned; Æthiopum geminata venenis vulnera, as we find in Claudian; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But not to spend our time too much upon these particulars, Pliny reciteth two strange things of this Country: 1. That the Air and Ground are so parching hot, that the People not only dare not go out of doors without Shoes but that they roast their Meat also by setting it in the Sun. 2. That there is a Lake whose Waters are thrice a day, and thrice a night, exceeding Salt and unpleasing, but at all other times most sweet and delicate to the Palate.

This Country being as big as Germany, France, and Italy, laid together, is but meanly populous, the disemperature of the Climate, and the dry barrenness of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cause Afrack is by Strabo compared to a Leopard's Skin, the distance of whose Spots sheweth the dispersedness of the Towns and Habitations in those torrid Countries. A Country scarce in Wheat, but sufficiently plentiful in Rice, Barley, Beans, Pease, and the like: they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all sorts, and infinite herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally there is no Country under Heaven fitter for increase of Plants, and living Creatures, if Industry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are destitute of many necessary things, which otherwise the natural Commodities of the Country would supply them with. For they have here great store of Flax, but make no Cloth; plenty of Vines, yet make no Wine, except it be to serve the Palaces of the King and Patriarch; abundance of Sugar-Canes, and Mines of Iron, but know not how to make use of either unto any advantage: Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels or Trenches, to derive their Waters to the rest of the Land which want them, those Rivers almost clogged with Fish, their Woods crammed with Venison, which they trouble not themselves to catch.

By this we may conjecture somewhat of the People also; Lazy, and given unto their ease; ill clothed, and not much better housed; extremely inclined to Barbarism, destitute of all Learning; not to be credited unless they swear by the life of their Emperours; they hate a Smith equally with the Devil: their colour is generally Olive-tawny, excepting only their King himself, who is always of a white complexion; a wonderful Privilege, if true. This Blackness of their Bodies, by the Poet, attributed to the burning of the World by Phæton.

*Sanguine tum credunt in corpora summa venire,
Æthiopum populos nigrum transisse colorem.*

Which may be English'd thus,

Their Blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part,
The Æthiopians grew so black and swart.

But the true cause hereof, whatsoever it be, may perhaps be looked upon hereafter, when we come to America.

The Christian Faith was first made known in this Country by the Eunuch of Queen Candace, who was Baptized by Philip the Evangelist, and one of the Seven; more generally embraced by the Pains and Preaching of S. Matthew the Apostle heretofore, but not totally propagated over all this Empire, till the Reign of Abraham, Anno 470. who in his Life entituled himself the Defender and Propagator of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his Death was generally Honoured as a Saint. Suppressed in part by the coming in of the Abissines and other Arabians, it was again revived and more universally received than in former times, in the Reign of Deion King of the Axumite Æthiopians; who in a War against Dumma King of the Homerites in Arabi Felix, solemnly vowed to the God of the Christians to become one of his Followers, if he got the Victory; and so accordingly he did, sending his Ambassadors to the Emperor Julianus, for some Bishops and other learned Men to instruct his People. The particulars of those Opinions, whereunto they have since corrupted the Purity of the true Religion, I find thus Registered: 1. They use to Circumcise their Children, both Males and Females. 2. They baptize the Males 40. and the Females 18 days after their Circumcision. 3. After the receipt of the Sacrament, they are not to spit till Sun-set. 4. They profess but one Nature and one Will in CHRIST. 5. They accept only the three first General Councils. 6. Their Priests live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg. 7. They baptize themselves every Epiphany day in Lakes and Ponds, because that day they suppose Christ to have been baptized by John in Jordan. 8. They eat not of those Beasts, which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean. 9. They keep the Saturday or Jewish Sabbath, equally solemn with the Lords Day. 10. They administer the Eucharist to Infants presently after Baptism. 11. They teach that the Reasonable Soul of Man is deriv'd from their Parents by seminal Propagations. 12. That Infants dying unbaptized, are sanctified in the womb, by virtue of the Eucharist received by the Mother after her Conception. And finally, they shew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they say, by the Apostles at Jerusalem for that purpose; the Contents whereof they observe most solemnly. These are the most material Points in which they differ from the Tendries of the Catholique Church: And there are other Points in which they differ only from the Church of Rome, viz. 1. Administring in both kinds. 2. Without either Elevation, or Reservation. 3. Rejecting massie Images; and 4. Extreme Unction. 5. Allowing the first marriages to their Priests and Bishops. And 6. In renouncing all relation to the Church of Rome; who to the business of these Churches is a very stranger, and so hath been from the very first foundation of them. For it appears by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabick, and translated into Latine by Pisanus, that the Patriarch (or Abuna as they called him) of these Abassine Churches, was in those times subordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacy by the Fathers, which there were assembled; and constantly ever since approved and practised by these Churches; in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembred before their own. To this Patriarch, by an ancient privilege belongeth the seventh place in the Sessions of all General Councils; the Archbishop of Seleucia (or Babylon) only interposing betwixt him and the Patriarch of Jerusalem. Elected by the Abassine Monks of S. Anthony's Order remaining in Jerusalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whose Jurisdiction he must always be) he is sent into this Country to take his Charge; where in some points of Civil nature, he hath equal Privilege with the Emperour himself; and in Spiritual, hath the sole Power of excommunicating an obstinate Sinner. All other Ecclesiastical Dignities, from the Bishoprick to the lowest Benefice, are conferred by the Emperour only.

The Principal Mountains of it, in the former time, had the names of 1. Prinotus, 2. Isus, 3. Monodactylus, 4. Gaurus, and 5. Mons Satyrorum; all of them in that part which was called Trogloditica: 6. Garbale, 7. Elephas, and 8. Masse; in the Isle of Meroe: the rest of the Country flat and level, or the hills not eminent. Rivers of most note, 1. Astapus, (now Albanni) arising out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barcena. 2. Astaborus, now Tacassie; both falling into the River Nilus. 3. Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whose Spring unprofitably sought for in the elder times, is now said to be out of the Lake Zembre in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Æquator; whence passing through spacious Deserts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms, he at last entrencheth into this. Here in some places struggling amongst broken Rocks, and less free passages, he falleth with such a wonderful noise into the Vallies beneath, that a Colony planted by the Persians near one of these Cataracts, (so they call those huge falls of his) were so dunned and deafened with the noise, that they were fain to abandon their Habitations. Nor doth it only dull and deafen the neighbouring People, but the very Hills do seem to tremble at the noise it maketh. Of which thus the Poet.

*Caucta tremunt undis, & multo marmure montis,
Spumeus invictis albescit fluctibus amnis.*

Which may be Englished in these words;

*The noise the mountains shakes, who roar for spite,
To see th' unconquish'd Waves cloath'd all in white.*

Of the Cataracts here are two most noted: the one called Cataractes Major, in the borders of this Country towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Philæ, and Pselcis, Æthiopian Cities; the other called Cataractes Minor, not far from Elephantis a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syene the last City of that Country towards this. So turbulent is this River amongst the Hills. And yet as terrible as these Falls are supposed to be, one may divers times see the Country people in a little Boat not able to contain above two persons, to venture down them without fear; appearing after they have been long tossed in the water, a great distance off, as if they had been shot out of an Engine. Nor is he of such quiet passage in the open Countreys, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are fain to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels, to receive his Waters; which if not curbed and lessened by such ways as these, might by some sudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in respect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for a long time to the Abassine Emperours an annual Tribute: Which when the Great Turk, supposing it a needless charge, had once denyed; this people, by the command of their Emperour, did open their Sluces, and brake down the Dams: whereby the water fell so violently and so fast into Egypt, that the Turk was not only glad to continue Tribute, but to give them great Sums of Money to make up their Works. But others say, that this Acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptain Kings, not so much for keeping up the Waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Abassine Emperours should divert the Stream, and so deprive that Country of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are also said to be some Lakes of that poysonous nature, that whosoever drinketh of them doth either immediately fall mad, or else is troubled for long time with continual drowsiness, of which thus Ovid.

Æthiopsque Lacus; quos si quis faucibus hausit, Aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate soporem.

Which may be paraphrased in these Words:

*Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whoever drinks, his thirst to slake,
Either grows mad, or doth his soul oppress
With an unheard of drowsiness.*

To look upon the State as it stood in the former times we find in it besides the Lakes and Rivers before mentioned, three capacious Bays; that is to say, 1. Sinus Adulcius, 2. Sinus Avalites, and 3. Sinus Barbaricus; the two last neighboured by the now Countreys of Adel and Melinde. Havens of note and Rodes for shipping, there were five in all, viz. 1. Buthus, or the deep Haven; 2. Dioscorum Portus, or the Haven of Castor and Pollux; 3. Theon Soterum, or the Haven of the Saviour-Gods; 4. Portus Evangeliorum, Gospel-Port, or the Port of good News; and 5. Serapionis, the Port of Serapion, with a Promontory of the same near adjoining to it. For other Promontories which in so long a tract of Sea must needs be many; the Principal were, 1. Bafium, 2. Alnemum, 3. Dimetis, 4. Appis, 5. Ara Ameris, 6. Colobon, 7. the Promontory of Satun, 8. Mosylon, with a noted Empory of the same name; 9. Aromata near another well frequented Empory of the same name also; and 10. that of Noticornu. Then for for the Towns of greatest Trading, besides those last mentioned, we have, 1. Avalites, 2. Malao, 3. Mundi, 4. Cabe, and 5. Aceme in the Bay of Avalites, 6. Opone, in the Bay of Barbaria, 7. Esfra, on the South of the Equinoctial. Then for their Cities, we have amongst many others, the names of 1. Epitheria, by Ptolemy called Ptolemais Fenerum, 2. Adulis; and 3. Avalites; giving names unto their several Bays. 4. Ripta, the Metropolis of that part of this Country which was called Barbaria, lying along the shores of the Sinus Barbaricus; which as it taketh name from the River Riptus, upon which it is situate, so they do both agree in communicating it to the Promontory called Riptum. 5. Meroe, the chief City of the Isle so called, 6. Sabat, in the Bay of Adulis, which possibly might be some Colony of the Sabæans, in Arabia Felix. 7. Cela, by Pliny called Tolen, not far from the great Lake so named. 8. Cambusis, by Ptolemy, called Cambysis Aerarum, from some Treasures laid up here by Cambyses the Perſian, in his invasion of this Country. 9. Auxum, the chief City of the Auxumites, a most potent people of these parts, and the Seat-Royal of the old Æthiopian Kings. 10. Nipata, as Ptolemy; but by most others called Tinape: of old the residence of the Æthiopian Emperours, sacked and ruined by Petronius, President of Egypt. For when Candace (the Predecessor, I believe, of her whose Eunuch was baptized by Philip) had ransacked and wasted Egypt with Fire and Sword; Petronius, Lieutenant to Augustus, drave them home, harrassed the whole Country, put this City to the spoil; and to prevent the like Inroads, fortified the Frontiers of his Province. 11. Phile, upon the borders of Egypt, Garrisoned, by the Romans till the time of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned. Of some of these, and others not here mentioned, we may have opportunity to speak more hereafter, in the survey of some of these particular Provinces, into which this Country stands divided at this present time.

And for the Provinces comprehended at this time within the bounds and limits of this Æthiopia, as before laid down, they are said to make up 70 Kingdoms; most of them subject to the Abſſine Emperour. The principal of which are, 1. Gaugere, 2. Tigremoon, 3. Angete, 4. Anma, 5. Damut, 6. Goijami, 7. Bigamedrum, 8. Barnagassum, 9. Adel, 10. Adca, 11. Danfali, 12. Dobas, 13. Fatigar, 14. Xoa, 15. Barut. Concerning which I must premise, that I find the Relations of them to be very imperfect, many times disagreeing, sometimes false: So that I must profess my self to be less satisfied in the description of this Country, than in any of the rest which have gone before. Such as it is, I here present it to the Reader.

I. GAUGERE.

GUAGERE containeth only the Island of Meroe, an Island of much note and fame among the Ancients; made by the confluences of Nilus and Astaborus, the two chief Rivers of this Country. The length hereof 350 miles, the breadth 125. abundantly plentiful of Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, Ivory, Precious Stones, and an excellent kind of Mineral Salt. Well stored with most sorts of Beasts, both tame and wild, and of the last sort with Lyons, Leopards, Rhinoceros, Elephants, and Dragons. All the latter Travellers, to a Man, are agreed, that the Nile makes no Island, in Æthiopia, or Nubia.

The people are of the same nature and complexion with the rest: Mahometans by Religion, and the professed Enemies of the Abſſine Emperour; against whom they do not only defend themselves, by the advantages and benefit of their situation, but confederating with the Torks and Arabians, fall many times with great Forces into his Dominions. It is said by Pliny of the Inhabitants of this Island, that twice a year, viz. when the Sun is in the 16 degree of Taurus, and the 14 of Leo, they have the Sun so perpendicular above their heads, that he casts no shadow. More anciently memorable for their long lives, than their great exploits, attaining ordinarily to 120 years of Age; and therefore called Meroe by the old Greek Writers. The Women said to be of such great breasts in the former times, that they did suckle their children over their shoulders (as some Women are now said to do near the Cape of good Hope) the Dug being bigger than the Child. Of which thus Jacenal.

In Meroe crassi majorum Infante mamillam.

In Meroe the Mothers Pap
Is bigger than the child in lap.

The Principal Cities hereof. 1. Meroe, which gave that name unto the Island, but took the same from Meroe, a sister of Cambyses King of Perſia; or as Euphorus saith, from Merida, the mother of Chenephres, a King of Egypt. Josephus telleth us, that in former times it had been called by the name of Saba; on authority of whose mistake it hath been made the Regal City of that Queen of Saba (the Queen of Egypt, and Atiabopia, as Joseph calleth her) who came to Solomon. An opinion so received amongst these Islanders, that the name of Meroe being laid by, they have restored the name of Saba to this City, as of greater eminence. The City said by some to contain about 5000 houses, great and sumptuous; the streets thereof to be large and spacious, with Galleries on each side before the doors of their houses, where Men walk safe from all extremities of heat, or rain. Beautified with four chief Gates, (besides other of inferior note) built of Alabaſter and Fastper, wrought with Antick works: the doors belonging to those Gates of Cedar, curiously wrought; the ways which lead unto them, for the space of two leagues, beset with Palms, Orange trees, Cedars, Cypresses, and others no less useful both for shade and Fruit. In the place where the four streets going from the Gates, do cross each other, a goodly Arch erected upon stately pillars, fairly wrought and gilded, with the Statue of St. Mathew made of brass, but gilded, on the top thereof. Such it is said to be by some. Others think there is no such City; it may be not so beautiful, as some have made it. The other Towns of note and name in it, in former times, 2. Sabat, 3. Darorum Vicus. 4. Eſer; of which we have little but the name.

This Island was once a peculiar Kingdom; he being chosen for their King, who excelled the rest in strength, person, or in stock of Cattel; but those Kings so subject to their Priests, that by a Messenger, or Herald, they were sentenced by them unto death, and others advanced unto the Throne. And thus it stood till one of the more provident Kings, forcing the Temple with his Armed Soldiers, slew all these Priests; and freed himself and his Successors from so great a Straw; afterwards made a Province of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; honoured for the most part with the Seat of those Kings, and memorable in those times for the Table of the Sun; which was a place near the City of Meroe, always furnished with variety of roasted meat, set there by night at the charge and command of the King (much taken as it seemeth with this costly vanity) and eaten in the day time by all that would; called therefore the Table of the Sun, because ascribed unto his bounty by the ignorant people. In the declining of this Kingdom, occasioned by the Inundation of the Saracens and other Arabians, this Island was seized on by that people, and hath been ever since kept by them; together with the rest of the Country, lying betwixt it and Egypt, in which are contained, as some write, the Kingdoms of Damote, Sua, and ſaculuet, anciently belonging to this Empire, now dismembered from it: not much observable, but for being a thorough fare to great Troops of Pilgrims, which every Year pass by them out of the Abſſine Dominions, to the Sepulchre and other like places in and near Jerusalem.

2. TIGREMAON.

TIGREMAON, hath on the North Guagere and the River Atarab, by which last parted from Barnagasso; on the South, the Realm of Angote; on the West, Nilus. On the East it is said to extend to the Red Sea, but the Sea-parts thereof possessed by the Turks, and the adjoining Coast by the Alors and Arabians; the In-Land parts promiscuously inhabited, especially more towards the Sea, by Christians and Ethnicks. Divided into many inferior Regions, the Principal whereof, 1. Sabian, 2. Torates, 3. Balgada, so called perhaps from the chief Towns of them; and 4. Tigrai, the most large and ample of all these subordinate Provinces; as containing in it 17 great Tracts under so many Lieutenants, which rule all Affairs both of Peace and War. The People black of colour, deformed of shape, in condition miserable, of principles wicked. Some Rivers they have, but dried up in Summer; yet so, that with a little digging they find Water in them. Their chief City Caxumo, or Cassumo, supposed to be the same which Ptolemy calleth Auxume; Stephanus, Axomites; Procopius, Auxomide; by all of them esteemed the Metropolitan City of Æthiopia, and the Seat-Royal of their Kings. In witness whereof are many ancient Buildings yet remaining, some Pillars which resemble the Egyptian Obelisks, admirable for their height and workmanship, 60 foot high, and full of Characters, or Letters engraven on them, which now none can read. The Æthiopian Auxumites, the most potent Nation of this Country, had their Name from hence; more probably conceived to be the Regal Seat of Candace, (mentioned in the Acts) than any other in the Kingdom; and still affirmed to be honoured with the Court of their Emperors. Others I know have fixed his Court in Beimalechi, but I know not in what part to find it: Some in a Royal Palace near the Lake of Zembre, built in the year 1570. by some European Architects sent hither by Francis Duke of Florence; and many will allow him no fixed Seat at all, but tell us that he moveth with his Tents in a Royal Progress from one Place to another; which wandering Court, or moving City is said to be no less than ten miles in compass, when the Pavilions which belong to it, are disposed of into Rank and Order.

This Kingdom is governed by a Prince of its own, but one who is an Homager and Tributary to the Abassine Emperor; to whom he payeth yearly 200 Horses of the best Arabian breed, infinite quantities of Silks, great store of Cotton-Wooll, and abundance of Gold; but the determinate proportion I have no where met with.

3. ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North with Tigremason, on the West with Nilus, on the South with the Kingdom of Amara, on the East with Dancaly, and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of Hills and Vallies, both extremely fertile, productive of the choicest Fruits, and great Herds of Cattel. This Kingdom or Province lies in the middle of Æthiopia, environed with steep and impassible Mountains, like an Amphitheatre, in which are kept all the Children of the Royal Family, till one of them is called to the Throne. The People eat but once in 24 hours, and for the most part make that Meal in the Night; their Diet raw Venison, or smoaked Beef: the Money most in use amongst them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which custom of using Salt, Pepper, and the like, instead of Money, was in former times amongst most People the only Bartery, or way of Exchange. So in Homer, Glaucus's Golden Armour was valued at an 100 Kine, and Diomedes's Armour at 10 only. Afterward in Justice Commulative, it was deemed convenient to have some common Measure or Standard, or valuation of the Equality or Inequality of Goods; the Invention of which, the Jews attributed to Cain; the Græcians to Hermodice the Wife of Midas; the Romans to Janus. It is called Nummus, or νῦμμος from νῦμμεν, because it was ordained by the Law: Pecunia, either because in elder times the chief of their Wealth consisted in Cattel, as now among the Irish; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was stamped on it: and Moneta, à Monendo, as Suidas saith, because when the Romans stood in need of Money, Juno moneta, Juno admonished them, that they should use Justice, and there should be no want of Money. To this Goddess, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worshipped it in the Figure of a Woman, holding a Pair of Scales in one hand, and Cornucopia in the other; by the Poet called Regina Pecunia, and not unfitly, the greatness of her Power considered.

But to return again to Angote, I find not much spoken of the Country in the way of Story; nor meet I with the Names of any of their Towns, or Cities; unless that 1. Angote it self; as also 2. Abugana, 3. Giannamora, two of the principal Provinces of it, may possibly be so called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4. AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North, Angote; on the South, Damua; on the West it stretcheth towards the Nile; and on the East, bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Country very Plain and Champaign, little swelled with Hills, sufficiently fruitful, and well stored with all sorts of Cattle. The chief City of it called Amara, by the name of the Province, situate in the midst of the Empire, and though not much distant from the Æquator, if not plainly under it, yet, blessed with such a temperate Air, such a fruitful Soil, such ravishing pleasures of all sorts, that some have taken (but mistaken) it for the Place of Paradise: So strangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and Humane Industry have joined their helps together to enrich and beautifie it.

But that which is the greatest Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, situate in a large and delightful Plain: the bottom of the Hill in Circuit 90 miles, and a days journey high; the Rock so smooth and even (but lesser and lesser towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly polished; the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the Light; so easie of ascent, that one may ride up with great pleasure; and in the midst of the Ascent a spacious Hall, as it were to rest in: the top it self is a large Plain 20 Leagues in circuit, compassed with an high Wall, to the end that neither Man nor Beast fall down upon any chance; beautified towards the South with a rising Hill, out of which issueth a sweet Spring, which watering the several Palaces and Gardens of it, uniteth it self into a Lake for the use of Cattle: the Plain enriched with all sorts, both of Fruit and Grain; adorned with two magnificent Monasteries, in each of which are found 1500 Knights of the Order of St. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger Sons of the Emperor are continually inclosed, to avoid Sedition. They enjoy there whatsoever is fit for delight, or Princely Education; and from hence some one of them, who is most hopeful, or best liked, is again brought out, if the Emperor die Son-less, to be made Successor. This Mountain hath but one Ascent up, as before was said, which is impregnablely fortified; and was destinate to this use, Anno 460. or thereabouts, by the Emperor Abraham Philip, advised hereunto, as he gave out, by an Heavenly Vision. In one of these Palaces is a famous Library, wherein are said to be many Books, which with us are either in part or totally lost; as the Oracles of Enoch, with the Mysteries which escaped the Flood, being by him engraven on Pillars; the whole Works of Livy, and others. Which being heretofore translated by the Saracens into the Arabick Tongue (when having plundered all the most famous Libraries of the East and West, they they burnt the Originals, out of a Plot to make that Language as unknown, and as generally Studied, 'as the Greek or Latin) are said by some good fortune to be here preserved.

5. DAMUT.

D*AMUT* hath on the North, Amara; on the West, Bagamedrum; on the South, Goiamy; and on the East, the great Lake of Burcena, and some part of Zanguebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Exterior. The Country plentifully furnished with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits, and living Creatures of all sorts. For none more famed than for their Slaves, sold in great numbers into Arabia, Egypt, Persia, India; and much esteemed by them who buy them, for their abilities in War, dexterity in Business, but especially for their Fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this Cause placed in Offices of great Trust and Power, by many of the Eastern Princes; who using a Tyrannical form of Government, and not daring to trust the Sword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto Places of Court, or Council, do for the most part arm these Slaves, and trust them also with the Conduct of their chief Affairs. A Trust, in which they never falsified, or failed in a true Discharge, but when presumpting on their Power, and those Advantages which so great a Trust and Power had presented to them, they got into their hands the Kingdom of Bengala, and kept it many years in a Succession of the Abassine Slaves, wherewith they still made up their numbers, till oured not long since by the Great Mogul.

The Oxen of this Country are said to be near as great as Elephants; their Horns so large, that they serve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either Wine or Water. Here is also said to be a kind of Unicorn, very fierce and wild, fashioned like an Horse, but no bigger than an Ass; but we must think these Unicorns to be but Rhinoceros, or else we shall very much mistake the truth of the Matter. And for the People (to go them both over once again) they are for the most part, Gentiles; some Christians intermixt amongst them, who have sundry Monasteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the Principality of Couche, said to have more Gold in it than all Peru; a Mountain all of Gold, if the Fryars say true. The People Gentiles, but the Prince not long since gained to the Christian Faith; into which he was Baptized by the Abbot, or chief Governour of the Monasteries, on the Hill Amara; Gradets the Emperor being his Godfather, by whom named Andrew. And here they have an Hill of great height, and very difficult ascent; from the top whereof they use to cast headlong such of the Nobility, as by the Emperor's Sentence are condemned to die. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom, or their Principality, I am not able to resolve, unless, 1. Damut, and 2. Couche may be two, and the two most Eminent, as giving name to those Estates.

6. GOIAMT.

G*OIAMT* hath on the North, Damut; on the West, Bagamedrum; on the South and East, some Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Country in the North parts full of Deserts and Rocky Mountains, in the residue plentifully furnished with all things necessary. Great store of Gold they find, but drossly; the People not knowing how to refine and purifie it; or loath here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way, for fear of drawing the Turks and Arabians to partake of the Booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers, or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the Hills with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall, making a noise, not much inferior to a Clap of Thunder: And amongst other Lakes, two of special Note, which for their greatnels seem to be Seas; in which, as some report, Men and Beasts, or Men themselves, use to throw themselves: and out of which it is thought by others, that the Fountains of Nile do arise, and both true alike. But past all doubt the Æthiops themselves are of this opinion, and therefore in the Title of Negaz, (so they call their Emperor) he is termed King of Goiomy, with this Addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nile. Deceived alike in their Opinion touching this Particular, the Springs or Fountains of that River being further South: though possibly having lost himself in these vast Lakes, and issuing hence into a more contracted Channel, he may be said to have a second Birth from hence, though not the first. And these I take to be the Lakes which were discovered by the Romans in the time of Nero. Who following the design of some other great Potentates, Sisostus, Cambyses, Alexander, and Philadelphus, in discovering the true Original of this famous River, employed the Centurions in that Service; who aided in it by the then King of the Æthiops, are said to have come at last unto certain great Marishes (most probably the lower and fedy parts of these Lakes now mentioned) of whose extent the Inhabitants themselves were ignorant, not possible to be discovered any further, the Weeds having so overgrown the Water, that there was no further passage to be made by Boat, and less by Wading. This Kingdom is surrounded on all sides by the Nile, which riseth in the Western part, and passing through that vast Lake called Demba or Tzana, runs round this whole Kingdom; yet the North parts in which are the Fountains of the Nile, are barren and desolate, full of Mountains; the rest is wonderful Fruitful and has great plenty of Gold. Pory.

Betwixt this Country and Damut, which we last passed through, is said to be a Province of Amazons, warlike and fierce, and very expert at the Bow; whose Queen knoweth no Man, and by the rest honoured as a Goddess. These they say, were first instituted by the Queen of Saba; as true, as that which some have added of the Phoenix visible in this Country; of Griffens, and of Fowls so big, that they make a shadow like a Cloud. Which strange reports I have here added, to supply the defect of Towns and Cities, of which I meet not with so much as the naked names; as undiscovered Places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monsters.

B*AGAMEDRUM*, or SAGAMEDRUM, (for I find both names) lieth on the West of Goiamy, betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nile; and keeping all along the Course of that River, as far as Guagere, or Meroe, encountreth with the Southern Point of Bannagasso; some do extend it also beyond that Island, but making the whole length thereof but 600 miles, do confute themselves. The greatest Province of this Empire it may probably be, Cæteris hujus Æthiopiæ amplissimum, as they say it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it must be 1500 miles, not 600 only.

The Country plentiful in Mines of the purest Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by Fire, which makes it run like long rods, or ropes of Metal. And yet as large and as wealthy as they say it is, I am more to seek for Towns and rich Cities in it, than in the Deserts of Libya, or the Sands of Arabia. Merchants and Travellers for the most part go no further than the Sea-coasts of the Country, of which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the In-Lands; and of the Natives, such as have travelled abroad in other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant Men, know little more of their own Empire than the Place they lived in: Or probably their best Cities not containing above 2000 houses, few of them so many, and those patched up of Thatch, Dirt and Hurdles, (unless some of the Nobility or Wealthier Merchants are provided better) they may have no greater Reason to speak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of such sorry Places, as are indeed not worth the naming. Which I conceive to be the true condition of most, or all the Inland Towns in this large Estate.

8. BARNAGASSO.

BARNAGNES, or BARNAGASSUM. Hath on the West, Guagere, or the Ile of Mroe; on the South-west, as some say, a Point of Bagamedrum; on the South, Dangali and Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it stretcheth towards Egypt; the Kingdoms of Jasculum and Sua, possessed by the Mahometans, being interposed. This is the most Northern Province of Abassinia; it is bounded on the South by the Kingdom of Dangala and Tigre; on the West by the Nile, which separates it from Nubia; on the North by Balour; and on the East by the Red Sea, upon which it hath the Port of Erocco or Arkiko, which is now in the Turks hands. This was the best known part of that Kingdom, by reason it lay upon the Red Sea, and much frequented by the Portuguese in the last Century. Bar, in their Tongue is the Sea, and Naguz, a King or Kingdom, as this the only Province of that Empire that lies upon the Ocean. Pory. The Turks first invaded this Province in the year 1558. and forced the Governor to pay 1000 Ounces of Gold for his Peace every Year.

The Country very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well stored with pleasant Rivulets, besides the Neighbourhood of the Red-Sea, on the one side Nile, and Abanki on the other. Remarkable for a Mountain in the Western part of it, which being spacious in the beginning, growing strait by little and little, and then enlargeth it self again to a League in Circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, a Monastery, and two very large Cisterns, with a piece of Ground able to entertain and keep 500 Men. To be ascended one way only, and that but to a certain Mark; to which being come, they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets to the top of all; not to be took by Force, by reason of the Impossibility of Ascent; not by long Siege, or any extremity of Famine, in regard it yields Provision enough to maintain it self. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province against Turks and Moors.

It containeth besides Barnagasso it self, the two Provinces of Casfila and Dasila; though rather subject to the Governor or Vice-Roy of it, than Parts and Numbers of the same. Towns of most moment in the whole, 1. Beroa, or Barua, conceived by some to be the Colony of Ptolemy, the Residence of the Vice-Roy, situate on a pleasant River, stor'd with Fish. 2. Zameta, honoured sometimes also with the Vice-Roy's presence; but rather as a retiring Place in times of leisure, than a Town of strength. 3. Suachen, situate in an Island of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richest Cities of the Eastern parts, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, secured by Nature from all Storms, of smooth Tides, sure Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great Ships of Burden. Situate in a little Island, the whole Circumference whereof it taketh up; insomuch, that Vessels of all sorts, both within the Haven, and without, do usually unlade themselves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the Ship-Beaks serve for Bridges. A wealthy and well-traded Town, both by Sea and Land, to which from the more In-Land parts of the Abassine Empire, the Mountains open a safe Passage for the carriage and recarriage of their Commodities. Taken by the Turks long since, with all the rest of the Country lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, or Bassa; whom in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abassia; as if by the Possession of this small part of the Empire, they would entitle the Grand Signior unto all the rest. It is now the principal Port in the Red Sea, and the Bassa with 3000 Soldiers resides in it, and Governs those Provinces they have conquered upon the Abassinians. Pory, p. 16. The Town conceived by some to be that which Ptolemy calleth Omar Sebastum, or rather Sebastum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Ptolemais Perarum, or the Epibotus, as Pliny calleth it, of the ancient Writers. And some again will have it to be the Sucke of Pliny, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodites (who are all called Suckei in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whose part of the Country it is seated, and to which name it hath some resemblance. 4. Bisam, not far from Erocco, remarkable for a Monastery situate on the top of an high Rock, environed with dreadful Precipices upon every side; in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectory: this being the Chief of six others in the Province of Barnagasso, the farthest not above 30 miles distant. For maintenance of whom, and a great number of poor Children which they daily feed, besides the Tythes of all the Mountain in which it standeth (fruitful and rich, and at least 30 miles in compass) they have many good Farms at the Foot of the said Mountain, and an hundred small Villages appertaining to them, out of which they raise yearly great provision of Corn, and above 2000 head of Cattel, their Revenues out of Tigrematon being reckoned in. A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hospitality, in regard their Novices or young Monks are sent abroad to earn their Living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the Husbandry of the House: the Elder only being found at the charge of the Monastery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5. Erocco, another noted Port on the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, to which a Passage openeth through the Streights of the Mountains, as it doth to Suachen, conceived to be the Adulis of Ptolemy, the Aduliton of Pliny, now in possession of the Turks, or at their command. From Suachen to this Place all along the Coast, is one Wood of Shrubby-Trees of small value. 6. Santa. 7. Giabel. 8. Laccari. And 9. Abarach; these four last in the Province of Dasila.

This Country at the present, and for long time past, is subject both to the Great Neguz, or the Prestigian of Æthiopia, and the Grand Signior of the Turks; naturally Subject to the one, and Tributary to the other. Governed by a King of their own, whom they call Barnagassus, by the name of his Province; a Vassal and an Homager to the Æthiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly Tribute of 150 of the best breed of Horses, besides some quantities of Silk, and some other Commodities: but so ill-neighbour'd by the Turks, that he is fain to pay also to the Beglerbeg or Bassa resident at Suachen, 1000 Ounces of Gold yearly for a Composition. For the Turks having by the Conquest of Egypt made themselves Masters of those Countries towards Æthiopia, which formerly were allied to, or confederate with the Mamuluck Sultans; within short time (viz. An. 1558.) possessed themselves also of the Town of Suachen, and the Parts adjoining; made it the Residence of one of their Beglerbegs or Bassas, and gave him the Title of Beglerbeg of Abassia, as before was said: forgot by the industrious Collector of the Turkish History, in his Enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Bassas of Africk. To this they added not long after, all the rest of the Sea-Coasts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after some short breathing made a farther Inroad; in which they did so waste the Country, that in the end they compelled the Barnagassian (not being aided by the Neguz) to this Composition.

9. DANGALI, and 10. DOBAZ.

South and South-East of Bannagasse, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI and DOBAS; that of Dangali bordering on the Red Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahometans, or Arabian Moors, both in continual Enmity with the Abysine Emperours, and both of like nature, in regard of the Soil and People.

DANGALI hath on the North, Bannagasse; on the South, some part of the Kingdom of Ahl; on the East, the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the West, Dobas before-mentioned. It taketh up some part of the Arabick Bay, within the Straits of Babel Mandel; and without those Straits, the greatest part of that spacious Bay, which anciently was called Sinus Arabicus, as far as to the Promontory then called Mosylon, (neighbouring by a noted Empory of the same name) now the Cape of Docomo; near unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf; and suddenly straitneth it self again; so as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve Leagues broad. And in this Channel are five or six Islands, which hinder the passage; so as Sailers must have good experience to avoid the Rocks which lie near those Islands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Rebal or Babel, which gives name to the Straits of Babel Mandel, a narrow Frith, opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian or Indian Ocean. 2. Mosylon, a well frequented Port, conceived to be the same which Strabo calleth Antiphila; not found by that name in Ptolemy. 3. Zaguan; and 4. Zana, in a Province of this Kingdom called Lacca. 5. Docomo, near the Cape so called, and therefore probably the Mosylon of the ancient Writers. 6. Dangali, not far from the Sea side, which gives name to the Kingdom. The City of Dangali is seated on the Western Bank of the Nile, between Cusa to the South and Golba to the North, five days journey from the latter; Nub. p. 17. It consists also of 1000 Houses, as Aleves a Spartan reports, who travell'd Nubia in these latter times. Leo Africanus, p. 295. confirms this Report of Aleves, as to the number of Houses, and adds, that they are built with Chalk, and covered with Thatch: The Townsmen are Rich, and a Civil People, and drive a great Trade with Grand Cairo in Egypt: all the rest of their Towns are Villages and Hamlets. Thus far Leo, who wrote about the year 1526. Nothing else memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles, as in Nilus.

On the South-west of Dangali lieth the Realm of DOBAS, extended on the West to the borders of Angote. The Country large, containing Twelve, or as some say, Twenty four several Prefectures. Of so good Pasturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater size than in any other places, and those for number not easily matched in all this Empire. The People such professed Enemies of the Christian Faith, that they suffer not any Man to Marry, till he hath killed Twelve Christians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Negus; but it is only when they list; so far from being Contributioners towards the support of his Estate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their Towns, 1. Dobas, which gave name to the whole Kingdom. 2. Bally, upon the same River on which Dobas standeth, but more near the head.

11. ADEL.

A*DEL* is bounded on the North with some parts of Dangali and the Red Sea; on the South, with Adeas on the East, with the Red Sea, and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the West, with Patiga: extended on the Sea Coast from the Cape of Docomo, to the Cape of Guardafu; conceived most probably to be the Acomata of Ptolemy, a noted Promontory in his time.

The Country plentiful of Fish, Honey, Wax, Corn, Gold, and Ivory; great flocks of Sheep, and many of those Sheep of such burdensome Pieces, that their Tails weigh 25 pounds. Some Kine they have, which have Horns like a Stag: others but one Horn only, and that in the Forehead, about a Foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The People inhabiting on the Sea coasts are of Arabian Parentage, and of the Mahometan Religion: those towards the Inland Countries, of the old Æthiopic Race, and wholly Gentiles.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Zeila, a noted Port-Town, situate in or near the place where Ptolemy placeth Acomata: stored with variety of Merchandice, and vinding some representation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being Lime and Stone; Materials not much used amongst them in these latter times. Of great Beauty and Eileem, till they ear 1516. when sacked and burnt by the Portugals; before that time the most noted Empory of all Æthiopia for the Indian Trade. This City in the time of the Nubian Geographer (the 12th Century) was called Zabgha, and was the principal Port of the Kingdom of Æthiopia, but then a small Place, yet very Populous; most of the Ships that sailed on the Red Sea, and Traded with that Kingdom unacing at this Port, Nub. p. 20. 2. Ezbara, situated on the same sea coast, well frequented by Negus; and possibly may be the Mund or Mialuo of Ptolemy, neighboured by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Felles. 3. Mette, another of the sea-Towns near the Cape of Guardafu, supposed to be the Acane of the Ancient Writers. 4. Zim. 5. Silva. and 6. Bidar, on the Sea-coasts also. 7. Ahm, the Principal of the Kingdom, more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Country, formerly a member of the Æthiopian Empire, is of late grown to so great strength and reputation, that the Kings hereof have freed themselves from all signs of Subjection to that Crown, and think then selves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this repute and power by Gradegma, or Gradameth, who Reigned here in the year 1540. by whom Claudius the Negus was so overlaid, and his Country so destroyed by continual Incursions, that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himself into the heart of his Estates, and crave aid of the Portugals. And though by their assistance, and the help of their Shot, he was twice victorious, yet in the third Battel he was vanquished, and in the fourth, anno 1559. slain upon the place. This King, accounted for a Saint by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual Wars against the Christians, did so establish the Affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it so well settled unto his Successors, that the Abysine Emperor hath ever since left it out of his Titles; though many other of those small Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial Scile, in which he hath as little Power as he hath in this. It is said also, That in the Battel wherein Claudius was slain, and his Army routed, consisting of 60000 Foot, 5000 Horse of his own Subjects, besides the Portugals, the King of Ahl got into his possession the greatest mass of Coin and Treasure that was ever seen. A Victory obtained as well by Policy as Force: the Abissines being seldom fought with, or their Country wasted and depopulated by the Kings of Ahl, till by the strict observance of their Lenten Fast, they were grown so weak, that they were not able to discharge their domestick business, and therefore most unable to resist a prevailing Enemy. In the 12th Century, the Nubian Geographer found this Kingdom subject to the King of Æthiopia, but possess'd by Pagans, whose whole Religion consisted in erecting Pillars of Stone, and anointing them with the Fat of Fishes, and then worshipping them. Nub. p. 27. The Arabians came in after this time, and sending what People they took in their Wars into Arabia to be sold for Slaves, obtained great Supplies from thence to carry on the War; the Portuguese for a time supported; them but after their return, the King of Æthiopia was beaten, as is above related.

12. ADEA.

ADEA, or ADEX as some call it, hath on the North the Kingdom of Adel; on the South, and West, some parts of the Abassine Empire; on the East, the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafu, where it joineth with Adel, along the greatest part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the reason of which name, hereafter.

The Country plentifully fertile, shaded with Woods and spacious Forests, and those Woods liberally furnished both with Fruits and Cattle; the Champion Country not less fruitful in Wheat, Barley, and other necessities, besides a great store of Horses. The People of an Olive colour, in some places more inclined to black: not clothed, but from the Girdle downward: nor very well armed in the time of War, but with poisoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original Extraction, whose Language they retain with some little difference in pronunciation.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Adia, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, because of the old Residence of Kings. 2. Casur, upon the Sea-Coast, sometimes called Opone, then a noted Empory, and situate near the Promontory called Zingis extrema. 3. Azum. and 4. Zazelle, supposed to be the Ejina and Tonica of the Ancient Writers. 5. Magadazo, a petit Kingdom of it self; a wealthy and well Traded Town, situate in a fruitful and delightful Soil, and Neighbourhood by a safe and capacious Haven: much Traded by the Portugals, who bring from Adre in Arabia Felix, and Cambaja in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian Commodities; which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abassine Slaves, which last they value as the chiefest Merchandise which this Country yieldeth. First built by some Arabian Moors, who flying from the King of Laza their Mortal Enemy, under the Conduct of seven Brethren, came into these parts, where they founded this City, and that of Brava in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was said; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-Coasts of both Æthiopia's, as far as to the Cape Des Corrintes, which is somewhat to the South of the Tropic of Capricorn. The Kings hereof in former times Vassals to the Abassine Emperour, to whom they paid a yearly Tribute; this Kingdom still remaining amongst his Titles: but since the taking of Magadazo, made so obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals, that the Estate of the Abassine in it is but meerly titular. In former times this was the Capital of the Arabian Colonies yet was taken by the Portuguese. It is Strong, Rich, and Populous, and is not mentioned by the Nubian Geographer, who speaks of Melinda. Pory.

13. FATIGAR, and 14. XOA.

FATIGAR hath on the East Adel, and some part of Adia; on the West, the little Realm of Xoa; on the South, Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Country Champagne, sufficiently fruitful of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furnished with pleasant and delicious Fruits. Most memorable for a Lake of twelve miles in compass, on the top of a Mountain, well stored with Fish: from whence, and from the rest of the Mountain, issue many Rivers, which much enrich the Vallies and Fields adjoining. The chief Town hereof (if any one be better than another) I conceive to be a Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or so called from it.

Westward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XOA, bordering West on Amara: Southward upon Damur; furnished with great store of Corn and Cattel, but not much beautified with Towns of any consideration. Nothing observable in the History or description of it, but that together with Fatigar, and others of the Mid-land Provinces, it hath continued constant in obedience to the Abassine Emperours, notwithstanding all those Misadventures which have happened to that Empire in these latter days. Mr. Pory bordereth it on the West with Ambara, but on that side it hath Gatame; on the North Walaka; on the East, Fatigar and Galla; and the last and best Map is called Sloa. It consisteth in Mountains and deep Val-

15. BARUS.

ON the South East of Adia, lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eastward to some part of Sinus Barbaricus; and touching at the Western Point upon that of Fatigar. The Soil and People much of the same condition with the rest of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Christians for the generality in the Mid-land parts. Those Christians subject (as the rest) to the Abassine Emperour; but he hath neither place of strength or consideration in all the Country; those of most note, 1. Brava, once a free Town and governed after the manner of a Common-wealth, by Twelve Aldermen or Common-Counsellors, descended from the seven Arabian Brethren, by whom first built; the Founders of Magadazo also, as before was said. But now, together with 2. Pate. and 3. Gugia, all upon the Sea, made subject to the Portugals; by whom taken, under the Conduct of Tristram de Cugua.

Besides these, there are many other Kingdoms mustered in the Stile Imperial, (the swelling vanity whereof, we shall see anon) but of so little observation in the course of business, and so obscure in the esteem of such as have spoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to find their names; and having found their names, to bid you not to seek for more; there being nothing else in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the Body aggregated of those several Members, it was first planted, as is noted and proved elsewhere, by Ludim the Son of Mizraim, and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture hath the name of Ludim. A Nation not much taken notice of in the first Ages of time, but by an Error of Josephus: who giving too much credit to some Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the Reputation of the Jews to the highest pitch, telleth us a Story, how the Æthiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moses; the City of Meroe besieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his hands by Tharbus, the Daughter of the King, who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the City was married unto him. All this not only questioned but rejected by discerning Men, as a Jewish Fable, that hath no Ground to stand upon in true Antiquity. With little better Fortune, and as little Truth, do the Æthiopians tell the Story of their own Original. By whom we are informed, that Chus the Son of Cham, first reigned in this Æthiopia; to whom succeeded his Son Regma, and next after Dedan; that from the Death of Dedan, till the Reign of Aruch (the certain time whereof they tell not) the People lived in Caves and Holes digged under the Ground; as did the Troglodytes, an ancient Nation of this Country, in the times long after: That Arac first built the City of Aruma, and by that Pattern taught them the use of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend, is the Story of Maqueda, a Queen hereof, and fourth from Aruch; whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Testaments, for the Royal Visit which she bestowed upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with Child by Solomon when she was in the Court, she was delivered of a Son, whom she caused to be called Melech, or Melilech; and at the age of 20 years to be sent to his Father: By whom instructed in the Law, and circumcised, and called by the name of David; he was returned into his Country, with
Azarius

Azarias, the Son of Zadok the Priest, who had stolen the two Tables of the Law, and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen resigned the Empire to her Son. His Successors afterwards called David, till Indion (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace, returning home, baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the substance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Gospel.) That Chus planted in Arabia, hath been shewn already, as also what absurdities must needs arise from supposing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore most probable it is, that this Country was first peopled by the Children of Ludim, as before was said. To whom the Abassines coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added; and in some tract of time be of such great power as to put their name upon the Country. For that the Abassines were originally an Arabian people, appears by Stephanus, one of the old Chorographers, who out of Uranus (an ancienter Author than himself) hath told us this, Ἀβασσινὸν ἔθνος Ἀραβίας. Another Stephanus, and he a very learned Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath, as he thinks decided the Controversie, by making Sheba the Son of Chus, the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Shiba the Son of Regma, the Father of the Æthiopians: and for this cause hath fitted us with this pretty Criticism, that Sheba when it is written with Samech, must be rendered Æthiopia; and Arabia, when writ with Shin. But this by no means will be found to agree the controversie; it being evidently clear that both Sheba the Son of Chus and Shiba the Son of Regma, were originally settled in Arabia, as hath here been shewn; though I deny not, but that some of the posterity of Chus in those elder times, (before the coming over of the Abassine Nations) might either out of too much Populosity, or desire of Change, cross over the Arabian Gulf, and take up such part of this Country as the Ludims had not fully peopled: with whom conjunct at last, both in name and government. And for Maqueda (supposing that to be her name) she was doubtless Queen of the Sabæans in Arabia Felix, not of the Æthiopians in the Waste of Africa: For besides the longsomeness of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel; it is very probable, that the Son of Solomon by this Lady, would never have suffer'd Egypt to have lain in quiet, whilst Sesac the King thereof made war upon Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon also, and so by consequence his half Brother. But to leave these uncertain Fables, the first action of moment which we meet with in unquestioned Story, touching those Æthiopians, is that which hap'n'd betwixt them and Cambyses the Persian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Persia, conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Æthiopia unto Egypt also. Upon this Resolution he sent Embassadors to that King to search into the Passages of his Country, and discover his strengths; and by them sent a Tun of Wine, some Bracelets, a Purple Habit, and a Box of sweet Ointments to present him with. Which Presents being tendered to him, he looked upon the Unguents and the Purple Robe, as too slight and effeminate: the Bracelets he conceived to be Bonds or Fetters, and openly laugh'd at them, as too weak to hold in a Prisoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleased, and sorrowed that his Country yielded no such Liquor. But understanding well enough what his Visit aimed at, he gave the Embassadors at their parting (amongst other Gifts) an Æthiopian Bow of great length and strength; requiring them to tell their Master, That until every Persian could bend that Bow (the Æthiopian Bows being a foot longer than the Persian, as before was noted) it would be no safe warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cause to thank the Gods for giving the Æthiopians so contented minds, as not to think of conquering their Neighbours Kingdoms. Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vast Mountains, we find them not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans meddled with them, had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen hereof, during the Empire of Augustus: who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governor of that Province, brought to such conformity, that she was fain to sue for Peace, and to purchase it with the loss of some part of her Country. To keep them quiet for the future, Philæ an Æthiopian City, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garrison by the Romans, and the Seat of their Deputy for these parts: held by them till the Empire of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned, because the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthiopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire: insomuch as Justinian sent unto Helistheus, as Junius his Successor did unto Archetas, the then Kings of this Country; to crave their brotherly assistance against the Persians.

Of their Conversion to the Faith in the Reign of a second Candace, (unless as Pliny thinketh, Candace was the general Name of all their Queens) we have spoken already. To which the Æthiopians add, that after the baptizing of their first Philip (the Son of that Candace) by the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperours succeeding had the name of Philip; till the Religious life of John, a Contemporary of the Emperour Constantine, honoured as a Saint after his decease, made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John, prefixed that of Presbyter, because (as they affirm) he executeth as well the Sacerdotal as the Royal Office: Rex idem hominum, Presens; Sacerdos, the very Animus of the Poet. And this is commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Priester John, and his Estate, the Empire of Priester John, with no truth at all. Others more probably conceive that this vulgar name of Priester John, is but a corruption, or mistaken for Pretagian (or Precrus John) and that the word Prete (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no less. And yet I more incline to those, who finding that the word Pretegan signifieth an Apostle, in the Persian Tongue; and Preteganis, an Apostolical Man; do thereupon infer, that the title of Padescha Prestigiani, an Apostolick King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxy of his Belief. Which not being understood by some, instead of pretegan they have made Priest John in Latin Presbyter Johannes: as by a like mistake, one Pregent, or Pregiant, (as the French pronounce it) Commander of some Gallies under Levis the XII. was by the English of those times called Priester John. Prestigiani then, not Priest John, is his proper adjunct; contracted, yet commonly called the Prete, by the Modern French, who usually leave out s before a Consonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, than it is at the present, shrewdly impaired of late times by the Turks and Arabians; Of which the first have taken from him all his Country, from the Isle of Meroe unto Egypt, with all the Sea-coasts of Barnagassi; the latter as much encroaching on them, on the rest of the Maritime parts of his Dominions. But from none have they suffered more than the Kings of Adel, who have divers times laid wast their Country, discomfited some of them in the open Field, and in the year 1558 slain their King in battel: not cured of those wounds to this very day. For Adam, who succeeded Claudius that was slain in battel, was so far from being able to revenge the death of his Predecessor, that being suspected to incline to Mahometanism, he was defeated by the under-King of Barnagassi. Since which time they have so languished by intestine dissensions, that though Alexander the Third (if there were ever such a King, which I find much doubted) is said to have settled his affairs by the aid of the Portugals, and that some strange successes have been since reported of a later Emperour: yet the truth is, that the Estate hereof hath been so imbroiled in Civil Wars, and so many of their Emperours successively murdered, that the power and reputation of it is exceedingly weakned, and the Country made a prey to impuissant Enemies. For in the year 1603. the Emperour Meleb Godad, who succeeded in the Throne by the Deposition and Imprisonment of his Predecessor, (under colour of Bastardy) was not long after slain by one Zezelebens: and James or Jacob, advanced unto the Empire:

piece: James not long after vanquished and slain in the fields of Guera, by one Saxinifus (contractedly by some called Sufneus) his three Sons being forced to fly to provide for safety. What became of the two Eldest, I have no where found. The youngest, called Ziga Cristos, after many hazardous Wandrings and Accidents, arriv'd at last into Italy, and thence he came to Paris, Anno 1638. where he was entertained in the quality of a Prince, but without hope of being restored to the Throne of his Fathers; for Saxinifus, or Sufneus, immediately upon the Victory, had possessed himself of the whole Empire; though for a time to terribly disquieted with Treasons and Conspiracies, that in the year 1657. he was fain to sue for aid to the King of Spain and tender a submission of the Abassine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the Spirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not so easily be laid down, (though there followed a long calm between) but that it brake out again within a few years after (that is to say, about the year 1628.) more violently than it did before: a powerful Rebel starting up, who followed by an Army of 50000, had unquestionably dispossessed the Prete of his whole Dominions; if not prevented and discomfited beyond expectation. For it happened, that one Vermeile, a Frenchman, a Jeweller by Trade but exercised in the Wars of Holland, understanding that the Abassine Empress was much delighted with the Rarities and Jewels of France, found means to convey himself into the Court; where understanding the great danger which that great Emperour was in, and the ignorance as well of the good Subjects, as of the Rebels, in the Arts of War, he got leave to have the disciplining or training of 8000 Men; with which small Army, he utterly discomfited and routed that vast body of Rebels, and was thereupon deservedly made Commander in Chief of all the Forces of the Empire. This is the last News of any certainty that hath come from thence: it being An. 1634. in which that Victory was obtained) but that there hath been a report of some new Commotions, An. 1648. the particulars and truth whereof, must be sought elsewhere. In the year 1686. an Account was given from Hissbahab, the Capital of Persia, by a Romish Monk, that Nigus Fassick Adiam Saguid had succeeded John De Basilides, Grandchild of Sufneus, in the Kingdom of Æthiopia; and that the Guleas disquieting him, he had resolved to lead all his Forces against him: This, said he, is all the Changes that have happened there in Church or State since 1631. By which it is plain, what Princes have Reigned Since, and that they are the Descendents of the last King mentioned by the Author.

Yet notwithstanding these disasters, these later Emperours have still preserved their Majesty among their Subjects whom they hold in Servitude enough, though they keep not such a distance as in former Ages, when the Prete was honoured as a God, and used to shew himself but thrice in a year, viz. on Cristmas, Easter, and Holyrood-day: by which retiredness it was thought that he made his presence more acceptable; some holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majesty of a King, than to make himself too common an object for the eye of the Vulgar. The like kind of state was once kept by those Kings of France of the first Merovignian line; who withdrawing themselves from all publick Affairs, used only to shew themselves (as we have already said) on May-day. A greater retiredness than this, was that which Velleday Queen of the Teusteri, (a people of the Rhine) is reported by Tacitus to have used; for when the rest of the Germans then in Arms, sent Ambassadors to her to inform her of their Victory against the Romans, they were prohibited either to speak to her, or to see her; Arcebanter aspectu, quo venerationis plus inesset. Such a keeping of State the Politick Prince Tiberius used, when the German Legions mutined; for he deigned not himself to see them pacified, but sent his Son; the reason was, quia majestati major & longinquo reverentia. And no doubt, the same keeping of distance swayed much with him, when he forsook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propension to follow his unnatural pleasures the more securely, together with his deformities on his face, had also their powers upon his resolution.

The Title of this great and mighty Emperour, (but neither so great or mighty in power as title) runneth thus: N. N. Supream of his Kingdoms, and the beloved of GOD, the Pillar of Faith, sprung from the Stock of Judah, the Son of David, the Son of Solomon, the Son of the Column of Sion, the Son of the Seed of Jacob, the Son of the hand of Mary, the Son of Nahu after the flesh, the Son of St. Peter & Paul after the Spirit; Emperour of the Higher and Lesser Æthiopia, and of the most mighty Kingdoms, Dominions and Countries of Xoa, Goa, Caffares, Fatigar, Angotæ, Balig-nazo, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the fountains of Nile, Amara, Banguamedion, Ambea, Vangucum, Tigre-maon, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Barnagallum; and Lord of all the Regions under the Confines of Egypt.

It seemeth by this Title, that these Æthiopian Emperours, however the truth of Story goeth, conceive themselves to be sprung from Solomon and Miqueada, (or Nizante, as Joseph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by some reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the same with those of the Tribe of Judah, which are a Lion Rampant in a Field Or: and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah shall overcome. But Bava, an expert Herald, giveth this Prince no such Coat-Armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a Cross Portate Mars, charged with a Crucifix Sol, between two Scourges of the Second. And yet not altogether to discredit the old Tradition so generally received amongst them; it may be probable enough, that when the Abassins came into Æthiopia, some of the Sabeans their next Neighbours, came along for company, and amongst them some of the Royal Race of the Queen of Saba; with some of which, by reason of their great Nobility, some of the Abassine Emperours might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impossibility, but that Solomon (considering his course of life) might get a Son upon the body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus descended.

As for the Government of these Emperours, it is absolutely Regal, or to say better, perfectly Despotic: the people being treated by them more like Slaves than Subjects; taking away Seigniories, and giving them unto whom he pleaseth, the deprived party not daring to express the least discontent. By them so revered, that it was anciently a custom, if the King were blind, or lame, or maimed, for the Subject to inflict on his own Body the like impression: still had in so much honour by the greatest Subject, that at his bare name they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their Fingers; and reverence his Parvilion as they pass by, though he be not in it. He on the other side seldom appeareth to his Subjects, but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a piece of Watchet-Tuffata, which he lieth up and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revenues, some of our late Observators speak nothing but wonders. Some say his Empire reacheth from the Red-Sea to the Atlantick Ocean, and from one Tropick to the other: Some, that he is of so great Riches, that he is able to purchase a moiety of all the world if it were to be sold; others, that he is able to raise for present service a Million of Men. And he himself is said to have offered to the Portugals one Million of Money, and another of Men, if they would imploy it in a War against the Infidels. But notwithstanding these great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be such a Miracle as some of these reports have made him. For they that speak most knowingly of his Revenue, affirm that the ordinary expenses of his Court and Army being discharged, he coffereth up but three Millions of Crowns per annum; which is no great great matter: and upon extraordinary emergencies of War and Trouble, will be easily waisted, or brought into a narrower compass. And yet to make up this Revenue, besides the Crown-Lands, or Domin Imperial, he layeth some Tax or other upon every house, receiveth the Tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines; and levieth on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaseth to chuse, so it be not that in which the Lords themselves inhabit.

This, though it be no great Intrado, considering the large extent of his Dominions, and Form of his Government; yet it is greater in proportion than his Forces, are. For notwithstanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag of raising a Million of Men for present service; it is well known, that he was never able to advance half that number in his greatest necessity; and amongst those whom he can raise, there are but few who can deserve the name of Soldiers. For the People being poor and beggarly, and brought up in a servile and base condition, are naturally destitute of that courage and alacrity of Spirit which should be in Men professing Arms, or fit for Noble Undertakings, and are besides, on certain Jealousies of State, so disused from War, that they know not how to use their Weapons, when there is occasion. So that for my part, I consider him as a weak and Impuissant Prince, of no Authority or Influence out of his Dominions; nor able to defend himself from the continual Inursions of his Neighbours (some of them mean and petit Princes) which lie nearest to him. Landlocked on every side from Traffick and Commerce with the Seas; incroached upon Northward by the Turks; confronted on the West by the King of Borneo, who possesseth not a tenth part of the Land of Negroes; on the East, continually bearded and baffled by the King of Adel, sometimes a Kajal of his own; and on the South with the Galla, a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waste before them wheresoever they come; and finally in the latter time by his own Subjects. Injuries not to be endured, had he power to help it.

But the chief stay of this Estate, is an Order of Knight-hood, entituled by the name of St. Anthony, to which every Father that is of the degree of a Gentleman, is to destinate one of his Sons, if he have above two, but not the eldest; and out of these they cull about 12000 Horse, which are to be the standing Guard of the Emperour's person: their Oath is, to defend the Frontiers of the Empire, to preserve Religion, and to make head against the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbots of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara, where they have two Monasteries, as well for the training up of these Knights in the time of their Youth, as their retirement when grown old, and discharged from Service: When the Portuguese in the last Century sent Succours to Claudius the then Emperour, tho' the Main body returned, some part staid behind, and were married to the Women of Æthiopia; and their Posterity has since encreased to many thousands, and are trained up as Foot-men to the use of Fire-Arms; for which they are accounted the best part of the Forces of this Kingdom, and have lands and Good Privileges allowed to them for their Support and Encouragement.

The Arms of this Empire we have seen before.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red Sea, (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulph of Arabia, to the Southern Ocean) on the West, with the Æthiopic Ocean; on the North, with Terra Nigritarum, and the Hyper Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Conus, with the Main Ocean, parting it from the Southern undiscovered Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reason before delivered; Inferior was added for distinction sake, because some what of a lower situation than the other is. By Ptolemy called Æthiopia Interior, because lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge, than the nearer did: and by late Writers, for the contrary reason, called Æthiopia Exterior, because situate without and beyond the other. Mr. Pory thusounds it: On the North it has the great River Zaire and the Upper Æthiopia, and on the other sides it is encompassed with the Ocean, stretching it self Northwards to the entrance of the Red Sea, and bounding the Upper Æthiopia East, West, and South; and divided into the Kingdoms of Congo, Monotapia, the Coast of Casares, Zanguibar, and Adel, with many other smaller Kingdoms. by which Description, he brings it more to the North than our Author doth, who takes Adel and Aldea into the Upper Æthiopia.

It comprehendeth all Ptolemy's Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia sub Ægypto, and all those Lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Country so little discovered in those elder times, that we find mention only of some eminent Mountains, as 1. Ganchis, 2. Lon, 3. Zipsia, 4. Bardis, 5. Amara; one only Region known by name, called Agisimba, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a huge extent. The People not distinguished here as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but only by their kind of diet; some of them being called Anthrophagi, from their eating of Men; and others Ichthyophagi, from their living on fish. Of these, the first inhabited on the Eastern shores, near the Bay of Barb, the principal of which had the name of Ropji; the second on the shores of the Western Ocean, near Alaput Sum, or the Great Bay; called also from their Western situation, by the name of Esperii. Nothing else told us of these parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Pans of N were occasioned by the great abundance of Snow, which fell from the Mountains of the Moon: and that in many places hereof, there were Rhinoceros, Tygers, Leopards, but these last all white.

Such was the face of this Country in those elder days. The Character of it at the present, generally and in brief, is thus given by Aubame, viz. That it is Mountainous in the West, Sandy in the middle, and Desert towards the East. But for the several qualities of the soil and people being of very different tempers; we shall give the better description of them in their several Indoures, then as presented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills and Rivers of most reckoning in it; the principal of their Mountains are, 1. those called Cantaber in the Province of Apola, abounding in excellent Silver

Mines

Mines; 2. Lunæ Montes, formerly accounted for the boundary of both Æthiopia's, now found to belong to this alone. A Chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropick of Capricorn; full of sharp Rocks, of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous and savage people: the Vallies underneath of so great a depth, that they seem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Country is the Lake of Zembre, so much renowned for giving birth to the greatest Rivers of the World; though it self but 50 miles in compass. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1. Nilus, which passing through some part of this Country and traversing the whole length of the Abassine and Egyptain Empires, endeth its long course in the Mediterranean. 2. Zaire, the greatest of all Africk, but unknown to the Ancients; which running Westward through the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the lesser Streams of 1. Vumba, 2. Barbela, 3. Coanza, 4. Lelunda, makes many Islands in his way, and, at the last by a mouth of 28 miles wideness, disgorgeth his full stomach in the Western Ocean. 3. Cuama, which making his passage towards the East, and much increased by the addition of six great Rivers, after a long course of 700 miles (in all which it is Navigable) loseth it self in the Indian, or Arabian Ocean. And 4. Fluvius Spiritus sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghost, which shaping a Course opposite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in conclusion in the Southern Seas. It is divided most properly into these four parts, that is to say, 1. Zanguebar, 2. Monomotapa, 3. Cafra-ria, 4. Manicongo. Some also add the Country of Aium, subdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. But these we have ascribed with better reason to the other Æthiopia, within the Bounds whereof they are wholly situate.

It may be observed here once for all, that in all the barbarous Nations round the Globe, we meet with Man Eaters or Cannibals; the Reasons of which I conceive are two; first, their Barbarous Feirceness against their Enemies, so that not content to Kill them, they afterwards Eat them too: It being observed, the Americans eat none but their Enemies, tho' some Nations have been observed to eat the Dead Bodies of their Friends out of Respect and Love: Secondly; their Improvidence in making due and timely Provisions for Famines and Times of great Scarcity; so that when such seasons happen, they are soon reduced to eat one the other, or Starve. And it is probable this Custom arose at first from one of these Causes, tho' it might afterwards be carried on out of pure Ferity and Rudeness. The Civiler Nations abhor this as the utmost Barbarity; whereas they ought rather to Consider, that some few Ages since, it was the Custom of the Countries they now inhabit; and so they ought rather to Pity and Reduce these Poor Barbarians to better Manners, than to hate them for it.

1. ZANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR, is bounded on the East with the Red Sea, or the Indian Ocean, on the West with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia; on the North with the Higher Æthiopia only; on the South with Monomotapa. The reason of the name I find not.

It containeth in it the great Province of Agisimba, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior, and in so much of the other also as lieth on the South of the River Raptus; now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. The Country on both sides of that River, known in old times by the name of Barbaria, giveth to a large adjoining Bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus, and was much famed in those Elder Times for the best sort of Myrrh: the Myrrh Tropoditica, and Myrrh Barbara, or Barbarica, being used for the same by some of the Ancients, because the Tropodites, and the people of this Barbaria joyned on one another. Here was also in those elder times a good Race of Ginger, of which saith Dioscorides, Μάρος φλοιός ἐστὶ καυζόμην ἐκ τῆς Βαρβαρίας, That it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbaria. Where by the way, the Scholiasts upon that Author, and Pliny in the 12. Book, have been much mistaken; of which the first takes this Barbaria or Barbaria for some part of the Indies; the other thinketh, that the Myrrh of these parts had the name of Barbara, from the drossiness and coarseness of it, as if so called only because unrefined. The Principal Town hereof called Rapta, by the name of the River, seated not far from the Sea; and by reason of the great Trade of it, esteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolemy. A noted Promontory of the same name was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called; The Country is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflowed with unruly Rivers; and withal so full of Woods and Forests, that for want of passage for the Wind, the Air is generally (as in all Fenny Countries of the like obstruction) exceeding pestilent. The People of Complexion black, and of curled hair; Mahometans on the Sea-Coasts; in the Inland-parts Idolaters; extremely given to Witchcraft and Divinations. Naked above the Waste, and beneath covered only with the skins of Beasts or some such mingled colour stuff, as the Scottish Plaid. The Moors which dwell on the Sea-coasts, use to adventure on the Seas in little Vessels, sow'd together with leathern thongs, and calked with Gum; having no other Sails in them than the leaves of Palm-trees. Boats of as slight making as those used anciently by the Britans, whereof thus the Poet:

Texitur in puppim; caesoque induta juvenco
Vectoris patiens, tumidum superenatat Annem.*

Which I find thus rendred to my hand:

*The moistned Oser of the hoary Willow
Is woven first into a little Boat;
Then cloath'd in Bullocks Hides; upon the Billow
Of a Proud River lightly doth it float.*

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to say, 1. Melinde, 2. Bombaza, 3. Quiloo, 4. Mosambique, 5. Sofala, all along the Coasts, 6. Moenbamage, 7. Corova, 8. Calen, 9. Anzuga, 10. Monzabo, 11. Budin, 12. Mombra, 13. Mombizo, 14. Embroe, and 15. Marcaos, more within the Land. Of the ninelast, not being perfectly discovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we shall now be silent. But the first six lying upon the Shores, or near it, and consequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventurers, shall be surveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom, on the South of the Realm of Adea, in the higher Æthiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci: so named from Melinde, the chief City of it, well Walled, and seated in a fruitful and delightful Soil; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Flesh, Lemons, Citrons, and most sorts of Fruits; but not well furnished with Corn, the greatest part whereof is brought out of Cambaia, a Province of India. The Houses built of Lime and Stone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-Coasts of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; those of the Inlands, which are of the Original Natives, for the most part Heathens. Most of them of an Olive colour, but inclining to White; the Women generally of as white Complexion as in other places; but they have some black People also: and all of them more civil in their Habit, Course of Life, and Entertainment in their Houses, than the rest of this Country. Great Friends to the Portugals, and befriended by them, ever since the kind Entertainment which which they gave to Vasques de Gama; whom they furnished with Pilots to direct in his way to India, when first discovered by that People, Anno 1497. They have an Iron Mine which they work to great advantage, Nubiensis, p. 27. This City stands six days Sail South of Berna, now Brava, and two North of Monbaza. Pory saith, the Kingdom stretcheth into the Land 100 Miles; the Capital City is strong and very rich. From Chaul the Portuguese Trade along the Coast of Melinda in Æthiopia, within the Land of Casraria. On that Coast are many good Harbours, kept by the Moors (Arabians.) Thither they bring corse Bombast, and carry back Slaves, Ivory, and some Amber and Gold. Hackl. T. 2. p. 242. This was in 1569.

Note here, that all the Cities on the East of Africa, beyond Cape Guarda Fuy to the South, were built by the Arabians, who from the 12th Century, drove a great Trade here, and the most of them are mentioned by the Nubian Geographer, by the same Names they now have.

2. MOMBAZA is the name of another of these petty Kingdoms, of the same nature for the temper of the Soil and People that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief City of it, situate from Melinde about 70 Miles, in a little Island of 12 Miles compass; but of good influence on some part of the Continent also. The Isle and City said to have some resemblance unto the Rhodes. The Town about a League in circuit, environed with a Wall, and fortified with a Castle; built by the Portuguese, and a fine Sea-Port or Haven, the Streets thereof very narrow but well built, most of the Houses being Brick, and the Mosques capacious. The King hereof a Mahometan, as are most of his Subjects, and a bitter Enemy of the Christians. For which cause, and upon some discourtesies received from them, the Town was taken by Vasques de Gama, An. 1500. but abandoned again by reason of the unhealthy Air, not well agreeing with the constitution of the Portugals. Afterwards having taken in Alibeg, and five Turkish Gallies, the better to enable themselves against the Portugals; the Town was taken and ruined by Thomas de Catigno, sent thither Anno 1589. by the Portugal Vice-Roy residing in Gua, there being taken at that time (besides the spoil of the City) all the Turkish Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many lesser Pieces of Ordnance. Such of the Turks and Citizens as escaped the slaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themselves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Imbians, a Man-eating People, who had before besieged the City; and gathering up such gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King, and as many of the Principal Citizens as they could get into their hands: 2. Ampaza, the second Town of Note, was taken by the Portugals about two years after.

3. QUILOA lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Country rich and pleasant, the Inhabitants for the most part of Arabian Ancestry; of Complexion near unto a White: their Women comely, sumptuous in Attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their Houses, which are generally well built, and richly furnished. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whose Honour they are very tender) the People of this Quiloo are said to have a strange Custom amongst them, more to be mention'd for the rarity than the decency of it: which is the sowing up of the private passages of Nature in their Female Children, leaving only a small vent for their Urine. Thus sowed, they keep them carefully at home, till they come to be Married. And she that is by her Husband found to want this sign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kind of Ignominy sent back to her Parents, and by them as disgracefully received.

It took this name from Quiloo, the chief Town hereof, situate in a little Island, but near the Shore, from which parted by a narrow Fryth, opposite to the mouth of the River Corva, by some called Quiola, which my Author erroneously saith, springeth from the same Lake with the Nile, in a fresh and cool Air, and surrounded with Trees always Green, and a fruitful Country, yielding plenty of Victuals; first built in the 400 year of the Hegira, by Ali, the Son of Sultan Hiseben; who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, because their Mothers were Persians, and his an Abassine, sought new Adventures in these parts, and bought this Island. His Successors grown Rich and Powerful by the Trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land; and so Adorned Quiloo, the chief Town of their Kingdom; that for Sumptuous and Magnificent Buildings, there were few like it in those parts. Proud of their many good Successes, they provoked the Portugals, by whom, under the Conduct of Vasquez de Gama, An. 1500. the City it self was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave some Fortresses erected by them in convenient Places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a Quarrel with Abraham, then the King of this Country; whom in the year 1505. they Deposed from his Kingdom, and placed another in his Throne, under the colour of not paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians rose in Arms, displaced their new King, demolished their Fortifications, and sent them to learn better moderation in their prosperous Fortunes. An. 1509. it was taken by Franci. Almaida, the Portugal Viceroy of Africa. The business coming after to a Composition, the Quiloo covenanted for the yearly Tribute of 1500 Marks of Gold, paid unto the Portugals, to live in Peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble. The Portuguese built a Fort on the City Island, which is since demolished by order of the King of Portugal. Pory. The Inhabitants are Moors, Tall of Stature, and Contemptible as to Courage. The Island has plenty of Rice, Millet, Cattle, Woods, Palm-trees, Lemons, Oranges, and Sugar-Canes, which cannot improve.

4. MOSAMBIQUE lieth on the South of Quiloo. So called of Mosambique the chief City of it, situate in a little Island, the principal of three, opposite all of them to the mouth of the River Moghincats, and bordering on the Promontory of old called Uassum, spoken of by Ptolemy, and by him made the furthest known place of all this Coast. In the Island there are said to be Sheep, whose Tails are 27 pound weight, as in other places of these Countries, and some parts of Syria; Hens, black in Feathers, Flesh, and Bone; and if soddin, make the Water as black as Ink, but yet sweeter in Taste than any other. Of Pork good store; the more, because the People are for the most part of the Law of Mahomet, by which all Hog-meat is forbidden. The Inland parts more barren, but very populous; so ignorant and rude when the Portugals first came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they sold fifteen Kine, and then fell out among themselves, who would have the Bell. The Town conveniently seated on a large and capacious Haven, and fortified with a very strong Castle, in the hand of the Portugals; who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, use to call in here, and fit themselves with all things necessary to pursue their Voyage. A Town of so great Wealth and Trading, that the Captain of the Castle in the time of his Government (which continueth only for Three years) is said to lay up 300000 Ducats for his lawful Gains, out of that Gold that cometh from Sofala, a Gain so great, that at the end of his Three years, he is to serve for three years more at some place or other of the East Indies, at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal, and then permitted to return into his Native Country. Such of that Nation as are suffer'd to inhabit here, are enjoined to be Married, to the end the Island should be well Peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwise perhaps might have few else in it but the Garrison Soldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants. This City is seated in a low Fenny Ground, in an unwholesom Air, but for the security of the Haven, defended by a strong Fort, and for the plenty of Victuals and Trade, it was frequented beyond most of the Ports of this Ocean, especially whilst the East India Trade was in the hands of the Portuguese. On the Coast of Melinda the King of Portugal hath the Castle of Mosambique which is of as great Importance Importance as any Castle that he hath in all his Indies, Huckl. T. 2 p. 242.

5. SOFALA lieth on the South of Mosambique, from which, parted by the River Cuama, the greatest River of those parts, and thence extended to the Mountains which they call Manica, by which separated from Monomotapa: So called from Sofala, the chief City of it, situate in a little Island (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoining. Both Town and Island subject unto the Power of the Portugals; who have a Fort, the better to secure the Factory by them here erected, one of the richest in the World; the People bringing in hither great quantity of Gold, of which they have most plentiful Mines; which they exchange with them for their Cloth and other Commodities. It is supposed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yearly. The supposition so agreeable to all other circumstances, that little question need be made of the truth thereof. Inasmuch as this Country for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by some thought to be that Land of Ophir, to which Solomon sent: And of this Opinion Ortelius in his Thesaurus was the first Author; but in my Mind, upon no probable conjecture, and against very strong presumption. For first, Ophir the Son of Jochan, of whom mention is made Gen. 29. verse 10. and from whom the Land of Ophir, in all likelihood took its name, is in the next verse said to have planted in the East; whereas this Sofala is situate South-West from Chaldea, in which the confusion of Tongues, and dispersing of the People began. And Secondly, it is impossible for the Navy of Solomon, which lay at Ezion-Geber, in the Bay of Arabia, to have spent three years in coming hither and returning: which we find to have been the usual time of finishing the Voyage to Ophir, 1 Kings, 10. Ophir then is some part of India; but whether it were the Island of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan, or one of the Moluccoes, or the Land of Malaca, called by the Ancients Aurea Chersonesus, I dare not determine; considering what worthy Men maintain these several Opinions. Nubiensis, p. 30. mentions this Country, and saith, in his time it had these Mines of Gold, and the Cities of Hantema, Dandema, Saiona, the Princes Residence, Bocha and Gasta. The Gold of this Country was the best in the World. This was the most Southern part then known on the Eastern part of Africa; it lying 21 Degrees beyond the Line on the Western Coast; they knew nothing beyond the Southern Mouth of the Niger, which lies in 11 Degrees of Northern Lat. The King is a Moor, and a Tributary to the Crown of Portugal, not being able to oppose the King of Monotapia without that Dependance. Before the Portuguese, the Moors of Magadoxo and Quiloa had this rich Trade. Pory.

6. MOENHEMAGE, or MONOEMUG, the only Inland Province of any note, hath on the East Mombaza and Quiloa; on the West, the famous River Nilus; on the North, some part of the Dominions of the Abassine Emperors; on the South, Mosambique. The Country very plentiful of Mines of Gold, yet the People use it not for Money; but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks and Taffaraes, with which they use to cloath themselves from the Girdle downwards. Instead of Money they make use of Red Counters, much resembling Glasse. Governed by a King of their own, who holds confederacy with the Kings of Mombaza and Quiloa, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are also subject a wild and cruel People, called Agag, inhabiting on the Lake Zembre, and the Banks of the Nilus; dispersed about the Fields in their homely Cottages, black Cannibals, and of an horrible Aspect; more horrible than otherwise they would be, by drawing Lines upon their Cheeks with an Iron Instrument, and forcing their Eye lids to turn backwards. By the assistance of this People, the King of Moembemage hath hitherto preserved his Estate against the King of Monomotapa; and they themselves by some of their own Leaders did so distress the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a small Island, where he hardly escaped a violent and untimely death, most of his People being starved. Of which more hereafter.

Touching the rest of these Provinces, we can say but little; and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the most part from one another, both in speech and Behaviour; each Village under a several King, and each in a continual Quarrel with its next neighbours; whom, if they overcome, they eat. At leisure times they live by Hunting, and the flesh of Elephants. And amongst these, but more upon the borders of the Abassine Empire, I place the Galle; a Nationless Nation as it were, without House or Dwelling, without Law or Government; as barbarous and horrid as the Agags (whom some call Jagge or Giacqui) are affirmed to be, who watching their advantages, and joined together in some Arts of doing mischief, have made of late such Desolations in the Country of Prestor-John. It is very remarkable, that the Coast of Africa was known to Mosambique in Ptolemy's time, and but to Sofala in all the times that followed, till the Portuguese doubled the Cape of Good-hope, and so came from the South to meet and stop the further progress of these Mahometans.

2. MONOMOTAPA.

MONOMOTAPA, BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all these names it is called) is bounded on the North, with the River Cuama, by which, and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar; on the West and South, by the River of the Holy Ghost, by which separated from Cafraria; and on the East by the main Ocean. So that is almost an Island; said to contain in compass 750 Spanish Leagues, or 3250 Italian Miles. It contains in it 25 Kingdoms, which are all governed by Kings, subject to the Emperor of Monotapia. The principal City is of the same name.

The Air hereof is said to be very temperate, and the Country very good and pleasant, yet full of Forests. Well watered, besides the two great Rivers before mentioned, with the Streams of 1. Panami, 2. Luanga, 3. Arruga, 4. Mangeano, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their sands. By means whereof it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great store of Pasturage; on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beasts very large and great, such store of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reason, but to make Merchandise of their Teeth: Their Gold-Mines, great and small, reckoned to 3000; some in the hills of Magnice, others in the Province of Matuca and Boro; the places where the Mines are, known without further art in the discovery of them by the dryness and barrenness of the Soil; as if Nature could not hold up Gold in her spacious Bosome, but she must needs be barren of all good Works. This Gold is the purest in all Africa, dug out of the Earth with ease, lying not above three Foot deep, and in some desert places, the People find great pieces of Gold upon the surface of the Earth, some of which weigh an Ounce. The Portuguese have seated in this Kingdom upon the River Sene at Sofala, and some of them have 5000 Cafres to their Slaves, with which they make War, upon slight occasion; the Governour of Mozambique furnishing them with Calico's, Arms, &c. at his own Rates. Tavernier, p. 2. p. 156. Pory in his Introduction to Leo Africanus gives a large Account of this mighty Empire; which he saith, is supported principally by Amazons, or Female Warriors, p. 32.

The People are of mean stature, and black complexions; but strong and active, courageous, and of such footman-ship that they out-run Horses. Their apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make or buy from some other place: their Diet Flesh, Fish, Rice, Mill; and an Oil called Sufiman. Their Religion Paganism for the most part; yet they worship not Idols, but believe in one God only, which they call Moximo; and seem not muchaverse from the Christian

Christian Faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They punish nothing more severely than Wucherafi, Adultery, and Töft: and in the Punishment of Delinquents they use no Prisons, but execute them as soon as apprehended; which is the Reason that the Vulgar have no Doors to their Houses, that being a Privilege for the Nobles. They may have as many Wives as they will, but the first the Principal, and her Children only to be Heirs: The Women here very much respected (as a second England) the Emperor himself, if he meeteth any of them in the Streets, he giveth them the Way. They are not to be Married till their Menstrua, or Natural Purgations testify their Ability for Conception; and therefore they Solemnize the first Flux thereof with a liberal Feast.

Provinces of most note in it, and adjoining to it, but reckoned as Members of his Empire are.

1. MATUCA, rich in the Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Botonghi; who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropick, have in the Winter such deep Snows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not speedily down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy Ghost, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corrintes, (Caput Currentium in the Latins) wealthy in fat Pastures, and great herds of Cattel; more in her inexhaustible Mines of Gold. Memorable for a large, and in those times an impregnable Fortrefs, built formerly by some Foreign Prince to secure the Mines; of square Stone, and every Stone of marvellous greatness, without any sign of Cement or other Mortar; the Walls hereof 25 spans thick, but the height not answerable; over the Gate certain Characters written, which the most Learned of the Moors could never read. Perhaps the work of some of the Æthiopian or Abessine Emperors, when their Power and Empire was at the highest. By the Inhabitants who conceive it to be a work beyond Humane Power, it is thought to have been built by Devils; but by those who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, ascribed to Solomon, though situate 510 miles more Westward than Sofala, by their own account. The Air here very cold, by reason of the sharp blasts coming from the Pole-Antarctic; so much the colder, in that they have no wood, or other fuel, but what they make themselves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BORO, and 4. QUITICUL, both furnished with Gold also in their Mines and Rivers, but not so pure as that of Torra and Matuca; yet such as serves their turn so well, as to spoil all industry: the People here being very careless in providing necessaries, which they presume the Moors (I mean the Arabian Moors) will bring them in exchange hereof.

5. INHABAN, Governed by a King of its own, but Vassal and Tributary to the Emperor of Monomotapa, the King whereof in the year 1560. was Christened by Gonsalvo Silvera a Spanish Jesuite, by the Name of Cobstantine; his Queen baptized by the Name of Mary: but I find nothing of the further Progress of Christianity Touching 6. Mitana, 7. Milemba, 8. Buinbebe, 9. Berteca, and 10. Bavagul, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their Names.

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages; the Houses being here so thin, that from the Border of Sofala to the Fort of Torra, being 510 miles, as before is said, there is no sign of any Building either old or new. The Principal of those that be, 1. Tongum in the Province of Inbamban, and the Seat-royal of those Kings: Memorable for the Baptism of the King and Queen, which was there performed. 2. Simbus, supposed to be so called from the Agisymba of Ptolemy, the chief Town of the Province of Torra, or Banet; distant from Sofala one and twenty days journey, and neighboured by the Remains or Ruins of the old Fortrefs before described.

3. Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperor makes his usual residence; giving this Name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himself, whom they call Benomotaxa, or Monomotapata, the word in their Language signifying a King or Emperor.

The King hereof, accounted one of the greatest of Africk, hath under his command, besides the Provinces described, some part of Casraria. Of great Riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which so abundantly supply all the Royal occasions, that he exacteth no kind of Tribute from his Subjects, but some certain days Service in his Works; and from his Nobles Gifts and Presents, without which none of them are to come before him. His Forces great, the multitudes of Men considered; but weak, for want of Skill to use them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for modern Service; the Arms they most use being only Darts and Targets. For which cause, (and in regard the People of the subject Kingdoms are so prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the Heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hostages of their Fathers Loyalty) he wageth Mercenary Soldiers of other Nations, whom he distributeth abroad in his several Provinces; and amongst these it is affirmed, that he hath a strong Battalion of Amazons, a Warlike Race of Women, who inhabit about the Lake of Zambre, and the out-skirts of Zanzibar, compared by some for their Fidelity and Prowess, to the Turkish Janizaries. And yet, not trusting wholly to the Faith of these Mercenaries, it is said that he keeps 2000 Maltives for the Guard of his Person. Much revered by his Subjects, by whom he is served upon the Knee; and when he Cougheth or Drinketh, all those that are about him make such a shout, that the Town rings of it. In one particular they differ from most Nations else, which is, That such as are admitted into his Presence, are bound to Sit down in token of Reverence; to Stand before him, being a sign of the greatest Dignity which can be afforded unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Christianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560. the King hereof was baptized by Gonsalvo the Jesuit, by the Name of Sebastian, that being the Name of the King of Portugal then reigning. But afterwards, on the suggestions of some Arabians then in great place about him, having caused the Jesuit to be slain, he was warred upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 Men, under the Conduct of Francisco Barretio; to whom he offered very honourable amends for the Injury done: But Barretio having in hope swallowed all the Gold in the Country, would not admit of any Peaceable Agreement; but referred the Business to a Battel; in which being overcome himself, and his whole Forces not long after consumed by Sicknes, the hopes of Christianity, and the Portugals Interest in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. C A F R A R I A.

C A F R A R I A is bounded on the East with Rio di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; on the South and West, with the main Ocean; on the North, extended to some parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Casra, which in the Arabian Tongue signifieth an Heretic; a Name by them given to Christians, Heathens, and those of their own Religion also, which differ in Opinion from them; but given to this Region by some late Writers, because destitute of another name.

The Country, for so much of it as hath been discovered, is said to be full of great Herds of Cattel and Flocks of Sheep, abundance of Deer, Antilopes, Baboons, Foxes, Hares, Ostriches, Pelicans, Herons, Geese, Ducks, Pheasants, Partridges; in a word, all things necessary for the Life of Man, were it somewhat better stored with Corn, Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally stored with Woods and Forests: the Hills thereof intermixt with grassy Vallies, that ply 'tis so beautiful and rich a Country should be inhabited by so barbarous and rude a People, ple, who being utterly unprovided of Towns and Houses, live in Woods like Beasts. Of colour Black, thick Lips, flat Noses, long shaped Heads, and most monstrous Ears, extended far beneath their Shoulders, by hanging in them Iron chains, Glafs, Bullers, Bells, and such ponderous baubles. These Ornaments common to both Sexes, who also use (for their greater beauty) most hideously to flash themselves in all parts of their Bodies, even their very Belies; as if no lace could better suit with their Naked skins; with which only, except some flap of an Hide or other Leather to hide their Privates, they are here apparelled.

Their best Habits for the most part are the Hides of Beasts, undressed, unfashioned, just as they tear them from the Flesh; but when they cloath themselves with Sheep skins, they have so much wit as to wear their Fleece next their Bodies in cold weather, which at other times they expose (with no small Pride and Glory) to the open view. Their Voice so inarticulate, that it is hard to be distinguished into Words and Syllables; which being compared with that brutishness, which commonly appeareth in all their actions, makes it hard to say, whether the People generally may be thought to be Men in the Skins of Beasts, or Beasts created in the likeness and shape of Men. But they make a greater use of their Cattel, than for Garments only, their raw Flesh serving them for Food, and the Guts for Ornament, which hang about their Necks uncleansed, and with all the filth in them, in as great a bravery as Ropes of Pearl, or Chains of Gold in more civil Countries. Gold here so valued, that they exchange it gladly for Brass, or Iron, and that not only quantity for quantity, and weight for weight, but in such senseless disproportion, as rendreth Brass and Iron the more excellent Metals.

But amongst all the several Nations which inhabit this most flourishing Country, none are more barbarous than those whom they call the Imbians, they call themselves Hottentots, dwelling not far from the Cape of Good Hope; tall, square, and strong, addicted always to War and Rapine, and feeding on the Flesh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying Friends, whose death they halten for the Shambles; the Skulls of whom they use for their drinking Cups. Tavernier, Part 2. p. 204 saith, the Mother cuts out the right Stone of every Male as soon as it is born. They know nothing of Gold or Silver; God or Religion: neither Men nor Women are ashamed to shew their Nakedness, for indeed they are but a sort of Humane Beasts; yet after all they have some Knowledge in Simples, and cured several Dutchmen of desperate old Sores, with Herbs. They sell their Cattel for Aquaviva, Tobacco, Chrystal, and Agat-Beads, and old Iron. In all this he agrees exactly with Mr. Herbert, who was in these Parts. Their Weapons are poisoned Arrows, and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they always carry Fire before them, menacing thereby to Roast or Boil all such as they overcome. Their King (if such a sacred Name become such an impious Monster) they account for Lord of all the Earth; as the Portugals, of all the Seas: and he with the old Giant-like Arrogance, not only threatneth the Destruction of Men, but shooteth his poisoned Arrows against Heaven it self, as often as the Rain or Heat offends him. In the year 1589. about 80000 of them made an inroad into Zanzibar, laid desolate all the Country as far as Mombaza, which City they besieged, sacked, and devoured the People of it; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our description of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, scarce so much as Houses; and those so mean, that they deserve not to be so called: except it be some Sheds on the Sea sides, for the use of Sailors. Of most note in it, is Soldania, a large and capacious Road, about fifteen or sixteen Leagues on the North-West from the Cape of Good Hope; not so much noted for the Buildings adjoining to it (if there be any such) as the Bay it self; environed on all sides with a pleasant Country, enriched with variety of Herbs, not only pleasing to the Sense, but very Medicinal for many Diseases, especially for those that are troubled with the Scorbute, (or Scurvy, as we use to call it) the Hills adjoining stored with great multitudes of Cattel, both Sheep and Cows, though less in size than those in these Northern parts: great helps unto our Sea-men in their Eastern Voyages; for here such as are to sail towards the Indies, use to take in fresh Water, and make provision of things necessary for so long a Voyage. I have heard that some of our English Ships in their return from the East-Indies, seized on two Savages, living near this Bay, whom they brought on Ship board, with an intent to carry them into England, to the end, that having learned the English Tongue, we might be more particularly informed by them of the Estate and Affairs of this Country. One of these which was called Goore, being brought to London, (for the other died upon the way) was dieted and cloathed according to the English fashion, gratified also with beads, Rings, Beads, and such other things, by which they thought they might most gain upon him to affect the change of his Condition. But Home is home, though home but homely, as the saying is. For this poor wretch learned so much English as to bemoan his Misfortune, would throw himself upon the Ground, and cry out in great anguish and vexation of spirit, Goore home go, Goore home go, out of which unquietness of humour, when they could not get him, they sent him back in the next Ships which were bound to the Indies. After which time, as oft as he saw any Ship with English Colours, he would joyfully make towards the Bay with Guts and Garbage hanging about his Neck (as their Custom is) and readily perform all good Offices towards them; yet so, that it was found withal, that by discovering to the Natives how low esteem the English had of Brass and Iron, they thenceforth raised the Value of those richer Metals, which formerly they had parted with for such sorry trifles, as have been spoken of before.

But that which is of most consideration in all this Country, is the Cape it self; discovered by the Portugals, under the Conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their first Indian Undertakings; by whom, for the continual Tempests which he found about it, was first called Tormentosa. But afterwards the Portugals having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a prosperous Voyage, they caused it to be called, Cabo di Buena Esperanza, or the Cape of Good Hope: Vaques di Gama, the first Discoverer of this way to the Wealth of India, being then their Admiral, Anno 1497. The Discovery was first designed to be made in the year 1484. but much time was spent in procuring from the Pope a Grant of all the Lands and Trade they should find: And when they began the Enterprize, it was some years before they reached to this Cape. It consisteth of three great Points of head lands, of which that which is nearest us, is the Cape of Good Hope; the middlemost hath the Name of Cabo Falso, because mistaken for the other, by some of the Portugals, returning homewards; the third called Cabo della Gupha, or the Cape of Needles, by reason of those sharp Points which shoot towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape, is a large and pleasing Plain, adorned with great variety of Flowers, and covered with a Carpet of Grass: it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large prospect over the Sea on all sides. The Sea here is very rough and tempestuous, and hath to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkind: whereupon a Spanish Captain being sore vexed with a Storm, expostulated with GOD, why he suffered his Good Catholics to endure such Torments; and permitted the English Hereticks, and Blasphemers, to pass so easily.

The Country is not subjected to any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their several Clans; nor find I hitherto that either Portugals or Spaniards, have took possession of any one Part of it, in the Name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the best Title

Title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom Possession was taken of it in the Reign of King James, by one Captain Fitz-Herbert, who called the Ascent unto the Table King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his begat any good Title, or whether the Title of a Country lying so far off be held worth the owning, I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and Statesmen.

4. MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South with Cafraria, and the Mountains of the Moon; on the West with the Aethiopic, or Atlantick Ocean: on the North with the Realm of Bein, and other parts of the Land of the Negroes; and on the East with Zanzibar, and some part of the Abassine Empire. So called from Congo or Mantongo, the Principal of those many Kingdoms which are united in this Name.

The Air hereof so temperate, that their Winter is like the Autumn in Rome; inasmuch, as the People do not use to Change their Garments, or to make more Fire than at other times: the tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the Nights so equal to the Days: that for the greatest part of the year there is little difference; the Country being situate under the Aequator, though more of it on the North than the South thereof. Not over-hot notwithstanding in the heats of Summer, by reason of the cool Winds which then blow continually; and the great Dews, which falling in the Night make some compensation for the extream fervour of the Day. The Soil so exceeding fruitful in the Production of Herbs, Plants, Fruits, and such store of Pasturage, that they have here great herds of Cattel, large flocks of Sheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares, and Conies: Elephants of that bigness, that their Teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of so vast a bulk, that they will eat a whole Deer at once; Tygers too, which destroy Man and Beast: Not to say any thing of their Fowl, both wild and tame, which they have in great abundance.

The People of mean Stature, black of Complexion, thick Lips, and having the Apple of the Eye of divers colours, which makes them ghastly to behold; strong and long lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the most part Heathens, some worshipping the Sun and Moon, others the Earth, as the Mother and Nurse of all things; and some again, wild Beasts and Serpents. So populous, that without any sensible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is supposed that they sell 28000 Slaves to the Portugals yearly: by whom they are sent into Brasil, there to work in the Mines and Sugar-houses. The Christian Faith admitted in some few of their Provinces, but especially in that of Congo: where first preached, in the Reign of John II. King of Portugal, Anno 1490. by Gonzalvo de Sisa; who having converted and baptized the King's Uncle, and one of his Sons, prevailed so far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects, did embrace the Gospel. Received there by the People with such infinite joy, that when their first Bishop came to live amongst them, they caused the Ways from the Sea-side to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered to him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chickens, Kids, Partridges, Fish, Venison, and other Necessaries, to testify their Rejoicings in that happy Change. And though many of the Subjects, in the other Provinces were Baptized accordingly, and for a time embraced the Faith; yet after some small trial of it, they relapsed to their former Heathenism; either unable, or not willing to conform to so strict a Rule. Mr. Pory saith, in the 15th Century, the Agags Giachi's or Galla's, a barbarous, wandering, naked People, of great Valour, invaded this Kingdom, overthrew the King in several Battels, who was called Don Alvaro, and forced him to fly to the Ile of Horfes, in the River Zaire, where he fell into an incurable Droopie, and his

People in vast numbers died by Famine; so that for Bread they were forced to sell their Wives and Children for Slaves to the Portugals. This was the occasion of the dividing and ruining that once so potent a Kingdom. East and West it stretcheth from the Ocean to Aquetunda, and from 2 to 13 South Latitude; the breadth from East to West is 600 miles, according to its more ancient bounds, but now it lies between 4 and 10 Degrees. St. Salvador, the principal City, and the Residence of the King, (who is a Christian) stands in Pemba. Phillippus Pigafetta wrote an account of the Kingdom of Congo, translated into English by Abraham Hartwell, and is the Fountain of what can be said of this Kingdom. Pory, p. 41.

Principal Rivers of this Country. 1. Bengo, 2. Cuanza, 3. Dande, 4. Barbela, 5. Ambrezi, 6. Loza, 7. Zaire. This last the greatest of them all, if not of all Africk also: Of which though we have spoke already, we shall add this here, That it falleth into the Aethiopic Sea with so great a Violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen sometimes, the waters of it do retain their natural sweetness; not intermingled nor corrupted with the salt Sea-waters. Nor can the People sail above five miles against the Stream, by reason of the Cataracts, or huge Falls which it hath from the Mountains; more terrible and turbulent than those of Nile. And for the Mountains of most note, they are, 1. Sierra conpula, or the long Mountain; 2. Mons Crystalli, or the Crystalline Mountain, so called from the abundance of Crystall, which is found therein; 3. Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of excessive height; 4. Montes Sal-Nitri, so called from their abounding in that kind of Mineral; and 5. the Mountains of Cabambe, rich Mines of Silver.

It containeth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general Muster in the Stile Imperial; wherein their King calleth himself King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Samdi, Bangu, Batti, Pemba, Abundi, Matana, Quijoni, Angola, and Cacango; Lord of the Congemes, Amozale, Languelungi, Anzuichi, Cucchi, and Zuungbi. Many of these not so well discovered, as to afford us any Matter fit for our Discourse; the Principal of those that be, are,

1. ANGOLA, bounded on the South with Cafraria; on the North, with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba; on the East, with some part of Zanzibar; on the West, with the main Atlantick Ocean. The Country rich in Mines of Silver and most excellent Copper; some store of Kine and Horses brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their Tails, (the wearing whereof is held for a special Ornament) than keep for any other use; their chiefest Diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shamblers; and to that Dainty so affected, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would give 20 Slaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture somewhat at the Nature of the People, who, besides this, are said to be much given to Sorcery and Divinations by the flight of Birds; Skillful in Medicinal Herbs and Poysons, and by familiarity with the Devil able to tell things to come. Permitted, as most Pagans are, to have as many Wives as they will; who with the rest of the Women, whether Maids, or Widows, use at the first sight of every New-Moon to turn up their bare Bums in defiance of her, as the Cause of their troublesome Purgations.

In this Country are the Mountains called Cantabaries, rich in Mines of Silver; but those Mines not suffered to be digged, for fear of drawing some unnecessary War upon them: so that they use Glass Beads for Money, and therewith also do adorn the Persons of greatest Eminence. Their principal City called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal Residence of their Kings; but not else observable.

This

This Country was first discovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Diego Can, Anno 1476. the King hereof at that time Vassal unto him of Congo, and so continued till that King did embrace the Gospel: whereupon they revolted from him, and have since subsisted of themselves without such dependance. At first they held good correspondency with the Portugals, and allowed them free Traffick in their Dominions: but after their revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals were in league, they put to death as many as they found in Cabazza, An. 1578. under colour of some pretended treason. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governour of these parts for the King of Portugal, arming such people as he had, with two Gallies and some other Vessels, passed up the River of Coanza, wasting the Country on both sides. Against whom the King of Angola raised an Army of a Million of men (as some Writers tell us:) but amongst those multitudes of Men, there were so few Soldiers, that an handful of the Portugals, aided with some of the Forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, An. 1582. Since that, the Trade with Portugal was revived again, and the King hereof hath expressed some good affections unto Christianity; sending unto the King of Congo for some Priests to instruct him in it, but obtained them not; the state of Religion in that Kingdom being then declining. The Portugals having thus gotten the upper hand, built, or repaired a strong Fort, situate near a convenient Bay, by which they did not only secure their Trade but command a great part of the Country, till dispossessed thereof by the treachery and fallhood of the Hollanders, An. 1640. or thereabouts: For the Portugals having withdrawn themselves from the Crown of Spain, a Cessation from all Hostility with them was proclaimed in Holland, and not long after, a firm peace made between the Nations; in the Articles whereof it was conditioned, that this peace should not begin in the East-India, till the end of the year, nor in Brasil, till the end of half a year from the making thereof. Which being obtained, they gave order to their Fleets and Forces which were abroad, to make themselves Masters of any thing then belonging to the Portugals, which they could lay hold on; who following these instructions, and Anchoring near the Fort of Angola, were by the Portugals received with joy into the Castles as their Special Friends, which presently they possessed themselves of, turning the poor Portugals in a very weak Bark to seek new adventures. But of this more hereafter in the Isle of St. Thomas.

To this King belong also the two Provinces of Matana and Quifoma, though both used in the titles of the King of Congo: of which the first lying towards the Sea, is said to be of a wholesom air, and a fertile soil; outwardly furnished with fruits, and inwardly with mines of Cryſtal and others metals; but not very rich, for want of some convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Lunda, was once governed after the manner of a Common-wealth; but tributary at that time to the King of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke by reason of the aid they had given the Portugals in their wars against him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Coanza, by which parted from Angola; on the North, the River Ambrize, by which divided from Songo; on the East, Pemba; on the West, the Aethiopic or Atlantick Ocean. The Country rich in Mines of Silver, well stored with Beasts and Birds, as well tame as wild. Amongst the Birds, Parrots both green and grey, and many which are taught to sing; not much inferior for their musick to the Birds of the Canaries. Amongst the Beasts of most note, is that called the Zebra, shaped like a Mule; but from the ridge of the back to the belly so streaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and those streaks so naturally set in such even proportion, as yieldeth to the eye a most pleasing object. But wild, and of so swift a foot, that velox ut Zebra, to be as swift as a Zebra, is grown into a Proverb amongst the Portugals. The Men so strong, that it is said of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Ox, or strike a slave quite thorow the middle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a Vessel of wine, weighing 325 Pound weight, containing the fourth part of a Butt; and hold it so till it quite be drawn out. It containeth in it many Seignories, most of them called by the names of their principal Towns. The chief of which, 1. S. Paul, situate on the Sea side, opposite to the Isle of Loanda; inhabited for the most part by Portugal Families. 2. Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is situate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Loſe and Ambrizi.

3. PEMBA hath on the West, Bamba; on the East, the Lake Zombra; and the River Barbela; on the North, Batta; and on the South, Angola, Esteemed to be the richest and most pleasant Country of all Manicongo; the Fields in all parts thereof beset with Palm-trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are always green. The Water of so good a nature, that it never hurtech any that drink of it: the Air exceeding wholesom, and earth as fruitful; productive of all sorts of grain, but specially of that which they call Luco, in form like mustard-seed, but bigger, which they grind in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferiour to Wheat. The people much reclaimed from their ancient Barbarism since the coming of the Portugals thither; whom they imitate both in behaviour and apparel. So well skilled in the vertues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Physician, Chirurgion, and Apothecary. Anciently clothed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers; retained still by the Villagers and poorer sort, in some part of the Country. Their chief City formerly had the name of Banza, so called, because the King's Court (as the word doth signify) but since the receiving of the Gospel it is called S. Saviours: distant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (since it became Christian) with a Bishop's See, and a fair Cathedral, in which are 28 Canons, with other Officers and Ornaments accustomably belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it self situate on the side of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a spacious Plain, two Dutch miles in compass, full of Villages, Burroughs, and scattered Houses; which are thought to have 100000 persons, most of them Portugals and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the West and South, Pemba; on the East, the Mountains of the Sun, and those called Salmiri; on the North, Pango. Of the Soil and People there is nothing singular to be said, but that the Inhabitants hereof are more Military, and better furnished for the Wars, than the rest of these Provinces: necessitated thereunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and savage people, dwelling about the spurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jaggas or Giaccis. These naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Sierra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous part of this Region, under the Conduct of one Elembe, where they are since grown into a people, and become a terrour to their Neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans flesh, which they prefer before that of Beeves or Mutton; not yet so qualified by the change of their Country, as to build Houses, sow or plant, or to breed up Cattel; finding it far the easier life, to maintain themselves by the labour and spoil of others. And which is yet most strange of all, though they have each of them many Wives, ten or twenty apiece, yet they have no Children, but strangle them as soon as born, lest they should be an hinderance to their often wandrings. But as Pliny once said of the Lisseni, Gens æterna est in qua natus nascitur; so we may also say of these, that they do not want succession, though they breed no Children: selecting out of their Captives and stolen Children, some of either Sex, (but neither neither steal nor take them captive, under twenty years old) to the Seminny (as it were) of a new posterity. Against these Abnizers thole of Batta are armed continually, not otherwise able to defend themselves, their Wives and Child en, from their hands and teeth: insomuch as this one Province, though none of the biggell, is able to raise 70000 Men, well armed, and fit for any service. The principal of their Towns is Batta, which gives name to the Province, situate on the Banks of the River Lalmda; and the Seat of the Pee-Roy, who is always of the Black Royal, honoured sometimes with sitting at the King's own Table, which none else may do; and of so great authority in all Consultations, that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO is bounded on the South with Batta; on the East, extended to the Mountains of the Sam, which close up this Country: on the North with Sunda; and on the West, with parts of Pamba, and Sango. Of the people, little singular, of the Country, less. Neighbouring on the North-East towards Sarra de Crystal, with the Languelangi, supposed by some to be the Æthiopic Hefferii, spoken of by Ptolemy: a barbarous Nation but of so considerable power, that they are found amongst the rest in the Sith Impud. This once a Kingdom of itself, not subject till of late times to the Kings of Congo. The chief Town of it, called Pango, is seated on the Western Bank of the River Buleb, the ordinary Residence of the Pee-Roy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6. SUNDA is bounded on the South with Batta: on the North with the great River Zaire; on the East with Barbele: and on the West with part of Sango. The Country, rich in several Metals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron before any other, because it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives and Armour; well furnished also with Martins, Sables, and other Furs of great esteem among Foreign Merchants. This is the best Region of this Kingdom, not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire: not much more in length. Their chief City hath the name of Sunda, which it communiceth to the whole.

7. SONGO is bounded on the East with Batta and Anzichana: on the West with the Æthiopic, or Atlantic Ocean: on the North with the Kingdom of Loango: and on the South with the River Ambriza, by which parted from the Realm of Bambo. It lieth on both sides of the great River Zaire, which is here so turbulent and broad, and so full of flands, that the one part of it hath little or no Commerce with the other. The chief Town hereof called Songo, gives this name to the Country; in which is nothing singular for the Soil or People.

8. ANZICHANA hath on the West, part of Songo and Loango, extended thence unto the East, as far almost as the Lake of Zaire; on the North, some part of the Land of Negroes; on the South, the Zaire. So called from the anziqui, the Inhabitants of it; the cruellest Cannibals in the World: for they do not only eat their Enemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that they may be sure not to want these Dainties, they have Shambles of Mans flesh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous withal, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when sold joint by joint, than if sold alive; they will cut them out, and sell them so upon the Shambles. Yet with these barbarous qualities they have many good. Assumed to be so cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will discharge 28 Arrows (for so many do their Quivers hold) before the first of them falls to the ground: and of so great fidelity to their Masters, and to those which trust them, that they will rather chuse to be killed, then either to abuse their trust, or betray their Masters: for that cause more esteemed by the Peoples, than their other Slaves. And for the same, and that cause, worthy of so good a Country; said to be rich in Mines, of Copper, and very plentiful of Snack both red and grey, which tempered with Ungur, is found by the Peoples to be a certain remedy against the Pox; as the Snack thereof against the Malady. Towns they have none, or none at least of any reckoning, which deserve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the East the Atlantic Ocean; on the West the Æthiopic or Atlantic Ocean; on the North Benin, one of the Realms of Gambia, in the Land of Negroes; and on the South, the Province of Sango, from which parted by the River Loango, whence it hath its name. The Country very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitful, and more stored with Elephants, than any other of these parts; stretching in length 200 miles within the Land and for the most part very well watered. The Inhabitants whom they call Bramies, by Religion Heathens, but of late time Christianized (as the Anziqui and others of the Barbarous Nations) unto Circumcision. Governed by a King of their own, subject to the King of Congo: but of late time, both he and the King of Anziqui (for they are still under the command of one Sovereign Prince) have been at war from that subjection; though still the King of Congo is called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mami Loango. Their Towns of note, 1. Pengo, the chief to the rest. 2. Ambriza, the chief more Northwards and within the Land; the Inhabitants of which Towns, being more civil than the rest, appear then fives with the leaves of Palm-Trees; but not so well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree, as the more civilized people of the Realm of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleansed and purged, draw a fine long thread, of which they make Velvees, Demasks, satins, Taffataes, Sarcenets, and the like fine stuffs.

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom seated on the Continent, let us next look upon the Islands. The principal of which LOANGO, situate over against the Town of Sunda in the Province of Bambo, said to be first made out of the sands of the Ocean, and the mire of Congo, cast into an heap, and last made into an Island. Now beautified with a fair Haven, of the same name with the Island, possessed by the Portugals. The Island delicate of Rivers, but so well furnished with Waters, that every where within less than half a yard digging, they find sweet and good Waters, so contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be salt and brackish; when it floweth towards the Island, then most fresh and sweet. But most remarkable is this Island for the Cock fishing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, take up together with the sands, in baskets, and put them from the sand, as they lye on the shore; the fish of which being naturally distinguished into divers colours, serve over all the Kingdom of Congo, instead of Money; which is a matter of such moment unto this King, that he entertains a Governour in the Island for no other reason, but to take care about this fishing.

Besides this, there are many Islands in the River of Zaire, now subject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars against them, fighting in Boats which they made of the Bodies of a Tree, by them called Laconde. The Tree so big, that two or three Men or more are not able to fathom it: insomuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largest of them, able to contain 200 Men. Upon the shores of these Islands, and in other of their Bays and Creeks, they have so great numbers of Anchovies, that in Winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of those several Members, and of the rest expressed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo: so called from Congo the chief Province, but now distinguished from the rest by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or better fortune, than any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and name unto them. Discovered by the Portugals, under Diego Chm, An. 1486. at what time these Kings were at the greatest: called by their Subjects Mani Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the Word Mani, signifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated since to the Kingdom also. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath since happened in this Kingdom, may best be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CONGO.

1436. 1. John, not so called till converted to the Faith of Christ; and then Baptized by this name, in honour of John the Second King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whose Reign this discovery and Conversion happened.
2. Alphonso, eldest Son of John, zealous in the advancement of the Christian Faith, and for that opposed by Panse Aquitine his younger Brother: whom with a very small Army, zealously invoking the assistance of Jesus, he is said to have vanquished. A Prince, who, during his long Reign of 50 years, did seriously promote the Gospel, and caused all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown: and Churches to be built, and furnished in convenient places.
3. Pedro, the Son of Alphonso, in whose time was founded the Colledge of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Crosse, in the Town of S. Saviours.
4. Francisco, the Son of Pedro, who reigned not long.
5. Diego, or James, one of the Kinsmen of Francisco, in whose time Religion growing into discredit, by the scandalous lives of some of the Secular Clergy; John the Third, King of Portugal, sent four Jesuits thither; who are said to have converted in five Months 5000 Persons, and to build three Churches.
6. Henry, the brother of Diego, after a sharp War touching the Succession, in which were slain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Priests, at last succeeded: not long after slain in battel against the Anziques.
7. Alvarez, the Son of Henry, forced by the *Jagg*es or Giacchi to abandon Congo, and betake himself, together with the Portugal Priests, to an Island of the River Zaire: where he continued, till restored to his Crown by the Aid of Sebastiam King of Portugal, after by Famine he had lost almost all his company.
8. Alvares II. Son of Alvares the first, who much solicited Sebastiam and Henry, Kings of Portu- gal, to send him a new supply of Preachers; the old store being wasted in the Islands of Zaire.

9. Alvarez III. Son to Alvarez the Second, not being born in Lawful Wedlock, was opposed by one of his Sisters and a younger Brother, both of Lawful birth; whom he overthrew, Anno 1587. and in the place of the Victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revenues of these Kings of Congo, I am able to say nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great Power and Riches. His Riches visible by the great Treasures which he draweth from the Mines of Silver, and of other Metals in his Kingdom; from the Trade of Cockle-shells, the only Money of his Realm, which he keeps wholly to himself; the great gain which he makes by Slaves, and from Elephants Teeth; the Presents which he hath in way of Tribute from the King of Angola. And though it be not easie to say what he layeth up yearly, because he hath not his Revenue in Coin, as most Princes have, yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furnished with all things as any Monarch in Africk.

As for his Forces, they consist most in the multitudes of his Subjects; which were they well armed and used to the Wars, would make him formidable to the rest of the African Princes. And though he hath no Garrisons or Towns of War, but must trust, if once invaded, unto Castles of Bones; yet he doth rest secure enough from all Fear of Danger, except out of Europe: being able to raise against his Rebels, or any of his invading Neighbours, 400000 Men out of Bamba only, all armed according to their Manner, and 70000 Men at least, well exercised in Wars against the *Jagg*es, from the Province of Batta: besides what may be drawn from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five Swords meeting in Base Sol: which Coat was taken by Alphonso, the second King in this Catalogue, because in the Battel which he fought against Panse Aquitine, he and his Souldiers saw (or supposed they saw) such a number of shining Swords hanging in the Air, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And so much for ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

O F

The ISLES of AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Isles of AFRICK, we must observe another course than that which we have taken in Europe and Asia: these Islands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the Command of any great Prince in Africk, in the Account of whose Estates they might be considered; but being all of them Independent and sui juris, and therefore to be handled by themselves apart. In our Chorography of which and the Stories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to Travel; beginning first with those that lie in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean, and so proceeding by the Cape of Good Hope, through the Main Atlantick Ocean, to the Straits of Hercules: that from thence we may have the shorter passage into America, and there our Sea & this Mozambique conclude our Journey. These then we will consider either joint or separate, as delivered to us by the names of 1. The Æthiopick Islands. 2. Socotara. 3. Madagascar. 4. Mobelia. 5. Mauritius. 6. St. Hellens. 7. Ascension. 8. St. Thomas. 9. The Prince's Island. 10. The Island of Annobon. 11. The Gorgades, or Islands of Cape Verde. 12. The Canaries, or the Fortunate Islands. 13. Madera. 14. The Island of Holy Port; and 15. The Hesperides. Of all which, the four first only are dispersed in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean; all the rest scattered up and down in the main Atlantick, on this side of the famous Promontory, called the Cape of Good Hope.

I. The ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS.

I. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS, so called, because they lie upon the Coast of Æthiopia Superior, together with all those which lie on the further side of the Cape of Good Hope, or scattered, or dispersed in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean, (for by those names these mighty Oriental Seas, are most commonly known) of which we have spoke more at large when we were in Arabia, and therefore shall say nothing here which concerns the same; but for the Islands of those Seas, such as we comprehend here under the Name and Notion of Æthiopick Islands, which were only known unto the Ancients, they are more in number than in weight; some of them situate within the Straits of the Red Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia, others without those Straits, in the open Ocean.

1. Of those within the Straits, not reckoning such as lie upon the Shores of Arabia Felix, of which we have already spoken; there is 1. Astarte, or Astrata, now called Causa. 2. Ara Palladis, so called from some Altar of that Goddess which was there erected. 3. Gypseria, by Pliny called Cypria, but Gypsis in Justinian's Code, renowned in former time for its plenty of Metals. 4. Malaria, or the Fortunate Island, so called from the fertility and pleasures of it. 5. Orneon, or the Isle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein. 6. Daphnia, by Ptolemy called Daphnine, opposite to a famous Port Town of the same name in the Continent. 7. Bacchias, so called from Bacchus, unto whom consecrated. 8. Anti Bacchias, so named because opposite to it. 9. Alambine, supposed by some to be now called Angbotina. 10. Insula Diodori, conceived by the Learned to be the same which is now called Babel Mandel, and giveth name unto the Straits, or entrance of the Bay of Arabia, now called the Straits of Babel Mandel. 11. Isidis Insula, memorable for a Temple Dedicated to the Goddess Isis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Isidis; the same which is now called Pafana, as Bel Forest thinketh. 12.

Mundi, an Island in the Bay of Avalites, opposite to a noted Empory of the same name on the shores of that Bay. Besides all which, we find in Ptolemy two Islands by the name of Thriftides; two more called Chelomitides, or Catbratæ, two others passing by the name of Gomadeo; together with the Isles of Myron, Pan, and that called Insula Magorum: which make up One and twenty in all, but of no Note or Observation in the course of Business, or the conduct of humane Affairs.

Those of most Note in the open Ocean, which still preserveth the name of the Red Sea, and is sometimes called the Indian, sometimes the Arabian Ocean, and by a particular name Pelagus Hypadis; are but four in number, that is to say, 1. Myrica, by the Translator of Ptolemy called Myrsiaca; 2, 3. Two Islands called by the name of Menan, a Degree more Northwards than the other: and 4. Amicusia, as Stephanus; or Amici Insula, as called by Ptolemy, the most North of all; which I conjecture to be that which is now called by the name of Socotara, the most noted Island of this Sea. I know that many Learned Men will have this Island to be that, which Ptolemy and others of the Ancients call Dioscoridis: but because Dioscoridis, by all those Ancients, is made to be an Island of Arabia Felix, and Socotara by all the Moderns affirmed to be an Isle of Africk; I can by no means yield unto it. Again, it is affirmed by our best Modern Geographers, that Socotara lieth over against Cape Guardafu, (the Arumæa of Ptolemy, as before is said) from which distant not above 30 Leagues: which site and distance fore well with Amicusia, but can by no means be applied unto Dioscoridis, Amicusia being placed but two Degrees on the East of that Promontory, in the Longitude of 85. whereas Dioscoridis is situate from it almost four Degrees in the Longitude of 86. and 40 Minutes; besides as great, or greater difference in their several Latitudes. So that supposing for granted that Socotara is that Island which was anciently called Amicusia; and having cleared my way so far, I now proceed to the Description and Affairs thereof.

2. SOCOTARA.

2. SOCOTARA, the greatest Island of these Shores, is situate, as before was said, against Cape Guardafu, from which distant about 30 Leagues, Abadalenry a small Island lying in the midst, that is to say, 15 Leagues from the Cape, and 14 from the Island. The length hereof 60 Miles, 25 in breadth; divided in the middle by craggy Mountains of great height; the top of which are for the most part covered with Sands. Mamdeslo saith it is seated 21. 40 Lat. and is 25 Leagues long, and but 10 broad, indifferently well Peopled, and still subject to the King of Arabia, under whom Governed by a Sultan. The Inhabitants are Lean, of a dark Complexion, and very Laborious, and Temperate. p. 15. The Principal Town is Tamany; The Island extremely vexed with Winds, and molested with Drinets, inasmuch as it is destitute of most things necessary for the life of Man; affording nothing towards it of the growth of the Earth, but some small quantity of Mill, Dates, and some kind of Fruits. Provided notwithstanding of some good Pastures for the breed of Cattel, and liberally furnished with Medicinal Drugs, as Cinnabar, Dragons Blood, which is a Red Gum issuing from the Bark of a Tree; and the best Aloes in the World, from hence called Aloes.

Aloes Socotrina. The Nubian Geographer makes this one of the most Fruitful and Beautiful Islands in the World, and saith this Aloes is fetched from the Leaf of a Tree, gathered in July, and the Juice exposed in Brass Pots to the Sun in August. The Inhabitants in his time were all Christians and Greeks, and, as he fancied, brought thither by Alexander the Great, after his Conquest of India, to gratifie Aristotle his Master. It lies, saith he, (p. 22.) two Days Sail from the Continent of Arabia Felix, over against Hales, a City of Hadramut, p. 23. This Island is of great extent, fruitful as to Trees, but especially the Aloes Tree. The North-West part of it the Continent of Arabia; and therefore it is esteemed a part of Arabia on the African Shore. Melinda and Monbaza lie over against this Island. Nub. p. 23. By which it is plain he had a very false Notion of this Coast of Africa; for Socotara lies nearest to the Cape Guardafu, on the Coast of Africa, 60 English Miles from the Coast of Arabia; and not 40 from the Coast of Africa: and Melinda lies 12 Degrees more to the South, and 330 Miles more to the West. Mr. Pory makes it 60 Miles long, and 20 broad, divided with a high ridge of Mountains, subject to most terrible Winds, and now destitute of Victuals, by reason of the Sloth and Ignorance of the Inhabitants; for it hath no Wheat, Rice, Wine, nor Honey; but hath a small quantity of Millet, and in its Vallies some Fruits and Pasture, and is only frequented for its Aloes. The Portuguese have in it the small Towns of Coro and Benin, in which the King of Fartac in Arabia had a Castle, which they took, and after abandoned.

The People of an Ash-colour, very rude and barbarous; their Bread for the most part of Dates; the rest of their Food being Milk and Butter; their Hair long, and their Cloathing only enough to hide their Nakedness. The Women as good Soldiers as the Men, and countenancing, or occasioning the Tradition of the Arabians, that they came from the Amazons; and the better Husbands of the two, governing all Affairs both within and without. All of them by profession Christians, who have an ancient Church Walled about, with three Doors and three Allies, governed by a Bishop of their own, with some few Priests; but ignorant enough of all things which concern Religion. More generally Circumcised than Christiansed, though both used among them. Jacobites in Sect, as the Abissines their Neighbours are; and zealous worshippers of the Cross, which they always hang about their Necks. So pertinaciously addicted unto Magick, and therein so expert, that they bring incredible things to pass; not to be weaned from those Black Arts, though the Bishop Excommunicate all such as use them. They hold Opinion, That S. Thomas suffered Shipwrack upon their Coast, as he sailed towards India; and that his Ship being drawn to Land, was turned into a Church; but it appeareth neither by their Life, or Doctrines, that any Apostolical Man hath set foot amongst them. They have no use of Navigation or Traffick, and wear coarse Cloth or Skins of Beasts: they fight with Bowes and ill Swords. They are proudly conceited of their Nobility, but very Ignorant and Poor. These are the Relicks of the old Greek Colony, mentioned by Nubienfis, who have forgot whence they came. They live for the most part in Caves or Cabins, of no other stuff than the Boughs of Trees; so that we are to look for few Towns among them. The Principal, 1. Socotara, giving name to the Island, the place of the King's Residence, and a Bishop's See. 2. Tamarind, and 3. Deliba, two Port Towns, and reasonably well Traded, in the hands of the Natives: as 4. Coro, and 5. Benin, two other Ports, possessed and Garrisoned by the Portuguese. The King thereof a Vassal to the King of Fartac, one of the petit Princes of Arabia Felix, not far from Aden: in Habit and Religion Turkish: attended on when the Relater was there, Anno 1614. by five Camels and five Horses only, yet those all in the Island. An Author Printed at the end of Leo Africanus in English, saith, This Island was conquered by the King of Fartac in 1482. from whose Dominion they were freed by Tristan d'Acuna a Portuguese, twenty years after; but the Portuguese deserted them soon after.

Nigh hereunto are two Islands, (those possibly which Ptolemy calleth Menan) the one inhabited by Men only, and the other by Women, who do meet at their accustomed times to preserve their kind, but make no long stay; the Air of the one being found unhealthy for the constitution of the other Sex. The other Islands of these Coasts, scattered up and down in the Bay of Barbaria, (but not known by any name in the time of Ptolemy) as 1. Dor Garcia. 2. The Three Brethren. 3. S. Brandon. 4. Francis. 5. Mascadenna. 6. Comoro. And many others of as small note, are not worth the speaking of.

3. MADAGASCAR.

3. MADAGASCAR, the greatest Island in the World, is situate over against Mozambique in Aethiopia Inferior, supposed to be the Menubias of Ptolemy, the only Island by him named on the Coast of that Country; but by the Portuguese called the Isle of St. Lawrence, because discovered by them on the day of that Saint, An. 1506. The length hereof affirmed to be 1200 Miles (which is longer than Italy) and 400 in compass: the middle part hereof opposite to the Promontory, which Ptolemy calleth Prossium, now the point of Mozambique, from which distant 170 Miles: in reference to the Heavenly Bodies, situate from the 17th Degree of Southern Latitude, to the 26th.

The Country plentiful of all things necessary for the Life of Man, particularly of Mill, Rice, Honey, Wax, Cotton-Wool, Sugars, Stags, Goats, Deer, and other Creatures both wild and tame; Lemons, and other cooling Fruits, some store of Ginger, Cloves, but little different from those of India, Red Sanders, Saffron, Amber, and some Mines of Silver, Iron, Gold, and Copper: not to say any thing of their Beefs and Muttons, so large and good, and so good cheap, that for a Two-penny Bead, or some such trifle: they will sell Beefs and Sheep of good taste and bigness; such numbers of Elephants, that they send thence yearly great store of Ivory. And amongst other rare Fruits, they have plenty of those which they call Cocos, or Coconuts: a kind of Date as big as a Cabbage; the Liquor in it, about the quantity of a pint, tastes like Wine and Sugar; the Kernel big enough to content two Men: and like Good Ale, it affords not only Meat and Drink, but Cloathing; as also Furniture for their Houses, Tackle for their Ships, Fuel for the Fire, and Timber for Building; the body of the Tree being strait and high, and towards the top diversified into many Branches. A Country far too good for so bad a People. For they, as Travellers report, and most Writers testify, are Treacherous, Inhospitable, Ignorant both of Prayers and Festivals; destitute both of the distinction of Time into years and Months, not knowing any proper Names for the days of the Week, nor able to reckon above ten; naked, except their Privities, which they cover with Cotton; Idolaters in the mid-land parts, and Mahometans upon the Shores, commendable only for their Hate to Polygamy, and restraining themselves to one Wife; the defiling of the Marriage Bed, severely punished: but otherwise so eager upon Copulation, that their Boys, at the age of twelve Years, and their Girls at Ten, think they stay too long if they keep their Virginities any longer: some of them, like Quartilla in Patrenius Arbitrator, begin so early, ut nunquam meminerint se Virgines fuisse, that they remember not the time when they lost their Maidenheads. Of colour they are Black, and of strong Composition; their Breasts and Faces cut and pinkt, to appear more beautiful. Much given unto the Wars, well armed according to their Country manner, and exceeding good Archers. Amongst them there are some White People, said to come from China. They are large of Stature, and exceeding Black, much addicted to

to Fishing, great Eaters, and Nature has accordingly provided them plenty of Cattel, Fish, Fowl, Fruits, and whatever is necessary for the Life of Man, which they use without Labour or Care, regarding neither Silver nor Gold, nor any thing else but Beads and Bracelets for Ornament, and Mulick and Dancing for their Recreation. Nubiensis, p. 28. calls this Island Saranda, and saith it is 1200 miles in Circuit, yielding Camphor, Sugar, and Millet; the Sea yields Pearls, and the Land Spice: this Author wrote in the 12th Century. P. 31. he calls it Sarandib, and saith, it is 80 Leagues square, having a vast high Mountain, called Rabon, and it afforded the Jacinth, and in the Valley the Diamond is found, and many Spices and Perfumes, as Lignum Aloes, &c. In its Rivers are found the Beryl, and on its Shores, Pearls. The King's Residence is at Aghena, who has 16 Councillors, four Christians, four Mahometans, four Jews, and four Pagans, &c. who professed all sorts of Learning. There is no City in it. See Pory, p. 49. who maketh it 400 miles in compass, and bigger than Italy. The Inland Inhabitants are Negroes, but on the Coast live Arabians, and in some places Chinese: As to the Fertility, he agrees with the rest, and adds to its Commodities Silver. Struys, p. 15. adds Medicinal Balsams, Oyles, Roots, coarse Gold, and the best Steel in the World.

It hath in it many fair Rivers, but their Names I find not: and at the Mouths of those Rivers some convenient Havens, into which they admit the Foreign Merchants, but suffer none to come on Land; which the Merchant hath no cause to be sorry for, finding himself not safe on Shipboard from their treacherous Practices; so that we can give but small account of their Towns and Cities except it be the bare recital of their Names; as, 1. St. Augustines, on a fair Bay in the South-west point. 2. Gangomar, in the North-east of it. 3. Antaloff. 4. Point-Antogil. 5. St. Joabe. 6. Matatana. 7. Ang-da. 8. Herendo. 9. Andro-arco. And 10. Roma, or New-Rome, so entituled by some zealous Romanists, in hope to have it thought that the Popes of Rome have got some footing in this Island.

This Island known but very imperfectly in the time of Marcus Paulus Venetus, who telleth us many strange things of it; but none more strange than that of the Bird called Ruck, of such incredible strength and bigness, that it could snatch up an Elephant as easily as a Kite doth a Chicken. Discovered by the Portugals in the year 1506 as before was said; and since frequented by the English and Holland Merchants: by whom we are informed no further, touching the Estate and Affairs thereof, but that it is divided into four Parts, under so many Kings, each of them in continual Wars against one another, but well enough agreed to defend themselves against the coming in of Strangers. Yet, as some say, they would be well enough content with an English Plantation: either in love to our Nation, whom they acknowledge to be more Courteous than the Portugals, and not so Covetous as the Dutch; or else by the Strength of our Shipping, and the Reputation of our Interest in it, to keep off all others. The French have of late settled some Colonies on the Southern Shore; and Stephen Flacourt, a Frenchman, has given a large account of this Island.

4. MOHELLA, and 5. MAURITIUS Island.

ADjoining to Madagascar, and as it were attending on it, I find divers Islands; and some on the North-west we have, 1. Adottey. 2. Chamroe. 3. Mobelia, and 4. Joanna Island, on the East. 5. The Island of Mauritius; and 6. England's Forrest. Of these Mauritius is the greatest, but Mobelia the best Inhabited.

4. MOHELLA, situate on the Northwest of Madagascar, is about 23 miles in length, and 10 in breadth: abounding in Goats, Hens, Coco Nuts, Limons, Oranges, Pom-Citrons, Pulse, Sugar-Canes, store of Fish taken on the Shores, and other Necessaries. It is of great use to Ships that sail for India, the Red-Sea, and Persia. The People of complexion Black, of composition Large and Strong; Courageous, Affable, less Treacherous than their Neighbours of Madagascar. Of the same Language and Religion with those of Arabia, from whence they seem to have descended; but by reason of their Commerce and Intercourse with the Portugals, they speak that Tongue also. The Women of the like complexion; to amend which, and seem more lovely, they Pink their Arms and Faces in several shapes. Both Sexes no otherwise Apparellled than their Natural Garments, with some Plantane Leaves about their middle to hide their Shame.

Their Religion that of Mahomet, as before is said; their Priests in great Esteem among them; so their Temples also: which they keep clean and neatly matted; not suffering any Man to enter with his Shoes on his Feet. Their chief Town Meriangua, at the West-end of the Isle, strong and well Garrisoned: Heretofore under the command of one King alone; of late divided into two Principalities; one of the last Kings leaving two Daughters, the one married to a Native, the other to an Arabian Lord.

5. Larger than this, on the East of Madagascar, is the Isle of MAURITIUS, so called by the Hollanders, in honour of Maurice Prince of Orange, in whose time they first set footing in it; but by the Portugals called De Cerne, and by some Cygnæa. In compass about 100 miles; well stored with Beeves, Hogs, Goats, most sorts of Fish: and liberally endowed with all the Blessings of Nature, sweet Waters, most delicious Fruits, Woods fit for any use both of Food and Building; plenty of Ebony of all colours, but the best Coal-black: Yet altogether destitute of humane Inhabitants; insomuch as we may say of this, as the Poet of the World, before Man was made;

Deerat adhuc, & quod dominari in cætera posset.*

Which may be Englished in these words:

*But yet the Chief, with supream Power possést,
Was wanting, he that should command the rest.*

In the Year 1640. the Hollanders began to supply this Defect, by a Colony they sent thither to inhabit it; for the Defence of which they built a Fort.

Of the ATLANTICK OCEAN, and The Isles therein.

HAVING thus looked upon such Islands as lie upon the Eastern side of Africk in the Indian Ocean, let us come homeward by the Cape of Good Hope, into the main Atlantick, the greatest body of Waters which is given to us by one name in any of our Cosmographers, either old or new: a Name peculiar to that part of the Western Ocean, which lieth between the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Land of Negroes, to which Mount Atlas sheweth it self with a cloudy top, and gives name to the Seas adjoining, but generally communicated to all that vast Region of Waters which lieth between Spain and Africk on the one side, and the New World, or America on the other side: Extended further by Strabo, and some other of the ancient Writers; who not knowing any thing of the interposition of America, carry the Name of the Atlantick to the Shores of India, which they make to be terminated by this on the East and South. Macrobius goeth farther in it, affirming positively, omnem terram, quæ à nobis colitur, Atlanticæ mari (quod Oceanum appellamus) circumfundit, that the whole Habitable World (so far as it was then known and Peopled) was compassed round about with the Atlantick Ocean. The like affirmed by by Julius Firmicus: also by Aristotle in his Book De mundo, and by others, who have took it upon their Authority. And though some parts hereof, which wash the Western Shores of Ethiopia Inferior, be called the Ethiopick Ocean; yet that it doth derogate no more from the great extent that is given formerly to the main Atlantick, than that some parts of the Mediterranean should be called Mare Siculum, Sardoun, Tyrrhenum, Criticum, according to the shores of those several places which it passeth by; which having said in general of the Sea it self, according to our method in other places, we next proceed unto the rest of the African Islands, which we named before, but could not meet with but in this Sea and this side of Africa.

6. St. HELENS; and 7. The Isles of ASCENSION.

AND the first Isle we meet with in this side of Africa is, 6. The Isle of St. Helens, situate on the West of the Cape of Good Hope, and in the 16 degree of the Southernly Latitude, no other Island interposing betwixt Madagascar and it, except those of Don Alvarez, and of Tristram de Acugna, near the Cape it self; but of so little note, as not worth the Naming. The Island very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with so steep an Ascent, that the Mariners have amongst them a merry Saying that a Man may chuse whether he will break his Heart going up, or his Neck going down.

It was thus called, because discovered by the Portugals on St. Helens day; not then inhabited, nor since; the King of Spain suffering none to dwell there, because it had been an unlawful Receptacle for Uncustomed Goods; whereby he lost exceedingly both in Power and Profit. Stored by the Portugals at the first Discovery, with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as also with Figs, Lemons, Oranges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly, and grow all the Year long, intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refresh themselves, and bestow their Sick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Used for the same purpose by the English and Hollanders, who so domineer about the Island, that the Portugals dare not Anchor near it, or own their Property, if they see any Shipping in the Road. No Buildings in it, but the Ruines of a little Chapel, destroyed by the Hollanders; and some fragments of a little Village begun by some Portugal Mariners, but demolished by the King of Spain.

St. Helen was first Discovered by Joannes de Nova a Portuguese, on St. Helen's day, in 1502. It is 13 miles in compass, Mountainous, but Fruitful, and abounding with many things of great use to the Life of Man. It has four Valleys and many Springs, especially towards the North End. For a long time it lay in common to the use of all that sailed to the East-Indies, but since the Year 1660. the English East-India Company settled a Colony in it to secure it; the Hollanders having done the same at the Cape of Good Hope, which was another Place of Refreshment.

7. Northwest from hence is the Isle of Ascension, so called, because discovered on Ascension Day, by Tristram de Acugna, a Portuguese, in the Year, 1508. but not inhabited, nor any use at all made of it for ought I can find. Of the same bigness with St. Helens, 30 miles in compass, and about 700 English miles distant from it.

8. St. THOMAS, 9. The PRINCES Island, and 10. The Isle of ANNIBON.

8. THE Island of St. THOMAS, is situate directly under the Equator; of Orbicular Form, the Diameter being 60 miles, by consequence the Perimeter or Compass 180. and just so many from the Shore of the Realm of Congo. The Land of this Island lies very high; upon the West-side you shall see a very high Pike, which is very small and straight, as if it were the Steeple of a Church, which Pike is directly under the Line; at the South-end towards the West, lies a small Island a mile from the great Island. Hackluit. It was found the 23d of December, 1405. by a Portuguese, and Dedicated to St. Thomas, because found on that Day. At the first Discovery nothing but a continual Forrest, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negroes: these last brought hither from the opposite Continent; with whom the Air agrees so well, that they attain generally to 110 years of Age, few of the Portugals unto 50. The Air so vehemently hot, that it sorteth not with the Constitution of the Europeans.

The Country destitute of Wheat, which if sown here turneth all to Blade, and brings forth no Ear: nor will any Fruits here prosper, that have any stone in them: but so abundant in Sugar Canes, and well stored with Sugars, that 40 Ships are hence loaded yearly with that one Commodity; for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houses, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in some 300. which belong to the Works. Six days in seven these Slaves work for their Masters, and the seventh for themselves; which they spend in sowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Provisions. Where, by the way these Sugar-works, or Ingenios, are a late Invention; the Boiling and Baking of Sugar (as it is now used) not being above 200 years old; and the Refining of it more new than that. First found out by a Venetian in the days of our Fathers, who is said to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his son a Knight; who, (though he was no Knight of the Order) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of Boiling and Refining Sugars, our Ancestors not having such luxurious Palates, sometimes made use of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but most commonly pleased themselves with Honey, more wholesome because more natural than these forced Inventions. But to proceed in the Description of this Island; in the midst thereof is said to be a wooden Mountain, over-shadowed continually with Clouds; which so moisten the Trees that grow there in great abundance, that from thence falleth a sufficient quantity of waters to refresh their Fields, and feed their Sugar Canes, notwithstanding the extreme heat of the *Clim*e and Air.

The Religion here allowed of, is the Christian only, first preached here by the Portugals, or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Bishop, his Title, the Bishop of St. Thomas; but his Charge extendeth also over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The principal City of it hath the Name of Parvaesan, a Colony of Portugals, consisting of 700 Families, or about that number; situate on a fine River, and a pleasant Haven: seldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheese, Hides, and other Things, more necessary than those Sugars for the Life of Man. Took by the Hollanders, in the year 1599. but again recovered, or abandoned in 1641. and since possessed again by the Hollanders, not as before by force of Arms, but by Fraud and Faithhood, at the same time, and by the same dishonest Arts by which they made themselves Masters of the Castle of Angola, before-mentioned. And though the Portugal Ambassador presented this injurious dealing to the States of Holland, yet all the Answer he could get at the present, was, That their People had done nothing but what was justified by that Clause of the Article, that both sides might take and keep whatsoever they could within such a time: and though the Ambassador replied very rationally in behalf of his Country, and pressed the Restitution both of this Island, and that Castle, by all honest Arguments, yet he could then get no reason from them: The Portuguese finding that Arguments would not prevail, entered the Island with Force, and in short time drove out the Hollanders; and have ever since peaceably enjoyed it, the exact time of which action I cannot now assign.

The

9. The PRINCE'S ISLAND, (Insula Principis in the Latin) so called, for that the Revenues of it were allotted to the Prince of Portugal; is situate in three Degrees of the Northern Latitude, on the Western Coasts of Africa, 120 miles from St. Thomas to the North-East, and something less from Africa. The Country very Fruitful for the bigness of it; but not much observable, except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clerchagen, Anno 1598. abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended, as is fit for a Prince's Island, by a Me/s of Chaplains, viz. 1. the Isles of St. Matthew, 2. St. Cross, 3. St. Paul, and 4. St. Conception; and waited on by seven Servants (so many Islands near Cape Verd) all in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbacene. But because the former four yield no matter of History, and these last seven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought, having said thus much of them, to have said enough.

10. South-west hereof, but on the other side of the Line, lieth the Isle of Annobon, (Insula Annoboni, as the Latines call it.) So named, because discovered upon New-years-day. Inhabited, and of very good fishing all along the Coasts of it; but that fishing made unsafe by Crocodiles, and other venomous and hurtful Creatures, which are said to be about the shores in great abundance.

11. The GORGADES, or the Isles of CAPE VERD.

11. THE GORGADES, or the Islands of Cape Verd, (Insulae Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are nine in number; called by the last name, because situate over against Cape Verd (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negroes. Their Names, 1. Saint Anthony. 2. Saint Vincent. 3. Buenavista. 4. Saint Lucies. 5. Insula Salis, the Isle of Salt. 6. Del Fogo, or the Isle of Fire. 7. Saint Nicholas. 8. Maggio, or Majo. 9. Saint Jago. Some add to these a tenth, called Brava. Discovered all in the year 1440. by a Genoese called Antonio de Noli, employed therein at the charges and direction of Henry Duke of Vise, one of the younger Sons of King John of Portugal, the first of that name. Of the most, little to be said. The principal, and indeed the only ones which are now inhabited, are Majo, Del Fogo, St. Jago. 1. Majo, is of most repute for a Lake of two Leagues long; the Waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2. Del Fogo, is so called from the flakes of fire which it sends forth usually; and felt so thick upon the Ship of Sir Anthony Sherley, when he took the Island, Anno 1596. that one might have writ his name in the ashes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger. 3. The principal of all, St. Jago, yet but 7 miles long: Rocky and Mountainous, but full of very pleasant Meadows and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Velera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; situate on a fine River and a beautiful Haven: taken and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585. and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, Anno 1596. This place was yielded without any Defence: when the English came to rattle it, they found no Gold, but store of Meal, Wine, and Oyle; but the Men falling into Calentures after 14 dayes stay, he left it, and Set Sail for America: This Fleet consisted of 21 Ships, and had on board 2300 Men in all. Camden. Hackluit T. 3. p. 536.

This Town lies in a low valley, in form of a Triangle, having on the East and West sides 2. Rocky Mountains or Cliffs, as it were hanging over it; on the Tops of which are Fortifications. On the South side of the Town is the Main Sea, on the North is a Valley lying between the 2 Mountains, which growing Narrower next the Town, is not above 12 score over. In the Midst of this Valley runs a Rivulet of fresh Water, which near the Sea makes a Pond or Pool to Water the Ships:

The Valley from the Town-ward openeth broader, and is fill'd with Gardens, Orchards and Vineyards; full of Limons, Oranges, Sugar-Canes, Cocho-Nuts, Plantains, Potato-Roots, Cucumers, Onyons, Garlick, &c.

The name of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almost forgotten. Given to those Islands, as supposed (but I cannot see upon what Grounds) to be the seat of the Gorgons; the proper habitation or dwelling place of Medusa and her two fair Sisters. This Medusa, said or rather fabled by the Poets to have been a Woman of great beauty; who either for suffering her body to be abused by Neptune, in one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her self before Palas, had by the said Goddess, her hair turned into Snakes, and this property annexed unto them; That whosoever looked on her, should be turned into Stones: which quality was retained after she was slain, and beheaded by Perseus. Thus and far more fabulously the Poets. The Historians (for as some think, omnis fabula fundatur in historia) relate how this Medusa was indeed a Lady of such exceeding beauty, that all Men that saw her were amazed; and of such a wise and subtle brain, that for that cause only Men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by Piracy molesting the Seas of Europ, was invaded by an Army of Grecians, under the leading of Perseus, who in a single combat slew her. Perseus when he plucked off her Helmet, admiring that beauty which he had destroyed, cut off her Head, and carried it unto Greece: where the People beyond measure wondred at the rare composure of her Face, and the exceeding beauty of her hair; and are therefore said to have by her head been metamorphosed into Stones. Pausanias in his Corinthiacks so reports the Story.

12. THE CANARIES.

THE CANARIES are in number seven, situate over against the Coast of Libya Interior; so called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Pliny, Ptolemy, and other of the ancient Writers, they were called Insulae Fortunatae, the Fortunate Islands: and amongst them of greatest note, for being made the fixed place of the first Meridian, removed since to St. Michael, one of the Azores. But those Ancients knew but six of them by name, and in the naming of those six do not well agree. By Pliny, whom Solinus followeth, they are said to be 1. Ombrio, 2. Junonia Major, 3. Junonia Minor, 4. Cypria, 5. Nivaria, and 6. Canaria. By Ptolemy thus reckoned, 1. Aproditus, 2. Hera, (or Junonia,) 3. Plutania, 4. Cypria, 5. Canaria, and 6. Pincuria. Where we may note also to our purpose, that though these Authors differ in all the rest of the names (Junonia being added by the Translator unto Ptolemy's Hera) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one: which sheweth that one to be of eminence enough, to give the name of Canary Islands unto all the rest. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the ancients had of their Fruitfulness, and other Excellencies; in which respects several Countries in those times had the names of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1. Canary. 2. Palma. 3. Tenariffe. 4. Gomero. 5. Ferro. 6. Lanzarote. And 7. Puerto Ventura.

1. CANARIA, or Canaria Magna, because the biggest of the Cluster, is said to be 90 miles in compass, and to contain 9000 Persons: plentiful in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar-Canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which and of their Cheese and the skins of Beasts, they raise great profit: but from nothing more than from their Wood (whereof they have very great abundance) used by the Clothier for the well-colouring of his Cloth. From hence and from the other of these Islands which bear this name, come the fine singing Birds, called Canary-Birds; and so do also those rich Wines, (the Fruit of the Rbenish-Grape transplanted) which we call Canaries. A sort of Wine, if not sophisticated and abused, which is said to sume less in-head, please the palate more, and better help the weakness of a cold stomach (if moderately and diffused) than any other Wines whatsoever. Brought in such abundance to supply our luxury, that no more than 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yearly into England, and the Netherlands only. By Adulteration so much soiled now, that they, are not enquired after.

John de Borequena, Earl of Comberland, in the year 1598, put out a Fleet of 11 Ships at his own Charge; he took Lanzarote, Borequena, and Porto Ricco, in which he intended to have settled a Colony of English, but was forced to give over the Design by a Sickness amongst his Men. The First discoverer was Lewis de Colon; but they were not attempted to be Conquered till the year 1492. Bricamontius, a French Gentleman, in the year 1493, began another Conquest by Grant from the King of Castile. [The old People that were before did abhor the Killing of a Beast as dishonourable, and therefore imposed it on their Prisoners] Herbert. p. 3. They were attempted by the French in 1417, and Conquered by the Spaniards in 1418. Hackl. T. 2. p. 2.

La ciudad de las Palmas, Palmarum civitas, the principal City of the Island of Canaria: This City is the Capital of all the Canary-Islands, and to it there lies an Appeal from all the other Cities and Islands; It hath also a Beautiful Cathedral Church, with all the Dignities thereunto belonging. The City is Beautiful, and the Citizens gallant in their Apparel: After the greatest Rain a Man may go clean here in a Velvet Slipper, because the Ground is a Sand. The Air is very Temperate, without extream heat or cold. This Account was given by Nichols, an English Man, who lived here 7 years, Hackl. T. 2. p. 2. p. 3.

2. PALMA, one of the least in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitful in Wine and Sugars, abundantly well stored with Cattel, and great plenty of Cheese; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spanish Fleets as they pass to America. This Island, together with Canary and Tenariffe, make up the Bishoprick of the Canaries. One of the Bishops whereof was that Melchior Canus a Dominican Frier; whose works now extant in defence of the Church of Rome, shew him to have been a moderate and learned Man, and Master of a perfect Ciceronean stile. This Island was Conquered by the Spaniards in 1491. The Principal Town of which is Santa Cruz de la Palma. The residue of the Islands are of the Diocese of Madera.

3. TENARIFFE, somewhat less than the Grand Canary, but of the same fertility and condition with it, is most remarkable for a Mountain of so great an height, that it may be seen 90 Leagues at Sea, in a fair clear day. Some reckon it 15 Miles high, others 15 Leagues, and some advance it to 60 miles, but with little credit. With truth enough most of our Travellers and Geographers hold it to be the highest in the whole World. The Form Pyramidal, in shape agreeing to those Prodigies of Art and Wonder, the Egyptian Pyramids. The top whereof ending in a sharp point, called the Pike of Tenariffe, is said to be seldom without Snow; and therefore probably conceived to be the Nivaria of Pliny. This Island is about 48 Spanish Leagues in Circumference, Fruitfull, Populous, and Rich, and has been subject to the Spaniards ever since the year 1496. The Antients called it formerly Nivaria. The Principal Towns in it are St. Croce and Laguna, to which belong an excellent Haven, into which Blake, an English Admiral, Entered April 20. 1657. notwithstanding a Castle, and 7 Forts, and 16 great Galeons, all well Mann'd, and provided with Canon and Amunition, which threatened his inevitable Ruine, and in 6 hours time he beat the Spaniards out of their Ships and Ports too, and put the English in Possession of this Vast Treasure, (it being a West-India Fleet;) and Burnt all those Spanish Ships which they found there. This Island is remarkable for having been made the first Meridian by many of the later Geographer's. Tenariffe is seated 27. 30. from the Equator to the North, and is 17 South Leagues in length: The Land lies all very high; but the Pike in the midst is 45 English Miles Perpendicular; out of which oftentimes flameth a Fire of Brimstone; at the top it is halfe a mile broad, and form'd like a Caldron, that is, a Concave: Within 2 miles of the top it is nothing but Ashes and Pumice Stones; beneath that, all the year covered with Snow. Something lower grow Vast Trees that rot not in the Water; beneath these are Woods of Bay-Trees for 10 or 12. miles, very pleasant to be travelled through, being full of Melodious Birds. It yeilds more Corn than any of the rest in this Knot, and besides yeilds all that the rest do. It has a fair City called Santa Cruz, standing 3 Leagues from the Sea. The other Towns are Lanzarote, Rialeio and Garachio. Before the Conquest of this small Island, there Reigned 7 Kings in it, who dwelt in Caves, and were all cloathed in Goatskins. Canaria, Tenariffe, and Palma, Pay the King of Spain for Customs 50000 Ducats per Annum; and the Bishop 12000. Nichols, an English Man, who lived here 7. years. Hackl. T. 2. P. 2. p. 5.

4. HIERO, or FERRI Insula, so called from the Iron Mines therein, is by some thought to be the Pluitalia, by others the Aprisus of Ptolemy; and some again more probably the Ombrio of Pliny, if this and Ptolemies Pluitalia be not one and the same, as for my part I think they be. And it might possibly have those names in the Greek and Latine, because it hath in it no fresh Waters but what they do receive in showers and preserve in Cisterns: it being added by later Writers (which the Ancients knew not) that these showers do daily fall upon them from the leaves of a Tree, which always covered with a Cloud doth distill these Waters; preserved in a large Cistern underneath the Tree, for the use of Man and Beast throughout the Island. It is about 6 Leagues in Compass, and belongs to the Earl of Gomera; it yeilds Orchel and Goats Flesh, and has but one Vineyard planted by one Hill, of Taunton in England, amongst the Rocks. It has only one Cistern of Water at the foot of an Olive-Tree in the midst of the Island, which yet is sufficient for the Inhabitants, and their Cattle. Hackl. T. 2. P. 2. p. 6.

5. GOMERA, now as civil and well cultivated as any of the rest, was the most barbarous of all, when first discovered: it being here and here only, the ordinary sign and evidence of their Hospitality, to let their friends lie with their Wives, and receive theirs in testimony of reciprocal kindness: for which cause here, as in some places of the Indies, the Sister's Son did sue accustomably to inherit. This Island is about 22 Leagues in Compass, and has a Town of the same Name, and a large Haven: This is supposed to be that which the Ancients called Theode. It standeth on the West of Tenariffe, and is but 8 Leagues long: The Proprietor of it is an Earl. The harbour is so good, that the Spanish West-India Fleet of ten stop here for Refreshments. It yeilds Corn, Fruit, Wine, and Sugar, Hackl. T. 2. P. 2. p. 6.

6. LANZAROTE, the first of those Islands which was made subject to the Crown of Castile, discovered by some adventurous Biscains, An. 1393. by whom spoiled and pillaged; and the poor King and Queen thereof, and 170 of their Subjects of better quality brought away Prisoners into Spain. On this discovery the Kings of Castile challenged a propriety in all these Islands; of which more anon. In this of Lanzarote there was an Episcopal Sea erected by Pope Martin the fifth, removed unto the Isle of Canary in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick. This Island, as appeareth by the above cited relation in the last Century, was an Earldom belonging to the Family of Herrera; who also was possessed of Fuerte-ventura. The Latitude of it is 26. 00. and the length 12 Leagues.

7. FUERTE VENTURA, of the same Nature with the rest, supposed to be the Capraria of Pliny, and the Cassperia of Ptolemy; but not else observable. Near unto these, but not within the name and notion of the the Fortunate or Canary Isles, are certain others of less note, that is to say, 1. Gratiola, 2. St. Clara, 3. Roca, 4. L. bee, 5. Allegrencia, and 6. Isferna, small and of no account, nor yielding any matter of Observation. This Island is 15 Leagues long, and 12 broad, and stands 50 Leagues from Cape de Guer in Africa, to the West; 24 from Canary to the East; in the Latitude of 27. 00. It yields plenty of Wheat, Barley, Beef, Goats, and Orcher, but very little Wine. Hacklur.

The knowledge of these Islands being lost with the Roman Empire, they lay concealed and undiscovered till the Year 1350. or thereabouts, when an English, or as some say, a French Ship, distressed by Tempest, did in that Mistorane fall upon them. Notice whereof being given in the Court of Portugal, in the Reign of King Alphonso the Fourth, Lewis d. Ordo was designed for the Conquest of them: who being repulled at Genera, Anno 1334. gave the Enterprize over, though on this Ground the Portugals build their first claim unto these Islands. But the News spreading by degrees to the Court of Rome, Clement the Sixth thought fit to make a grant of them to Prince Louis of Spain, Son of Alphonso de la Cerde, the right Heir of Castile, by the old Name of the Fortunate-Islands; and to assist him in the Conquest, caused Levies of Soldiers to be made both in France and Italy. Which coming to the Ears of the English Ambassadors in the Pope's Court, they feared that some transport had been made of the British Islands, (than which they thought that none could better deserve the Name of the Fortunate-Islands) and in all haste dispatched a Post to the Court of England, for the preventing of the Danger.

The People at the time of this first Discovery, were so rude and ignorant, that they did eat their Flesh raw for want of Fire; and tilled or rather turned up the Earth with the Horns of Oxen for want of Ploughs, or Tools of Iron; their Beards they shaved with a sharp Flint, and committed the Care of their Children to the Nursing of Goats. To kill a Beast was conceived to be the best Office that could possibly be put on them, and they commonly imposed on Prisoners and condemned Men; who being thus made the common Slaughter-house, were to live separate from the rest. Their Government by Kings, in each Island one; whom at their Deaths, they set up naked in a Cave, propped against the Wall with a Staff in his Hand, and a Vessel of Milk fast by him, the better to enable him for his Journey to the other World, and leaving him in the Grave with these solemn Words, Depart in peace, O thou blessed Soul. The like Funeral they bestow also on the Chief of their Nobles. Yet was not the Government in those times so purely Regal, but that they had a Common Council (as it were) out of all the Islands, consisting of 120 Persons; who did not only direct in Civil Matters, but in Sacred also, prescribing to the People both their Faith and Worship; and for their Palms were privileged with the first Nights Lodging with every Bride, which the Husband was to offer to some one of them. The Natural Inhabitants are said then to have been of a good and mild Disposition, and that they all agreed in the Acknowledging one GOD the Creator of the World, and in nothing else. They were clothed in Goat-skins and lived in Caves; they eat Dogs-flesh to this day.

But to return unto the Story; nothing being done by Lewis de la Cerde, in pursuance of the Pope's Donation, it happened in the year 1393. that some Adventurers of Biscay, setting out certain Ships from Sevil to seek their Fortunes at Sea, fell amongst these Islands. And having pillaged Lanzarote, as before was said, and observed the number, greatness, and situation of all the rest, returned into Spain with great store of Wax, Hides, and other Commodities, with which those Islands did abound: extremely welcome to King Henry, who then reigned in Castile, and did intend from that time forwards to possess himself of them. By Katharine one of the Daughters of John Duke of Lancaster, the Dowager of this King Henry, during the Minority of John the Second, the Conquest of them was committed to John of Burancourt, an adventurous Frenchman, (conditioned he should hold them under the Sovereignty of the Crown of Castile) by whom four of the Islands were subdued, though he himself perished in the Action, Anno 1417. Young Burancourt the Son, not being able to subdue Canary, to which most of the Islanders had retired, fortified himself as well as he could in the Isle of Lanzarote, and took unto himself the Title of King; which he left not long after to one Menaunt; in whose time the Islands under his command received the Gospel, and had a See Episcopop in the Isle of Lanzarote. But this new King making Money by the Sale of his Subjects, (as well of the new Christians, as of the old Indians) complaint was made of him in the Court of Castile; and Pedro Barzade Campos with three Ships of War, was sent against him; with whom unable to contend, with the good leave and liking of the King of Castile, he sold his Interest in these Islands to one Fernando Peres a Knight of Sevil, who, by the wealth and power of that City made good his Purchase, and left it unto his Successors. But we must know, that the Posterity of this Peres enjoyed the four lesser Islands only; Canary it self, Tenariffe, and the Isles of Palmes, being under the Command of their own Kings: And so continued till the Reign of Ferdinand the Catholic, who in the year 1483. under the Conduct of Alphonso of Mexico, and Pedro de Vera, two Noble Captains, became Master of them; and translated the Episcopal See from Lanzarote to the great Canary. So that although the Portugals claim these Islands in right of the first Discovery, yet the Possession hath gone always with the Crown of Castile. Divided at the present into two Estates, (but the one subordinate to the other) Genera, Lanzarote, and Hierra, being in the hands of some private Subjects; those which belong unto the Crown, being Canaria, Palma, Tenariffe, and Fuerte Ventura, are said to yield yearly to the King 50000 Ducats; the Seat of Justice being fixed in the Isle of Canaria, unto which all the rest resort as they have occasion.

13. MADERA, and 14. HOLYPORT.

13. MA D E R A, the greatest Island of the Atlantic, is situate in the Latitude of 32. over against the Cape of Cantin in Morocco; in compass 140 miles, some add 20 more. So called of the Wilderness of Trees there growing when first discovered; the Portugals naming that Madera, which the Latins call Materia, and we English Timber: with which the Isle was so overgrown, that the best way to clear it, and make it habitable, was by consuming them with Fire; which raged so horribly for the time, that the People employed in it were fain to go far into the Sea to refresh themselves. But the Husbandry was well bestowed, the Ashes making so good compost to enrich the Soil, (as burning the Turf of barren Lands and ploughing the Ashes of it, on some Grounds with us) that at the first it yielded Sixty-fold increase. And though the first virtue of that Experiment be long since decayed, yet still it yieldeth Thirty-fold in most places of it; fruitful withal of a kind of Plant used in Dying Cloath, which is hence called Mador; and of Sugar-canes in such a wonderful manner, that for a time the Filths of the Sugars herein made, amounted yearly to 60000 Arrobes; now not half so much. The Isle wonderfully fruitful also of Honey, Wax, rich Fruits, and the choicest Wines; the Slips whereof were brought from Candy, bringing forth here more Grapes than Leaves, and Clusters of two, three, and four spans long. The Hills well stored with Goats, the Plains with numerous herds of Cattel; the Woods with Peacocks, Thrushes, Pigeons; these last so ignorant of the Injury which Man might do them, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would suffer themselves to be taken up; but now have wit enough to keep out of danger.

This Island was first found by an Englishman, whose name was Machan in the year 1344. The Man was left here by the Ship with a few Men, and in an open Boat made of one Tree, arrived in Barbary, and was by the Moors presented to Peter the Fourth, King of Arragon, as a Wonder. In 1395. Henry King of Castile sent some Ships the second time to find out this Island and the Canaries, which it seems succeeded, for in 1417. Monsieur Ruben de Bracamont, a French Gentleman, was sent to conquer Canaria. Hackl. T. 2. Part 2. p. 1. — In 1419. it was again discovered by the Portuguese, and called by this Name for its plenty of Wood. Its length is 25 Leagues, its circuit 60. And though it is said an Englishman first Landed here, yet the Portuguese first Peopled this Island, and still Possess it.

The whole Island in all parts well watered, having, besides many pleasant Springs, eight handsome Rivulets, wherewith the Earth, refreshed and moistened, yields the sweeter Herbage; which otherwise by reason of the Heat of the Air (never very cool) might not be so nourishing.

The chief City of it hath the Name of Euchid, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of Justice: known to the Romans by the name of Junonis, or Antolala, as many Learned Men conceive, and again forgotten; it was of later times discovered by one Machan, an Englishman, who was cast upon it by a Tempest, Anno 1344. (as has been said above) who burying there his Wife, or some other Woman which he had in his company, writ on her Tomb his name, and coming thither, with the Cause thereof; which gave the Portugals occasion to look farther after it. Desolate and Unpeopled at the first Discovery, now exceeding Populous; and of no small advantage to the Crown of Portugal, to which first united, An. 1420. under the Conduct of Prince Henry, before mentioned. Every thing it produceth is extraordinary good in its kind, but its principal Commodities are Sugars and Wines, and Cedar Chests: The Bishop of Touchea had a Revenue of 8000 Ducats. This is a fair City, which has a good Port, and a strong Castle for its defence; and the Cathedral is very Magnificent. It has a great plenty of good Wines, which are laden here mostly for America. It has also another considerable Sea port Town call'd Machio. Hackl. T. 2. Part 2. p. 319. but misfigured, for it should be 7.

14. INSULA PORTUS SANCTI, or the Isle of HOLY-PORT, is distant from Madera about 40 miles; neighbouring the Coasts of Mauritania Tangitana, and therefore probably conceived to be the Cerne of Ptolemy. So called, because discovered by some Portugal Mariners (by the Direction and Encouragement of the said Prince Henry) on Allhallows-day Anno 1428. Desolate and uninhabited at the first Discovery, but now very well Peopled. In compass about 15 miles; well stored with Corn and Fruits, great shoals of Fish upon their Shores, plenty enough of Bees and Goats; but such abundance of Coneys (bred of one Doe-Coney brought thither when great with young) that the Inhabitants were no less pestered with them in these later times, than the Baleares were of old; insomuch that they were out of hope to withstand the Mischiefs, or repair the Damages sustained by them. A little Island not far off, breedeth nothing else.

The chief Town of it Porto Santo, or Holy-Port, seated on a convenient Rode, but a sorry Haven, was taken by Sir Amias Prellon, in our Wars with Spain, Anno 1596. but being sacked and spoiled, was again abandoned. In former times called Cerne, as before was said, and reckoned for the most remote Colony which the Carthaginians or Phœnicians had in the Western Ocean; beyond which they conceived the Sea to be Unnavigable, (proved otherwise by Hanno's voyage) choaked with Mud and Weeds. Called therefore Cerne ultima (Aethiopum populos alit ultim. Cerne) by Festus Rufus, and others of the Ancient Writers

15. The HESPERIDES.

THE HESPERIDES, by Pliny and Pomponius Mela, are said to be two in number, situate in the Atlantick Seas, but we find not where. Much memorized and chanted by the ancient Poets, for giving a safe and pleasant Habitation to the Daughters of Atlas (which they call by the Name of Hesperedes also;) the curious Gardens by them planted, and the Golden Apples of it which were kept by the Dragon, and took hence by Hercules. But the Historians remove these Gardens out of the Sea, into the main Land of Africk, and fix them in Cyrene, where already spoken of. Which, notwithstanding, it is granted, that there were anciently some Islands in the Atlantick Ocean, noted by this name, and said to be exceeding fruitful of their own accord: and therefore probably the same which Plutarch in the Life of Sertorius calleth Insula Atlantica, and describes them thus: Αἱ δὲ μὲν αὖτ', λέπειν παντάπασι ποσὶ μὴ δακνύνουσιν, &c. They are (saith he) two Islands parted by a narrow Strait of the Sea, distant from the main Land of Africk 10000 Furlongs (which in our Account cometh to 1250 miles) called also the Isles of Blessed Souls, and the Fortunate Islands. They have Rain there very seldom, but a fine sweet Dew, which makes their Earth exceeding fruitful both for Tillage and planting Fruits, which sometimes grow without any care or labour of the Husbandman; sufficient by their plenty and sweetness to maintain the People; much given to Ease, and hardly troubling themselves with any Business. The Air for the most part very temperate, never extrem in any changes of the Season; the rigour of the Northern and Eastern Winds, being by so long a passage thither very much abated; as on the other side the Western and South-Eastern Winds, do much refresh it with such Mists as they bring from the Sea, to the great comfort of the People. A Place so generally sweet, that the barbarous People in it have a constant and approved Opinion, that these should be the Elysian-Fields, the Seats of the Blessed Souls departed, described by Homer: with the report whereof Sertorius was so highly taken, that he intended to have given over the pursuit of the Civil Wars, and there to spend the rest of his days in Peace and Happiness; which he had done, if the Cilicians, Men accustomed unto Spoil and Rapine had not took him off. So far, and to this purpose Plutarch. But what these Islands are, and where now to be found, (for in regard of their great distance from the Coast of Africk they cannot be the Fortunate Islands spoken of before) I cannot easily determine: unless we should conjecture, as Ortelius doth, that they are the Islands of Cuba and Hispaniola on the Coasts of America; to the Story and Chorography whereof we are now to hasten.

A O Z O R E S.

THE A O Z O R E S is a knot of Islands seated in the Atlantick Ocean, to the North-West of the Canary Islands in the Latitude of 40. and are in number nine, viz. Tercera, St. Michael, St. Mary, St. George, Pico, Faial, Flores, Corvo, and Grattosa. They are now under the Crown of Portugal; and it may be questioned whether they belong to Europe, Africa, or America: Though I think it is better to place them here, than totally to omit them. They were first discovered by a Flandrian, in the year 1449. The Soil is said to be Stony, but wonderfully Fruitful, and affording excellent Bees. In the year 1597. the English under the command of the Earl of Essex, took and burnt the Town of Faial, and might have taken more of them, but that they came thither to wait for the Spanish West-India Fleet, which escaping into the Harbour of Tercera, the Principal of these Islands, escaped from them, but however, they took three of their best Ships.

And so much for the Isles of AFRICK.

An Advertisement to the READER, concerning AMERICA in General.

HE that Travelleth any Part of America, not inhabited by the Europeans, shall find a World very like to that we lived in, in or near the times of Abraham the Patriarch, about Three hundred years after the Flood. The Lands lie in Common to the Natives and all Comers, though some few small parcels are Sown, yet the Tiller claims no right in them when he has reaped his Crop once. Their Petty Kings do indeed frequently sell their Kingdoms, but that in effect is only the taking Money for withdrawing and going farther up the Country; for he is sure never to want Land for his Subjects, because the Country is vastly bigger than the Inhabitants, who are very few in proportion to its Greatness and Fertility.

Those Parts that are fit for Trees are all covered with Woods full of vast large Trees, with very few Bushes or Shrubs under them; so that it is in most Places easy and pleasant Travelling under the shady old Trees. Those Parts that lie next the Rivers and Lakes are full of Bogs and Quagmires, that were never Drained nor Improved any way. The sandy and barren Grounds that have neither of these, are rare in North America, but more frequent in South America. There is another sort of Lands that bear rich Grass, but neither Trees nor Bushes, a vast Tract of which lyeth to the S.W. of Virginia, the Bounds of which to the S. and W. are unknown, and these though one would think the easiest to fit for Humane habitation, are yet said not be inhabited, perhaps only because not frequented by the Deer, which the Indians ever follow and live upon a great part of the Year. The Springs of Water also not breaking out so frequently upon the Earth, and the Indians having neither Art nor Patience to Dig for them into the Bowels of the Earth.

Cities and Towns built with Timber, Brick or Stone, they have none; their Villages are encompassed with whole Trees set in the Ground like Pallisadoes, and the Houses within them are built like the old tents of Boughs and Poles, and covered with Straw or Leaves to secure them from the Injury of the Weather: And being thus Mean, they as lightly esteem them, and do leave or burn them without regret; yet they will defend their Towns for the Security of their Lives, rather than for any Value they have for them. So that a Man may say, the Indians rather are, than are settled in the Land.

Sometimes whole Nations change their Seats, and go at once to very distant places, Hunting as they go for a Subsistence; and they that have come after the first Discoverers, have found those places Desolate, which the other found full of Inhabitants. This will shew, that we have done them no Injury by Settling amongst them; we, rather than they, bring the prime Occupants, and they only Sojourners in the Land: we have bought however of them the most part of the Lands we have, and have purchased little with our Swords, but when they have made War upon us.

But then as to the Inhabitants, they are infinitely more Barbarous than the Inhabitants of Canaan were in the times of Abraham. They have none or very few tame Cattel of any sort, such as Cows, Horses, Sheep, Goats or Hogs, except what we have carried to them, which is a good Argument to prove they are descended from the Samoydes, or very Northern Tartars of Asia, who by reason of the excessive Colds, have no Cattel but a sort of Deer, which will not live in warmer Countries, and so failed them when they came to turn towards the South. They have no Manufactures, Arts or Sciences, a bad Government, under Petty Princes, and a worse Religion, consisting mostly in Worshipping the Sun, and the Devil; and Managed by Witches, Conjurers, and Wizards, who pretend to raise the Devil, to be informed by him of what they desire to know: All that they pretend to claim any Propriety in, is, their Wives and Children, and what they carry about them; only their Kings have a Propriety in their Subjects.

Hence we may observe, that Learning and Arts, Religion and Government, are not the Productions of Time, and that they came not into the World by humane Invention, as many have averr'd; for these People are of a greater standing than those ancient Heroes that so mightily Adorned and Improved the Ages in which they lived, and Civilized us as their Inventions came forward. Let us, History, and Philosophy, are Things of which they have no Notion; nor should we ever have had any, if God had not inspired the first Inventers of Letters. The whole World might have been to this Day, as Barbarous and Ignorant as they now are, if the Divine Providence had not drawn it out of its Chaos of Moral, as well as Material Confusion; and therefore it seems he has discovered them to us in these latter Ages, that we may Civilize these Nations, and fit them for the Reception of Christianity, of which they could otherwise never have heard.

The Spaniards entred with Armed Forces, and with an handful of Men Conquered two most flourishing Kingdoms in a small time: It is true, their Fire-Arms, Horse, and Discipline, were vast Advantages against a naked number of Indians; yet the bare disproportion of Number, without the Divine Assistance, would certainly have cast the Victory on the side of the Indians, as any rational Man must grant that considereth it well. The English and French went the way of Treaty, and settled as Planters by leave of the Inhabitants, who were very Numerous, and might at first easily have destroyed them; but their Numbers are so diminished by the Small Pox, Brandy, and their mutual Feuds, that the English are now much more Stronger and more Numerous than they be; so that they are forced to remove higher up into the Country, which affords the English Means and Opportunity to gather Strength and Improve the Country, which would otherwise have been Difficult, if not Impossible.

Tho' Spain and England have for the Present very much increased their Trade and Riches, by the Discovery and Plantation of America, yet it is disputable, whether in the End it will not turn to their greater Damage than Advantage. As to Spain, it hath so very much exhausted the People of that Kingdom already, that the Possession of it is not now kept without great Difficulty; and yet the Consumption goes on daily; and were the Passage to the Indies a little more Open and Cheap, very many more would pass thither, and Spain would fall under the Sword of the next Invader, for want of Hands to defend it. Nor is Spain considerably enriched by these Treasures of America, they being

being yearly drawn out again by the neighbour Nations, which supply Spain with Necessaries.

The Depopulation of Spain is mostly attributed to the Banishment of the Moors and their Wars abroad, and these had their share in it; but the American Plantations seem to have had a principal Share in it; vast numbers of Spaniards every year being invited thither to partake of its Riches, who seldom or never return back again; so that the rest that are left behind, being hereby made more uneasy, do desire also to pass thither: And if ever Spain be vigorously Attacked, it will be the less manfully Defended, because they have this Empire in America to retreat to at the worst. But, however this Depopulation came upon Spain at first, nothing is more certain, than that America has very much encreased it: So that as far as a Man may judge of future things, the Possession of Spain will pass in a few Generations to another People, or at least it will become an Accession to some other Crown.

England began its Plantations near 100 Years after Spain, and consequently the Effects of it are not yet so visible as in the other Kingdom; but the People of England are sensibly wasted already, and it has a very ill Effect upon the Tillage and Husbandry of England in all the Southern Parts, and upon the Soldiery; so that the Armies that have hitherto been raised in England cannot now be had: This Scarcity grows greater every Year, and will be the Cause of many more Families removing to those Plantations than have hitherto gone, which must have a very ill effect upon us at long run.

It is the Nature of Mankind to desire to live where they may subsist most easily, especially if any ways pent. So if any Tenant, Shopkeeper, or Tradesman, find his Trade fail, his Debts too great, or his Condition uneasy, away he goes to the Plantations with as much as he can carry off, and within a while the Wife and Children follow, and sometimes many others of their Acquaintance and Relations. The Planters draw over as many as is possible to serve them, very few of which ever return to us again; so that one way or other some thousands are drawn over, and settled there every Year: This lessens the People of England, and rendereth them that stay more uneasy, and by consequence disposeth them to follow the other.

Hands are the Father, and Lands the Mother of all Wealth; as Hands grow scarcer, so they grow dearer, and Lands cheaper: As our People grow less, so less is spent in Meat, Drink, and Apparel, and that is another Cause of the fall of Lands; so that as the Trade of England grows by the Plantations, the Lands of England fall, the Gentry and Nobility sink, and the Security and Strength of England abateth. As the Merchant groweth hereby much richer than the old Families, so they grow more insolent, and desirous of a Change in the Government to bring the other under them, or at least to a Level with them.

We neither can nor ought to think of forcing these Planters to return back to us; nor is it our interest, or just, to oppress them, by over-charging the Goods that go thither or come from thence; but as they are ever dreining out our People, we ought to be as careful to supply that Consumption for our own security, and encourage Marriage amongst our manner People, and the Settlement of Strangers amongst us by introducing a more easie way of Naturalization than that by Act of Parliament now in use.

Next to that of inviting and encouraging Strangers to settle amongst us, by allowing them equal Privileges with the English, the taking Care for Negro and Tartar Servants to manage our Husbandry, is of great use. The bringing in Negroes for Footmen and for Women-Servants in London is become pretty frequent and common, but there were never any of them employed to Agriculture here in England, as in truth they seem to be somewhat of the Tenderest for that Work in our cold Climate; but the Negro Children born here might do very well, especially the Mulatto-Negroes, half white half black, many of which sort are born amongst us, tho' we do not yet distinguish them. But there is one thing of absolute Necessity before this can be done, which is to revive the Laws of Villenage, and settle a way of Governing them, like that practised in our Plantations, without which they will be of no use to us. And when that is done, that it be made a Part of the Law, that they shall be Servants, tho' Baptized, as much as before, so that they may be admitted to Christianity without any damage to their Masters, as is practised with good success by the Spaniards and Portuguese; and to give the Children and Women of the white Women that shall mix with the Negro Men, to the Master of the Negroes, he taking care to bring them up; and that no Parish shall be charged with the Maintenance of any Negro, Old or Young, Sick or Well, but to be always maintained by the Families to which they belong, with a severe Penalty upon any Person that shall Harbour or Entertain any other Man's Negro.

I do not certainly know whether we might not have Tartar Slaves from Russia by the Bay of Archangel; if we may (for they are plentiful enough there) by the Laws of the Country, then they would certainly be much fitter for Husbandry than the Negroes, as coming out of a wilder Country, and brought up hardily: These also might be mixed with our Negroes, and a Race of Men be raised between them of a different Colour, and much more hardy than the English, which would very much contribute to the raising, or at least keeping up the value of Land in England; and as these encreased we should be able to spare more of our People to Navigation, Trades, and Manufactures; and when the Foundation were once well laid they would encrease, and abate the Now exorbitant Prices given to Servants and Day-Labourers, which is treble to what it was in the beginning of James the First; and encreasing every Day.

We have Wars in America sometimes with the Natives, and if their Children were brought hither they might be taught Husbandry here, tho' there can be no use made of them in America, because they will run away to the wild Americans rather than Serve the English when they grow up.

Without these or some such effectual Methods be taken to make good the Loss of our People to America and Ireland, we shall in a short time pay very dear for our now great Advantages of Trade; which tends to the Enriching the Merchant, but to the Impoverishing the Gentry and the Nobility, and all those that depend upon the Land Revenues of England; a Consideration which should never be omitted when Trade is under a Debate: For to say the Nation is Enriched, when the Principal Parts of it are indeed Impoverished, and never think more of it, is a very wonderful Delusion, and may be understood when it is a little more set.

Much more might have been said; but I consider some things are only to be hinted to awaken the Thoughts of Men, and not to be followed too far; of which sort perhaps this is one, which for the good of my Country I thought I was bound not wholly to omit.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF AMERICA,

AND ALL THE

Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Iles thereof.

OF AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and last part of the World, is bounded on the East with the Atlantick Ocean and the Verigivian Seas, by which parted from Europe and Africa, which Seas the Mariners call Mare del Noerdt; on the West, with the Pacifick Ocean, by the Mariners called Mare del Zur, which divides it from Asia; on the South, with some part of Terra Australis Incognita, from which separated by a long but narrow Streight, called the Streights of Magelan: the North bounds of it hitherto not so well discovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Island or Continent.

It is called by some, and that most aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New for the late Discovery; and World, for the vast greatness of it. The most usual, and yet somewhat the more improper name, is that of America; because Americus Vesputius, an adventurous Florentine, discovered a great part of the Continent of it. But since the first light he had to find out those Parts came from the Directions and Example of Columbus, who first led the way; and that Sebastian Cabot touched at many places which Americus Vesputius never saw, it might as properly have been called Columbana, Sebastiana, or Cabotia. The most improper name of all, and yet not much less used than that of America, is the West-Indies; West, in regard of the Western situation of it from these parts of Europe; and Indies, either as mislook for some part of India, at the first Discovery, or else because the Sea-Men use to call all Countries, if remote and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on conjectural Presumptions, than demonstrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Discoveries; Their Reasons drawn, 1. From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the Ancient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of these parts of the World which are opposite to us. But unto this it may be answered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongst the Ancients was by Supposition, at the best by Demonstration only, and not in fact: or thus, that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known. 2. It is said that Hanno, a Noble Carthaginian, discovered a great Island in the Western Ocean, and after a long Voyage returned home again, not wanting Sea room, but Victuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous Voyage, (which some conceive to be Hanno himself) informs us that he sailed not Westward, but more towards the South: and therefore this Great Island, whatsoever it was. (whether Madera, or some one of the Fortunate Islands, I determine not) could not be America. 3. It is alledged that Plato in his Timæus speaks of a great Island of the Atlantick Ocean, Libyam & Africam adequans, (as out of him Tertullian hath it) as big as Libya and Africk, properly so called: which he confesseth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore possibly never extant but in some Mens fancies. 4. Aristotle

Aristotle in the Book de mundo (if that Book be his) speaks of an Island very fruitful, and full of Navigable Rivers, discovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be planted upon pain of death. Which Island being affirmed by that Author to be Mulorum dierum itineri & Gadibus remota, hath made some Men conceive it to be this America, or some of the great Islands of it. As if it might not as well be one of the Azores, or perhaps Madera, or some other of the Islands in the Road of Hanno's Voyage. Certain I am, that one of the best Friends the Phœnicians have, who would not gladly lose such an opportunity of ennobling their performances in Navigation, (could any thing be built upon it) doth wave the whole Relation as of doubtful credit; and knoweth of no such place as is there described by that Author, whosoever he were. 5. Some have produced these Verses of Seneca, to infer a knowledge of this Country amongst the Ancients, viz.

Venient annis secula feris,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxet, & ingens pateat Tellus,
Nephaeque Tiphys detegat Orbes,
Nec sit Terræ ultima Thule.

Which we may English in these words:

In the last days an age shall come
Wherein the all-devouring Foam
Shall lose its former bounds, and shew
Another Continent to view.
New Worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A second Tiphys shall reveal;
And frozen Thule shall no more
Be of the Earth the farthest Shore.

But this Argument can bring no necessary, nor so much as a probable inference, of any such Continent as this, then known to Seneca: the Poet in that Chorus shewing as well the continual dangers as the possible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were, more Lands discovered than those formerly known. 6. Some hold this Country to be the Land of Ophir, to which Solomon is said in the holy Scriptures to have sent for Gold. But Ezra's Giber, which is there also said to be the Station where his Navy lay, was situate in the bottom of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia: whereas if he had sent this way, his shipping must have lain at Joppa, or some other Port of the Mediterranean, and from thence set forwards through the Straights of Gibraltar, and so plainly Westward. 7. Finally in the History of Wales, writ by Dauid Powel, 'tis reported that Madoc the Son of Owen Gwynedd, Prince of Wales, of purpose to decline engaging in a Civil War raised in that Estate, in the year 1170. put himself to Sea, and after a long course of Navigation came into this Country: where after he had left his Men, and fortified some places of advantage in it, he returned home for more Supplies, which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the rest of that Nation. To which some add, that there is still some smattering of the Welsh or British tongue to be found amongst them; as that a Bird with a white head is called Penguin, and the like: in which regard some sorry States-men went about to entitle Queen Elizabeth unto the Sovereignty of these Countries. Others more wise, dissuaded from that vain Ambition, considering that Welsh-men, as well as others, might be cast upon these parts by force of Tempest, and easily implant some few words of their own among the People there inhabiting. And though I must needs say for the honour of Wales, that they have more grounds for what they say, than those which look for this New World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantic Islands of Aristotle and Plutarch, or the Discoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian: yet I am not so far convinced of the truth thereof, the use of the Mariners Compass being not so ancient, (without which, such a Voyage could not be performed) but that I may conclude with more satisfaction, that this Country was unknown to the former Ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer said once of Britain, then newly conquered by the Romans, Britannia qualis sit, qualesque progeneret, mox certiora & magis explorata dicuntur; quippe jam diu clausam aperit ecce Principum maximus, (he means Claudius Cæsar) nec indomitum modo sed & incognitarum ante se Gentium Victor: so may we say of America, on these late Discoveries. What kind of Country it is, and what men it produceth, we do and shall know more certainly than in former times; since those puissant Kings of Spain have laid open almost all the parts thereof, inhabited not only by unvanquished, but even unknown Nations. For God remembering the promise of his Son, that his Gospel before the end of the World should be preached to all Nations, stirred up one Christopher Columbus, of Columbus, born at Nerzy in the Seignoury of Genoa, to be the Instrument for finding out those parts of the World, to which the Sound of the Gospel had not yet arrived. Who being a Man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not persuade himself (the motion of the Sun considered) but that there was another World to which that Glorious Planet did impart both his Light and Heat, when he went from us. This World he purposed to seek after, and opening his design to the State of Genoa, Anno 1486 was by them rejected. On his repulse, he sent his Brother Bartholomew to King Henry the Seventh of England; who in his way hapned unfortunately into the hands of Pirates, by them detained a long while, but at last enlarged. As soon as he was set at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England; where his Proposition found such a cheerful entertainment at the hands of the King, that Christopher Columbus was sent for to come thither also. But GOD had otherwise disposed his rich purchase. For Christopher, not knowing of his Brother's imprisonment, nor hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his Service to have been neglected; and thereupon made his desires known at the Court of Castile: where after many delays, and six years attendance on the business, he was at last furnished with three Ships only, and those not for Conquest, but Discovery. With this small strength he sailed on the main Ocean more than 60 days, yet could see no Land, so that the discontented Spaniards began to mutiny; and partly out of scorn to be under the Command of a Stranger, partly desirous to return, would not go a foot forwards. Just at that time it hapned that Columbus did discern the Clouds to carry a clearer colour than they did before: and probably conceiving that this clearness proceeded from some high habitable place, restrained the time of their expectation within the compass of three days, passing his word to return again, if they did not see Land within that time. Towards the end of the third day, one of the Company, called Rodrigo d' Triane (he deserves to have his name recorded, being no otherwise rewarded for such joyful News) descried Fire, an evident Argument that they drew near unto some shore. The place discovered was an Island on the Coast of Florida, by the Natives called Guabani; by Columbus S. Saviours; now counted one of the Lucas. Landing his Men, and causing a Tree to be cut down, he made a Cross thereof; which he erected near the place where he came on Land; and by that Ceremony took possession of this NEW WORLD for the Kings of Spain, October 11. Anno 1492. Afterwards he discovered and took Possession of Hispaniola, and with much Treasure and Content returned towards Spain. Preferred for this good Service by the Kings themselves, first to be Admiral of the Indies, and afterwards to a Coat of Arms with this Inscription, For Castile and Leon Columbus hath gotten a NEW WORLD; and in conclusion unto the Title of Duke De la Vega, in the Isle of Jamaica. News of this fortunate Discovery being sent to Pope

Pope Alex. 6. by the Kings of Castile, he very liberally bestowed upon them all those Countreys which they already had, or should afterwards discover in the Western World; advising them to use their Diligence and Endeavors for converting these people to the Faith: which was done accordingly. For the next year Columbus being furnish'd with 18 Ships for more Discoveries, and his Brother Bartholomew made Governor of the Countreys discovered by him, they took along with them one Bayl, a Benedictine Monk, as the Pope's Vicar Gener. accompanied with the learned Clerks which were to be assistants to him in the converting of that People to the Christian Faith. In this second Voyage he discovered the Islands of Cuba and Jamaica, and built the Town of Isabella (afterwards better known by the name of Domingo) in Hispaniola; from whence, for some Severities used against the mutinous Spaniards, he was sent Prisoner into Castile, but very honourably entertained, and absolved from all the Crimes imputed to him. In the year 1499. he began his third Voyage, in which he discovered the Countreys of Paria and Cumana, on the firm Land, with the Islands of Cubagua and Margarita, with many other Islands, Capes, and Provinces, which shall be touched upon particularly in their several places. In the year 1500 he began his 4th. and last Voyage, in the course whereof coming to Hispaniola, he was unworthily denied entrance into the City of Domingo, by Nicolas de Ovando, the then Governour of it: after which, scouring along the Sea-coasts as far as Nombre de Dios, but adding little to the fortune of his former Discoveries, he returned back to Cuba and Jamaica, and from thence to Spain, where about six years after (that is to say, Anno. 1506.) he departed this Life, and was honourably interred at Sevil, where to this day remaineth this Epitaph on his Tomb, bald in it self, and otherwise exceeding short of so great a Merit. Of which I must tell you by the way, that the Philip whom the Verse (I do not say the Poet) called Philippus Hispanus, should rather have been called Philippus Austriacus, or Philippus Burgundus, as being meant of that Philip of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, who had then married Juan, sole Daughter and Heir of the King of Spain, and after the Death of Isabella succeeded in the Realm of Castile: or else, the Epitaph must be written long after his death, and meant of Philip the II. Son of Charles the Fifth who was not born until the year 1527. and came not to the Crown above twenty years after. Now for this Epitaph, such as it is, it is this that followeth:

*Cristophorus genuit quem Genoa clara Columbus,
(Numine percussus quo nescio) primus in altum
Descendens Pelagus, Solem versusque cadentem
Directo cursu, nostro hactenus addita Mundo Littora detexi, Hispano paritura Philippo;
Addenda hinc aliis plura & majora relinquens.*

Which may be Englished in these Words:

*I Christopher Columbus, whom the Land
Of Genoa first brought forth, first took in hand,
I know not by what Deity incited,
To scour the Western seas, and was delighted
To seek for Countreys never known before.
Crown'd with Success, I first descri'd the Shore
Of the NEW WORLD, then destin'd to sustain
The future Yoke of Philip Lord of Spain.
And yet I greater matters left behind,
For men of more Means, and a Braver Mind.*

Dying, he left two Sons behind him, of which the youngest, called Ferdinand, died unmarried; the eldest, called Diego, succeeded his Father in the Admiralty of the Indies, and the Dukedom of Vega, and married Mary of Toledo, Daughter of Ferdinand Duke of Alva; but having (as it seemeth) no Issue by her, he spent the greatest part of his Estate in founding the Library at Sevil, spoken of before, which he furnished with 12000 Volumes, and endowed with a liberal Revenue to maintain the same. But though his family be extinct, yet his Fame shall live, and grow to all posterities, as the first discoverer of this new world, and consequently the greatest and most fortunate Advancer of the Spanish Monarchy; though in his life time to maligned by most part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla, being sent into those Parts for redress of Grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him Prisoner into Spain. Nor did they only stick after his death to deprive him of the honour of this Discovery, (attributing it to I know not what Spaniard, whose Charts and Descriptions he had seen) but in his life would often say that it was a matter of no such difficulty to have found these Countreys; and that if he had not done it when he did, some body else might have done it for him. Whole Peevishness he confuted by this modest Artifice, desiring some of them, who insolently enough had contended with him touching this Discovery, to make an Egg stand firmly upon one of its ends: Which when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently bruising one end of it, made it stand upright; letting them see without any farther reprehension, how easie it was to do that thing which we see another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was seconded by Juan Cabot a Venetian, the Father of Sebastian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the Seventh of England; who in the year 1497. discovered all the North-East Coasts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South, to Newfoundland, and Terra di Labrador in the North, causing the Róyelets to turn Homagers to that King, and the Crown of England. Next after him succeeded Americus Vesputius, an adventurous Florentine, employed therein by Emanuel King of Portugal, Anno. 1501. on a design of finding out a nearer way to the Moluccas than by the Cape of good hope, who though he passed not farther than the Cape of S. Augustines in Brasil, without so much as having a sight of the Great River de la plata, which washeth the South Parts of that Country; yet from him (to the great Injury and Neglect of the first Discoverers) the Continent or Main Land of this Country hath the name of America; by which it is still known, and most commonly called. Followed herein by divers Private Adventurers and Undertakers out of all Parts of Europe bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellanus was the first that compassed the whole World, and found the South Passage, called Fretum Magellanicum to this day: followed herein by Drake and Cavendish of England. Frobisher and Davis attempted a Discovery of the North-west Passage: Willoughby and Barrroughs of the North-east. So that, according to that elegant saying of the learned Verulam in his Advancement of Learning, this Great Building, the World, had never thorough Light made in it, till these our days; by which, as almost all parts of Learning, so in especial this of Navigation, and by consequence of Cosmography also, hath obtained an incredible Proficiency in these later times.

For in the Infancy and first Ages of the World, (pardon me, I beseech you, this short but not unprofitable Digression) Men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign Merchandise, nor inquisitive after the Lives and Fortunes of their Neighbours; or in the Language of the Poet,

Nondum caesa suis, peregrinum ut viseret Orbem, Montibus, in liquidas Pinus, descenderat undas.

The Pine left not the Hills on which it stood,
To seek strange Lands, or rove upon the Flood.

But when the Providence of God had instructed Noah how to build the Ark, for the preservation of himself and his Children from the general Deluge, the Posterity which descended from him, had thereby a Pattern for the making of Ships and other Vessels (perfected in more length of time) time) whereby to make the Waters passable, and maintain a necessary intercourse betwixt Nation and Nation. 'Tis true, the Heathen Writers, which knew not Noah, attribute the invention of Shipping to sundry Men, according to such Informations or Traditions as they had received: Strabo, to Minos King of Crete; Diodorus Siculus, to Neptune, who was therefore called The God of the Seas; and Tibullus, to the People of Tyre, (a Town indeed of great wealth and Traffick, and the most famous Empory of the elder times) saying,

Prima Ratem ventis credere docta Tyrus.

The Tyrians first the Art did find
To make Ships Travel with the Wind.

And questionless the Tyrians and the rest of the Phœnicians, enjoying a large Sea-coast, and many safe and capacious Havens, being in these times most strong at Sea, and making so many fortunate Navigations into most parts of the then known World, might give the Poet some good colour for his affirmation. From the Phœnicians the Egyptians (their next neighbours) might derive the Art of Navigation; tho' being an ingenious People, they did add much to it. For whereas the first Vessels were either made of the body of some great Tree, made hollow by the Art of Man, or else of divers rods or twigs fashioned into a Boat, and covered with the Skins of Beasts, (which we have spoken of before, when we were in Sanguibar, and which are still in use amongst these Americans) the Phœnicians brought them first into strength and form; but the Egyptians added Decks unto them. By Danaus King of Egypt, when he fled from his Brother Rameses, the use of Shipping was first brought amongst the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing the narrow Seas, but on Beams or Rafters tied to one another, Narde primus ab Egypto Danaus advenit; ante enim Ratibus navigabatur, as it is in Pliny: where we may see the true and genuine difference betwixt Ratis and Navis; though now both be used indifferently for all sorts of Shipping. Amongst the Grecians, those of Crete were the ablest Seamen; which gave occasion to Aristotle to call Crete the Lady of the Sea; and to Strabo, to make Minos the Inventor of Ships. In following times the Carthaginians, being a Colony of Tyre, were most considerable in this kind, and by the benefit of their Shipping much distressed the Romans. But so it hapned (as all things do and must concur to God's publick Purposes in the alteration of Estates) that a Tempest separating a Quinqueremis, or Gally of five banks of Oars, from the rest of the Carthaginian Fleet, cast it on Shore of Italy; by which accident the Romans learning the Art of Shipwrights, soon became Masters of the Sea. That France and Spain were taught the use of Shipping by the Greeks and Phœnicians, is a thing past questioning; Marseilles in the one being a Phœcean, and Cades in the other a Tirian Colony. As for the Belgians and the Britans, it is probable that they first learnt it of the Romans, (tho' formerly they had some way to transport themselves from one Shore to the other) for Cæsar telleth us of the Belgæ, Ad eos Mercatores minimè commeant, that they were not at all visited by foreign Merchants. And the same Cæsar found the Seas betwixt France and Britain so ill furnished with Vessels, that he was fain to make Ships to transport his Army: Singulari militum studio circiter sexcentas & duodeviginta Navis invenit, as his own words are.

Having thus brought Navigation to the greatest height which it had in those days; let us look back again on the Inventors of particular Vessels, and the Tackle unto them belonging. That the Phœnicians first invented open Vessels, and the Egyptians Ships with Decks, hath been said before, and unto them also is referred the Invention of Gallies, with two banks of Oars upon a side; which kind of Vessels grew so large in the course of time, that Ptolemy Philopater is said to have made a Gally of Fifty Banks. Great Ships of Burthen called Circerus, we owe to the Cypriots; Cock boats, or Skiffs (Scaphas) to the Illyrians, or Lyburnians; Brigantines, (Celoces) to the Rhodians; and Frigats or light Barks, (Lembos) unto the Cyrenians. The Phæli, and Pamphyli (which we may render Men of War) were the Invention of the Pamphylians, and the Inhabitants of Phæli, a Town of Lycia, in Asia Minor. As for Tackle, the Bæotians invented the Oar; Dædalus, and his Son Icarus, the Masts and Sails: which gave occasion to the Poets to feign, that flying out of Crete, they made Wings to their Bodies; and that Icarus soaring too high, melted the Wax which fastened his Wings unto his Shoulders, and thereby perished: the Truth being, that presuming too much on this new Invention, he ran himself upon a Rock, and was cast away. For Hippagines, Vessels for Transporting of Horse, we are indebted to the Salimanians; for Grapling hooks, to Anacharsis; for Anchors to the Tuscans; and for the Rudder, Helm, or Art of Steering, to Tiphys, the chief Pilot in the famous Argo, who noting, that a Kite when she flew, guided her whole Body by her Tail, effected that in the devices of Art, which he had observed in the Works of Nature. By these helps some great Voyages were performed in the elder times; the greatest, those of Jason, Ulysses, and Alexander, with the Fleets of Solomon and the Egyptian Kings. Of these, Jason and his Companions sailed in the Ship called Argo, through the Euxine Sea, and part of the Mediterranean; Ulysses, through the Mediterranean only; small Galleys, if compared with the Ocean. Alexander's Journey, so famous, and accounted then so hazardous, was but sailing down the River Indus, and four hundred Furlongs into the Ocean. And for the Fleets of Solomon, and the Kings of Egypt, it is very apparent that they went with great leisure, and crawled close the Shore-side: otherwise it had been impossible to have consumed three whole Years in going from Ezion-Geber into India, and returning again; which was the usual times of these Voyages, as appeareth in 1 Kings 10. 22. After the fall of the Roman Monarchy, the most potent States by Sea in the Mediterranean were the Genoese and Venetians; in the Ocean, the English and the Hanse Towns, neither of which attempted any great Discoveries.

But in the year 1300, one Flavio of Malphi in the Realm of Naples found out the Compass, or Pyxis Nautica, consisting of 8 Winds only, the four principal, and four collateral: and not long after, the People of Bruges and Antwerp perfected this excellent invention, adding 24 other subordinate Winds or Points. By means of this excellent Instrument, and withal, by the good success of Columbus, the Portugals Eastward, the Spaniards Westward, and the English Northward, have made many glorious and fortunate Expeditions: which had been utterly impossible to have been performed, and had been foolishly undertaken when that Help was wanting. I know there hath been much pains taken by some Learned Men to prove the use of the Mariner's Compass to be far more Ancient than is now commonly pretended. Fuller, a very learned and industrious Man, but better skilled in the Hebrew Tongue than the Philology of the Greeks and Latines, will have it known to Solomon, and by him taught unto the Tyrians and Phœnicians (the most famous Sea-men of old times:) but he brings no Argument of weight to make good the Cause. Nor is it possible that such an excellent Invention, so beneficial to the common Good of all Mankind, should have been forgotten and discontinued for the space of more than 2000 Years, if ever the Tyrians and Phœnicians had been Masters of it, who could not possibly conceal it (had they been so minded) from the common Mariners, or they not have communicated municated it for Gain, or desire of Glory, to the Greeks and Romans, under whom successively they lived. As little moment do I find in some other Arguments; as that the Lapis Heraclius of the Ancient Writers, or the Verforia of Plautus, should be by them intended of the Mariner's Compass. For plainly the Verforia of Plautus is no other than that piece of Tackle which our Mariners now call the Bolin; by which they use to turn their Sails, and fit them to the change of every Wind. And so much doth appear by the Poet himself, in the Comedy which he calls Mercator, saying, Hinc ventus nunc secundus est, cape modo Verforiam. So called from Verfo, to turn often, or from Verfum, the first Supine of Verto: Whence Velum vertere is a common Phrase amongst the Latins, used for the shifting of the Sail as the Wind doth vary. As for the Load stone, it is called indeed Heraclius Lapis, Ἡράκλειος λίθος by the Greeks: not because Hercules Tirus whom the Phœnicians invocated when they were at Sea, had first found out the virtue of it, as our Fuller thinketh, but because first found near Heraclea, a City of Lydia; Ἡράκλειον δ' ἔπος ἀπὸ Ἡρακλείου τὸ ἐν Λυδίᾳ πόλις, saith Hesychius, the old Grammarian. Called for the same reason Magnes, by the Writers both Greek and Latine, because first found in the Territory of Magnesia a City of Lydia also, whereof Heraclea was a part. So Suidas telleth us of the Greeks, Ἡράκλειον λίθον πνέει τὸ Μαγνησίαν ἀπέδωσαν, διὰ τὸ τὸ Ἡράκλειον τὸ Μαγνησίας εἶναι, Heracium Lapidem quidam Magnesiam rediderunt, quia Heraclea pars est Magnesiæ. Called for the very same reason Lydius Lapis also, but by them known only as a Touchstone. Thus old Lucretius for the Latins.

Quem Magneta vocant patrio de nomine Graii, Magnetum quia sit patriis de finibus ortus.

Which Stone the Greeks do Magnes name,
Because it from Magnesia came.

But I have rambled farther than I did intend, drawn by the virtue of the Load stone too much out of my way. It is time now to return again into America, where the Spaniards at their first arrival found the People without all manner of Apparel, not skilled in Agriculture; making their Bread either of a Plant called Matze, or a kind of Root called Jucca; a Root wherein is a venomous Liquor, not inferior to the most deadly Poisons; but having first squeezed out this juice, and after dried and prepared the Root, they made their Bread of it. They worshipped the Devilish Spirits, whom they called Zemes; in remembrance of whom they kept certain Images made of Cotton wool, like our Childrens Babies; to which they did great Reverence, as supposing the Spirit of the Zemes to be in them: and to blind them the more, the Devil would cause these Puppets to seem to move, and to make a noise. They stood also in so great fear of them, that they durst not displease them: for if their Wills were not fulfilled, the Devil strait executed vengeance upon some of their Children; so holding this insatuated People in perpetual Thralldom. So ignorant they were of all things which they had not seen, that they thought the Christians to be Immortal: wondering exceedingly at the Sails, Masts, and Tacklings of their Ships; themselves knowing no Ships or other Vessels, but huge Troughs made of some great bodied Tree. But this Opinion of the Christians Immortality (in the sense they meant it) did not long continue, for having taken some of them, they held their Heads under the Water till they had quite choaked them; by which they knew them to be mortal, like other Men. Quite destitute of all good Learning, they reckoned their time by a confused Observation of the course of the Moon: and strangely admired to see the Spaniards know the Health and Affairs of one another, only by reading of a Letter. Of a plain and honest nature, for the most part they were found to be; loving and kind in their Entertainments, and apt to do good Offices, both private and publick, according to their Understandings: encouraged thereunto by an opinion which they had, that beyond some certain Hill (but they knew not where) those which lived honestly and justly, or offered up their Lives in defence of their Country, should find a place of everlasting Peace and Happiness. So natural is the knowledge of the Souls Immortality, and of some Ubi for the future Reception of it, that we find some Tract or other of it in most barbarous Nations. And as for Gold and Silver, which the new come Christians so Adored, they esteemed them no otherwise than as dross: though many times they Adorned themselves therewith for the colour's sake: as they did also with Shells, Feathers, and the like fine Gew-gaws.

Of Complexion, most of these Americans were reasonably Fair and Clear, little inclining unto Blackness: notwithstanding that a great part of this Country lieth under the same parallel with Ethiopia, Lybia, and the Land of Negroes. So that the extraordinary heat of the Sun is not (as some imagine) the cause of that Blackness, though accidentally it may turn the Skin into such a colour; as we see in many Country Lasses, even in colder Climates, whose Faces are continually exposed to the Sun and Weather. Others more Wise in their own Conceits, (but in no bodies else) will have the natural Seed of the Africans to be Black of Colour; contrary both to Sense and Reason, Experience and true natural Philosophy being both against it. And some will have this Blackness laid as a Curse on Cham, (from whose Posterity the African Nations do derive themselves) because, forsooth, he had carnal knowledge of his Wife when they were in the Ark: a Fancy as ridiculous as the other false. So that we must refer it wholly to God's secret pleasure; though possibly enough the Curse of God on Cham and on his Posterity (though for some cause unknown to us) hath an Influence on it.

Touching the Original of this People, it is most probable that they descend from the Tartars; for which there are some Arguments of special weight. For first, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe; as having no remainders of the Arts, Learning and Civilities of it. And Secondly, that they came not from Asiick; in regard they have no Black men amongst them, except some few which dwell on the Sea-Coasts over against Guinea in the Land of the Negroes, from whence they are supposed to have been brought hither by some Tempest or other. Thirdly, that they have not the least token or shew of the Arts and Industry of China, India, or any civil Region on that side of Asia. The affirmative Arguments prove first, That they came from Asia, next in particular from Tartary. That they came out of Asia, is more than manifest, in that the West side of the Country towards Asia, is far more populous then the East towards Europe: of which there can be no other reason assigned, than that these parts were first inhabited, and that from hence the rest was Peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this People, and the particularities thereof, their Incivility and barbarous qualities, tell us that they are most like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the West side of America, if it be not Continent with Tartary is yet disjoyned by a very small Streight, as may be perceived by all our Maps and Charts, as also in the Description of these Countries: so that there is thence into these Countries a very quick and easie passage. And fourthly, The People of Quivira, which of all the Provinces of America, is the nearest unto Tartary, are said to follow, in the whole course of their Life, the Seasons and best Pasturing of their Cattel, just like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes: an evident Argument of their Original Descent.

But from what Root soever they did first descend, certain it is, that they had settled here many Ages since, and overspread all the parts and quarters of this spacious Continent; there being no place which the Spaniards, or any other Adventurers, found desolate or waste, and without Inhabitants.

Inhabitants. But their numbers are much diminished since these late Discoveries; the Spaniards behaving themselves most inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked People, killing them up like Sheep appointed for the Slaughter, or otherwise consuming them in their Mines and Works of Drudgery. And had not Charles the Fifth ordained with most Christian Prudence, that the Natives should not be compelled to work in the Mines against their Will, but that the Spaniards should provide themselves of Slaves elsewhere; the Natives in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Christianity and the Gospel. For so exceeding barbarous and bloody were they at their first coming thither, that Hutbny, a Nobleman amongst them, being persuaded to embrace the Christian Faith, demanded first what he should get by being of that Religion? and was answered, That he should get Heaven, and the Joys thereof: Then would he know what place was destinate to such as died unbaptized; and was answered, That they went to Hell, and the torments of it. Finally, asking unto which of these two places the Spaniards went, and being told they went to Heaven, he renounced his Baptism: protesting that he would rather go to Hell with the Unbaptized, than to live in Heaven with so cruel a People. The rest were driven unto the Font, like so many Horses to the watering place, and received into the Church of Christ without any Instruction: insomuch, that one old Frier (as himself confessed to Charles the Fifth) had Christened 70000 of them, and another of that rank 300000; never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Christian Faith, or points of Religious Conversation, (except it were to be obedient to their Pastors and Teachers.) Yet here I must confess, (for I am loth to defraud any Man of his due) there hath been made a great improvement of Christianity: the number of Christians in this Country being thought by some Learned Men of the Church of Rome, to equal all those of the Latine Churches in Europe. And though perhaps constrained at first unto it as a new Religion, and of a stricter Rule than that which before they had; yet by long time and Education it is now grown more plausible and familiar to them. The Church hereof is governed by the four Archbishops of 1. Mexico. 2. Lima, 3. S. Foy. and 4. Dominico, who have under them 25 Suffragan Bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When this new World came first acquainted with the Old, Isabel Queen of Castile would not permit any of her Husband Ferdinando's Subjects to be planted here, viz. Aragonians or Valentinians; but licensed the Castilians, Andalusians, Biscainers, and the rest of her own People only, envying the Wealth hereof to the rest. When she was dead, Ferdinando Licensed generally all the Spaniards, excluding only the Portugals. But such a rich Prize could not so warily be fenced, but that the Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low Country-men have laid in their own Barns part of the Spaniard's Harvest; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of so wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any Rival or Competitor the Possession (I cannot say the Love) of a Country so abundantly fruitful. For though some of the Kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East-Indies as their Mistress only, in whose favour they could patiently enough endure a Rival; but esteemed America as their Wife, in whose Love they could not brook a Competitor without a foul Dishonour: yet by his leave, (or without it rather) some of his Neighbours have made bold with his Wife in these later times, though in the Affections of his Mistress they have greater Interest. But these Attempts of the English and Hollanders have been an occasion of great strength to the whole Country. For whereas in our first Wars with Spain, in Queen Elizabeth's time, our private Adventurers found the Sea-coasts almost naked of Defence, and thereupon made many a rich and prosperous Voyage to these parts: the Spaniards, upon sight of that weakness and disadvantage, so strongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the Reign of that Queen we were not able to accomplish that with great and Publick Forces, which before had been performed by small and Private. Which caused our Captains and Adventurers, failing oftentimes in their Designs upon the Continent, to take up their Market on the Seas in the return of Spanish Navies, as they yet do.

This new World is very fruitful of Spices, Fruits, and such Creatures which the Old World never knew; stocked with such store of Kine and Bulls, (brought hither out of Europe since the first Discovery) that the Spaniards kill Thousands of them yearly for their Tallow and Hides only; blest with such abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines more Gold than Earth: a Metal which the Americans not regarding it, greedily exchanged for Hammers, Knives, Axes, and the like Tools of Iron; for before they were wont to make their Canoes or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of Fire. Other particularities shall be specified in the particular Descriptions of the several Countries. I shall now only take a brief view of such of their Beasts and Fowls as either this Old World did not know, or knew not in such shapes and qualities as are there presented. Their Lions less in greatness than those in Africa, are said to be of colour gray, and so nimble as to climb Trees; their Dogs snouted like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logicians call Proprium quarto modo, for they could not Bark; their Hogs with Talons sharp as Razors, and the Navil of their Bodies on the ridge of their Backs: their Stags and Deer without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not only profitable, as with us, for Food and Raiment, but accustomed to the carrying of Burthens, some of 150 pound weight. Amongst such strong Beasts as this Old World knew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whose name I find not) whose fore-part resembleth a Fox, the hinder-part an Ape, except the Feet only, which are like a Man's: beneath her Belly a receptacle like a Purse, where she keeps her young till they be able to shift for themselves; never coming thence but when they Suck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a Barbed Horse, seeming to be Armed all over, and that with artificial (rather than natural) Plates, which do shut and open. The Vicugue resembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable; of the Fleece whereof they make Rugs, Coverings, and Stuffs; and in the Belly find the Bezoar, sometimes two or three, a sovereign Antidote against Poisons, and venemous Diseases. A kind of Hare, resembling a Want in his Feet, and a Cat in his Tail; under whose Chin nature hath fastned a little Bag, which she hath also taught him to use as a Store-house; for in this, having filled his Belly, he preserveth the remnant of his Provision. The Pigritia, a little Beast, (not so named for nought) which in fourteen Days cannot go so far as a Man may easily throw a Stone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in such variety of Colours, that the Indians will perfectly represent in Feathers whatsoever they see drawn with Pencils: insomuch as a Figure of St. Francis made of Feathers was presented to Pope Sixtus Quintus; whose Eye could not discern them to be natural Colours, but thought them Pencil-work, till he made tryal with his Fingers. One called the Timinejo, of all Colours, so little, that it seems no bigger than a Bee or Butter-fly, the Mouth thereof no bigger than the Eye of a Needle, yet yieldeth not to the Nightingale in the sweetness of its Note and Musick; the Bird and Nest, put into Gold Scales not weighing above 24 Grains, yet beautified with Feathers of so many Colours, especially in the Neck and Breast, that the Indians make great use of them in their Feather-pictures. Others as big as these are little. The Condors of such strength and greatness, that they will fall upon a Sheep or Calf, open it and eat it. Like Miracles of Nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto natural History than to this Discourse, and many Medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the consideration of the learned Herbalists. I am too much a stranger to be a Physician, and therefore will not deal in such things as are out of my Element. Yet somewhat of this kind we may chance to meet with in the Description and Survey of the several Provinces into which this New World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninsulas; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, supposed (for the most Northern parts of it are not yet discovered) to contain 13200 Miles in compass. That towards the South hath the name of Peruana, from the great Country of Peru the Circumnavigation whereof is reckoned to be 17000 Italian Miles. The Isthmus which joineth these two together is very long, but narrow; in some places not above twelve Miles from Sea to Sea, in many not above seventeen. By the Spaniards it is called the Streight of Darien, from a River of that name called Peruana near unto the Isthmus; and is so small a Ligament for so great a Body, that some have thought of turning these two Peninsulas into perfect Islands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Council of Spain, the cutting of a Navigable Canal through this small Isthmus, to shorten their common Voyages to China and the Moluccas. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly, because if he should employ the Americans in the work, he should lose those few of them which his People have suffered to live, partly, because the Slaves which they yearly buy out of Africa do but suffice for the Mines and Sugar-houses; but principally, lest the passage by the Cape of Good Hope being left, those Seas might become a Receptacle of Pirates. Which doubtless was a very prudent and politic Consideration. Many times I have read of the like Attempts begun, but never of any finished. Sesostris King of Egypt, Darius of Persia, one of the Ptolemies, and a late capricious Portugal had the like Plot, to make a Passage from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean. So had Cæsar, Caligula, and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Corinthian Isthmus. Another of the same nature had Charles the Great, to let the Rhene into the Danow: the like had Lucius Verus, to join the Rhene and the Rhous: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicanor also, King of Syria, intended to have made a Chanel from the Caspian to the Euxine Sea, an impossible project. But neither he nor any of the rest could finish these works: God, it seemeth, being not pleased with such proud and haughty Enterprizes. And yet perhaps the want of Treasure hath not been the least cause why the like Projects have not proceeded: besides the dreadful Noises and Apparitions, which (as we have already said) continually affrighted the Workmen.

Not less observable than this great, but unsuccessful Design of cutting a passage through the Isthmus, from one Sea to the other, was that notable, but like successless Attempt of Juan Ovelando, an adventurous Spaniard, in a passage over it by Land. This Man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, arriving in a small Bark with 20 of his Companions, a little above Norwich Point, the chiefest Town of all the Arucas, drew his Ship on Land, covered it with Boulds, and marched over the Land with his Company, guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinnace, entred the South Sea, went to the Ill of Trinidad, where he stayed ten Days; intercepted in two Spanish Ships (who feared no Enemy on that side) 60000 pound weight of Gold, 120000 pound weight in bars of Silver, and returned in safety to the Land. And so by the mutiny of some of his own company, he neither returned into his own Country, nor unto his Ship: yet it is an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other, and by the Spanish Writers Recorded with much Admiration.

But to return to the Division of this Country, and the two main parts thereof which this Strait united; Mexicana, or the Northern Peninsula, may be most properly divided into the Continent, and Islands: the Continent again into the several Provinces of 1. Yucatan, 2. Nova Francia, 3. Virginia, 4. Florida, 5. Californy, 6. Nova Galicia, 7. Nova Hispania, 8. Guatemala; each of them branched into many Subdivisions and lesser Territories. Peruana, or the Southern Peninsula, taking in some part of the Isthmus, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of 1. Castilla Aurea, 2. Nova Granada, 3. Peru, 4. Chile, 5. Paraguay, 6. Brasil, 7. Guiana, and 8. Paria, with their several Members, Parts, and particular Regions. The Islands which belong to both, dispersed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mar del Zur; where there is not any one of Note, but 1. Those called Los Ladrones, and 2. The Islands of Salomon: or in the Northern Ocean, or Mar del Norte, reduced unto, 3. the Caribes, 4. Porto Rico, 5. Hippaniola, 6. Cuba, and 7. Jamaica: in the Survey of which Particulars we will begin with those which lie on the North-East of this great Continent, not possessed by the Spaniards; and passing through the Plantations of such other Nations as have any footing in the same, come by degrees to the Estates of the King of Spain, that we may lay them all together without interruption: beginning with Estotiland, the most Northern Part, and that which (as some say) was discovered first.

O F ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend those Regions of Mexicana which lie most towards the North and East, hath on the East the main Ocean; on the South, Canada, or Nova Francia; on the West, some unknown Tract not yet discovered; and on the North, a Bay or Inlet of the Sea, called Hudson's Streights, and called so from Henry Hudson an English Man, who by this way endeavoured to find out a more commodious and quick passage to Cathay and China than had been formerly discovered. It comprehends, 1. Estotiland, specially so called, 2. Terra Corterialis, 3. Newfoundland, and 4. the Isles of Bacalaes.

1. And first ESTOTILAND, specially so called, is the most Northern Region on the East side of America, lying betwixt Hudson's Streights on the North, and Terra Corterialis on the South. This is a part of Canada, and is now commonly called New Britain, and Terra Laboratoris. The Soil, sufficiently enriched with natural Endowments, is said to have in it Mines of Gold, and other Metals; but I doubt it lyeth too much North for Gold, whatsoever it may do for Brass and Iron. The People rude and void of goodness; naked, notwithstanding the extreme cold of the Country; not having either the wit, or the care, to cover their Bodies with the Skins of those Beasts which they kill by Hunting, though their Bellies teach them to keep life by the Flesh thereof: said by the first Discoverers to sow Corn, to make Beer, or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own with which they traded into Greenland; as also to have many Cities and Castles, some Temples consecrated to their Idols, where they first sacrificed Men, and after eat them. The Language which they speak is expressed in Characters of their own; but some knowledge of the Latin Tongue there hath been amongst them, and Latin Books in the Library of one of their Kings, understood by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Country by the first Discoverers, who were certain Fishermen of Friesland, cast by a Tempest on this coast about the year 1350. almost 200 Years before Columbus his Discovery. Six of them only got on Land, where all died save one; who after a long wandering from one Prince's Court to another, found means to return into his own Country: the King whereof, called Zichuni, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the further Discovery and Conquest of it. Animated thereunto by the opportune coming of Nicolo and Antonio Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of Venice, who desiring to see the Fashions of the World, furnished a Ship at their own Charges, and passing the Straits of Gibraltar held their course Northward, with an intent to see England and Flanders. But driven by Tempest on this Island, Ann. 1380, they were kindly welcomed by the King, then newly prosperous in a War against those of Norway; who liked Nicolo so well, that he gave him a command in his Navy, and under his good conduct won many Islands, discovered Greenland, and provided for the Conquest of Estotiland also. But Nicolo in the mean time dying, the business was pursued by his Brother Antonio, the King in Person making one in the Undertaking; who liked the Country so well, being once possessed of it, that he built a City in it, and there determining to spend the rest of his days, sent back Antonio unto Friesland, with the most of his People.

This is the substance of the Story of the first Discovery, published long since by one Francisco Marcellino, out of the Letters of the Zeni: which had they been considered of as they might have been, we had not so long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the world. But whether it were that their Reports were esteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Discovery; there was nothing done in pursuance of it: Zichuni never going back to his own Country, and Friesland not long after conquered by the Kings of Norway. So that the knowledge of it was quite lost again, till these later days. Joh. Skalen, a Poleman, in the year 1456. about 86 years after the first Discovery, sailing past Norway, Greenland, and Friesland, and entering into the Streights beyond the Arctic Circle, arrived at this Country. Hofman. Said, in the Letters of the Zeni, to be well stored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds, which they found there for their refreshing; the Haven where they landed to be called Cape Trin; the People to be of small stature, fearful, and to hide themselves in Caves at the sight of the Frieslanders: that there was a Mountain always burning, or casting smoke; together with a certain Spring, whence issued a water as black as Pitch, but no such Cities, Ports, and Temples, as the Fishermen spake of, are now to be found. The Country West from Friesland 1000 miles. This Relation seems altogether fabulous, tho' something of it may possibly be true; but there hath not of late been any Foot steps of Learning or Arts found in these parts of America. Nor is it at all probable they were ever cultivated, or that in those early times there was a Voyage made to them.

To give you the Face of it as it stands at the present, it is said to be well cultivated, fruitful of all Necessaries for the life of Man, and rich in Metals, but extreme cold; watered with four Rivers, which rising out of an high Mountain in the midst of the Country, disperse themselves over all parts of it. The people said to be more ingenious; of better judgments, and more skilled in most Mechanick Arts, than the rest of the Americans were at the first Discovery; which argueth some more Civil people to have been formerly amongst them. Their Garments of the Skins of Beasts, or Sea Calves, with which also they covered the out side of their Boats, to keep out the Water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whether the name of Cape Trin be still remaining, I am not able to discover; this Country lying still for the most part hidden in a Northern Mist. All we can say is, that some English names have been imposed of late on some Capes and Promontories lying on the Northern Shores hereof towards Hudson's Streights, by Hudson and such others of the English Nation who pursued that Enterprize. Of which sort are Prince Henry's Boreland, towards the East, almost at the entries of those Streights; and then proceeding towards the West, Cape Charles, Kings Parland; and last of all Cape Walsingham, at the end thereof where these Streights open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudson's Bay. But of these more particularly in another Place, where we endeavour the Discovery of such parts of the World as are yet unknown, and so within the compass of a Terra Incognita.

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North Estotiland; on the South Canada, or New-France. So called from Casspar Corterialis; who in the year 1500 left left his name unto it. It is called also Terra di Laboro-doro, both from the pains required of the Husbandman, and the great Recompence which it gives him: in the same sense as Campania in the Realm of Naples is named Terra di Lavoro. By the French, who succeeded in the Possession hereof after the Spaniard had forsook it, it was called New Bretagne, with reference to Bretagne in France, their own natural Country.

The people, at the first coming of Cortereal, were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, swift of Foot, and very good Archers: their cloathing of Beasts skins; their Habitations Caves, or some sorry Cottages; their Religion Paganism, or none; their Directions South saying. Not so forgetful of the Law which Nature had Planted in them, as not to know the necessary use of marriage; but extremely jealous. Better conditioned at the Present than in former times, by their near neighbourhood to the French, and commerce with Foreigners: affirmed to be very well disposed, to feed most generally on fish, and to adorn themselves with Bracelets of Brass, or Silver. Their chief Towns, 1. Brest, 2. Santa Anna, 3. Cape Marzo; of which, little memorable.

The Country first discovered by Sebastian Cabot, the Son of Joh. Cabot, before mentioned: who in the year 1497. at the Charges and Encouragement of King Henry 7. setting sail from Bristol, first made the Discovery of these parts as far as to the Latitude of 67 and an half, (which brings Estotiland within the compass also of his Discoveries.) The Land which he first saw he called Prima Vista; an Island lying before it he called S. John's, because discovered on the day of S. John Baptist. They found upon the Country plenty of White Bears, Stags greater than ours, Seal-fishes of a yard long, and such store of Cod-fish (which the Inhabitants called Baccalaos) that their multitudes sometimes stayed his Ships: hence the occasion of their name. Returning home, he found great Preparations for War in Scotland; so that nothing else was done in this Discovery by the English Nation. But three years after, Cyprian Cortereal a Portuguese, setting sail from Lisbon, fell upon these parts of Cabot's Discoveries, which since bear his name; from whence he brought the piece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanship, left there most probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of; drowned in the Sea, or slain by the Savages on the Land as was his Brother Michal in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French, having planted in Canada, or Nova Francia, cast an eye upon it; who gave the name of Brest to a Town hereof, (according to the name of a noted port in Little Bretagne;) but whether they settled any Colony in it, or only did resort unto it in the way of Trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEUF OUNDLAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latins call it) is a great Island, lying on the South of Corterialis, from which parted by a Frith, or Streight, called Golfe des Casseaux. So called from the late discovery of it, when discovered first, though it be some scores of years ago: as Wickham's Colledge in Oxford hath the name of New Colledge, though founded divers years past; because it was the Newell when that Name was given.

The dimensions of the Country I have no where met with: But for the quality hereof, it is said to be better inhabited in the North-parts, than in the South; though the South the fitter of the two for Habitation. Furnished upon the Sea-Coasts with abundance of Cod-fish, as also with Herrings, Salmonis, Thornbacks, Singles, Oysters, and Muscles, with Pearls in them. Within the Land a goodly Country, naturally beautified with Roses, flowers with Pease, planted with stately Trees, and otherwise diversified both for Pleasure and Profit: the Air hereof never very extravagant, more Temperate in the depth of Winter than with us in England, the Brooks being never so frozen over, that the Ice is able to bear a Dog; and those little frosts but seldom holding three Nights together. The People of reasonable Stature; full-eyed, broad-faced, but beardless, their Faces coloured with Oker; their Houses, poles set round meeting together in the top, and covered over with Skins, an Hearth, or Fire place in the midst: their Boats of Bark, twenty Foot long and four in breadth, not weighing above 100 Pounds weight; every of which will carry four Men, and is by them carried to all the places of their Removes.

Places of most Importance in it, are the several Havens (of which it is conceived to have more, and more commodious, than any one Island of the World; but itself of it;) not beautified with Towns or Villages, but yielding very safe stations to the greatest Ships. The chief whereof, 1. Ramisa, or Rignate, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Ray, the South-east Angle of the Island: of much resort for Fishing, from several Countreys. 2. Portus Ramisus, or Fish Haven, three Miles North of the other; capable of great Ships, and bearing into the main Land above 20 Miles: fronts in the Latitude of 40, and 40 Minutes. 3. Thomby, by the Portuguese named Sancti Michaelis. 4. Trinity Bay, on the North of Cape S. Michael, by the Portuguese called Sancti Michaelis: a large Bay, the most commodious and narrow place; yet safe within, and of very good Anchorage. 5. B. Bay, the name of a Port and promontory. 6. H. Bay, or Bay Blanche, (as the Latins call it) safe and capacious, on the North of the Promontory of S. John. Betwixt which and Cape de Ray, on the South-east Angle of the Island, is no Port of Note. 7. On the South side of the Island, and the West of Cape de Ray, is 8. Port Ingressus, 8. Portus Ingressus, and 9. Portus Ingressus (or the Niceus Haven;) and on the West side, having doubled the Cape de Ray, in the South-west Angle of the Island, there is 10. S. George's Bay: All of them safe, capacious, and of great resort. The Western side of Newfoundland, and a part of the South, is now in the Possession of the English, who have made Settlements upon it, and built some Ports to defend them from the Inplots of their Enemies. These Plantations were begun by Sr. George Calvert, Kt. Principal Secretary of State, and afterwards Lord Baltimore, who obtained A Patent in 1623. for a part of this Island, by the Name of the Province of Mendocia; and afterwards he transported himself and Family thither, and settled a Plantation there, building a stately House and Fort at Perry's Point, from whom, at his Death, it descended to Col. Lord Baltimore, who was reinvested in it by Charles the II. after his Restoration. There are many other Settlements besides this along the Coast, but under what Form of Government, is not known to me. The English live altogether by Fishing, which they sell to those that come thither, and have all other Necessaries in Exchange for their Fish. The Country next the Shore is generally Barren and Rocky; and they having but few hands as yet, they can buy their Corn of the New England Men cheaper than they can raise it themselves: They that have settled here, being mostly Men, and wanting Women, have not as yet much increased the Number of the people; so that only the Shore is inhabited, and a few Cattle fed on the Land for their use; but doubtless higher up into the Land there is better and more fruitful Lands, and a great Advantage might be made of it, if a good Government were sent thither to Unite the people for their own Defence, and settle Plantations in the Inland Parts of the Island. On the South West part of it, the French have some Settlements Towards Canada, which were attempted by the English, but without any good Success, since the present War began; about 1690. The well settling this Island in our hands would be a thing of mighty Consequence to the British Monarchy, and our Western Plantations much of the Felicity of them depending pending on the preserving this Fishery, without which they can hardly subsist. The most that have of late settled here are broken Seamen, as I am informed, who live here out of pure necessity, and take no care for a Posterity, or to plant or build, or any way Improve the Country: Besides, it is probable, the Lord Barltimore, when he took his Patent for Mary-land, left this Island, though I cannot affirm it is so.

4. Before the Island, at the distance of 25 Leagues from Cape de Raye, lyeth a long bank or ridge of Ground, extended in length many hundred Leagues, in breadth 24 Leagues where broadest, in other places but sixteen; and all about it certain Islands, which Cabot by one common name called BACALAO S, (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitude of Cod-fish (by the Natives called Bacalaos) which swarmed hereabouts so numerous, that they hindred the passage of his Ships, as before was noted, and lay in such Shoals upon the coasts, that the Bears caught them with their Claws, and drew them on Land. The Governmet at that time by Kings, before whom the people in the most formal expressions of Duty and Reverence used to rub their Noses, or stroke their Foreheads: which if the King observed, or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had so adored him, he turned his head to his left Shoulder, as a mark of Favour.

The first Discoverers of this Country (but not known then to be an Island) were the two Cabots, John and his Son Sebastian, employed herein by Henry the 7. 1497. as before was noted. The business being laid aside at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Eliot two of Bristol; who taking a more perfect view of it than was took by the Cabots, ascribed to themselves the Discovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the Enterprize, which was done Anno 1527, but with ill success. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Britains of France had resorted to it, and changed the names which by the English had been given to the Bays and Promontories. But the English would not so relinquish their pretensions to the premier Seisin. And therefore in the year 1583, Sir Humphery Gilbert took possession of it in the name of the Queen of England, interdicted all other Nations the use of Fishing, and intended to have settled there an English Colony. But being wrecked in his return, the sending of the Colony was discontinued till the year 1608. when undertook by John Guy a Merchant of Bristol, who most successfully performed it; the Colony so prospering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turneps, Coleworts, of their own sowing, some probability of Metals, a certainty of Sables, Musks, and other precious Commodities, besides their Fishing; though that the great occasion of their settling there. Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fish all about the Coasts, that ordinarily our Men take 200 or 300 of them within four hours space, which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe. The Pease and Wheat that were Sown here by the first Planters, yeilded great Increase, though the Soil is fleet, and at the bottom a meer Rock. It has plenty of Fish Fowl, Deer, Deals, and Cedars. On the West and North sides they found afterwards some barbarous People, which did resemble those of the opposite Country. The length from East to West is 400 miles; from North to South, about the same length. The first Discoverers thought it to be scarce habitable, by reason of the cold. Laet. Hackluit.

O F

CANADA.

CANADA is bounded on the North with Corterialis; on the South, with New-England; on the East, with the Main Ocean: the Countreys lying on the West either not yet discovered, or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greatest, not of this Province only, but of all this Peninsula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiscovered parts of this Northern Tract: sometimes enlarged into great Lakes, and presently reduced to a narrower Chanel, with many great Windings and Reaches in it. Having embosomed almost all the rest of the Rivers of this Country, it emptieth it self into the Great Bay of S. Lawrence, over against the Isle of Assumption, being at the Mouth 40 Leagues in breadth, and 150 Fathom deep. There is to the West of Virginia, beyond the Apalachean Mountains, a vast lake of many Leagues in compass, out of which spring this great River which runeth towards the North, and Another which runeth to the South; and the French say it falls into the Gulf of Mexico, through Florida.

It is also called Nova Francia, from the French, who following the Tract of Cabot and Corterialis, made a further Discovery of these parts, and planted several Colonies in them. The Business first undertaken by Jacques Cartier, Anno 1534. received here gladly by the Natives with Singing, Dancing, and expressing much sign of Joy: pursued by Monsieur Roberval, sent thither in the year 1542, by King Francis the first, not only to discover the Country, but to plant some part of it, who built there a fair Fortress for his greater safety; followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their several times.

The nature of the Soil, and People, we shall best discover in the several parts of it, each differing from one another, and so not easily conformed to a general Character. Look we now only on the principal Rivers of the whole. 1. Canada, of which before. 2. Pemeganet, or Norumbegue, as some call it, of which more hereafter. 3. Quimbeque, falling into the Ocean as the others do. 4. Ribo S. Johan, ending its course in a large Bay called, Bay Francoise, interposed betwixt Nova Scotia and the rest of this Country. 5. Les Trois Rivières, which rising far North, and passing through two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada. 6. Saguenay, of the same Original, Course, and Fall. A River of so strong a Current, that it suffereth not the Sea to flow up its Chanel; so deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards, and having receiv'd many lesser streams, loseth it self at last, where the other doth.

It containeth in it several Regions, 1. Nova Francia specially so called, 2. Nova Scotia, 3. Norumbegue, and 4. the Isles adjoining.

NOVA

1. NOVA FRANCIA, specially so named, is situate on the South of Cortierialis, and on the North of the great River of Canada, towards the East; but on both sides of it, in the Western and more In-land parts. The Country is naturally full of Stags, Bears, Hares, Martens, and Foxes, whose Flesh the People did eat raw, (till more civilized) having first dried it either in the Smoke or Sun, as they do their Fish. They have also store of Conies, Fowl, and Fish great plenty; one Fish more memorable than the rest, which they call Adunel, whose Body and Head is like that of a Grey-hound. But their greatest Jewels are their Chains of Ejurgme; a Shell-fish of the whitest colour, excellent for the stanching of Blood; which they fashion into Beads and Bracelets, and so wear, or sell them. Not very plentiful of Fruits, or fit for Tillage, yet it breedeth some Corn; of Pulse good plenty. The Air more cold than in other Countries of like height, partly by reason of the greatness of the River, which being wholly of fresh Water, and so large withal, chilleneth the Air on both sides of it; partly because of the abundance of Ice and those hills of Snow which the North-wind paterh over in the way to this Country. The true reason why these Countries are colder than those of Europe in the same Latitude, can be supposed to be only from the Vainness of the Land towards that Quarter, which is the reason why the North-East wind with us is the Coldest, and the North-West with them; the North-East on the contrary, coming to them off the Ocean, is very Temperate; nor have our People in New-England or Newfoundland complained of the Cold after they had built Houses, and provided Necessaries against the hardship of the Winter, which was only grievous to them who first Planted here, when they were destitute of Necessaries.

The People, when the French first discovered them, were very rude and barbarous; few of them furnished with Houses, but removing from one place to another, as their Food decayed; and carrying all their Goods with them (a thing easily done) upon those removes. Such as lived toward the Sea, or the greater Rivers, somewhat better housed. For in the day-time they fish in their Boats, when they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them up side down, sleep under them. As ill Apparelled as Housed, for they went all Naked, except a little piece of Skin before their Privities. Some of them had their Heads quite shaven, excepting one bush of Hair on the top of the Crown, which they suffered to grow to the length of an Horses Tail, tied up with Leather-strings in a knot. Each Man allowed his two or three Wives apiece; and they so constant to their Husband, that they never marry after his death but keep themselves continually in a mourning habit, a Vizard, as it were, made of Grease and Coal-dust, which they spread over all their Bodies. The Women labour more than the Men, both in Fishing and Husbandry; digging the Ground instead of ploughing, with certain pieces of Wood, where they sow their Maiz, (a Plant of which they make their Bread in most parts of America.) Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are most of them at this day: the French and others which have planted in these Northern parts having added little more unto Christianity, than by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died they went immediately to the Stars; from thence conveyed to certain green and pleasant Fields, full of flowers and fruits. Plain Evidence that they believed the Immortality of the Soul, and that there was some place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1. Hochelaga, round in Figure, compassed about with three Course of Timber Ramparts, one within the other; sharp at the top about two Rods high, with one Gate only to give entrance, and that well fortified (in their kind) with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50 great Houses, in the midst of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their Fire on. Each Family retire to their own Room; all things else are possessed in common. Hackl. T. 3. p. 220, 21. Situate far within the Land, about six or seven Leagues from the Banks of the River Canada, in the most pleasant part of the Country; and therefore made the Seat of their King, whom they highly reverenc'd, and carried him on their Shoulders sitting on a Carpet of Skins. 2. Stadac, or Standacne; and 3. Quebecque, which the French call St. Croix, on the Course of the same River also; this last a Colony of the French, and at this time the Capital Plantation they have on the River, most of their other Settlements being ruined by the English, but this defended it self, and in 1693. was in their Hands. 4. Tadonfac, a safe but small Haven, not capable of above 20 Ships, at the mouth of the Saguenay. It is seated upon the Bay of St. Lawrence, where it receives the River Saguenay a 100 miles from Quebec to the South East. 5. France R., a Cattle built by Monsieur Roberval, when he came first into this Country. 6. St. Lewis, designed for a French Colony by Monsieur de Champlain, Anno 1611 but never came to great effect: yet so much Champlain, that by the Undertaking, that he left his name to a great Lake of this Country (full of little Islands, in the Lands of the Uroqueis, inhabiting on the South of the River Canada, into which it emptieth it self at the last.

2. NOVA SCOTIA, containeth that part of the Countries of Canada, or Nova-Francia, which the French call Acadie or Cadie, (being a Peninsula or Denny-Island;) with so much of the main Land as lieth between the River Canada, and the large Bay called Bay-Francoise, from the River of St. Croix upon the West, to the Isle of Assumption on the East. So called by King James, in the Grant of these Countries to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charles, for his approved Fidelity, most deservedly created Earl of Stirling. The Letters Patents of which Donation bear date Anno 1621. What time the French having been ejected of their Holds here by Sir Sam. Argal, Governor of Virginia, had abandoned the South-parts of Canada, and betook themselves more into the North, and the higher parts of the Course of that River. And in pursuance of this Command, the said Sir William Alexander, in the year 1622. sent a Colony hither: and having procured a new Map to be made of the Country, caused the Peninsula, lying on this side of the Bay Francoise, to be called Nova Caledonia; that on the North thereof, to be called Nova Alexandria; giving new names also unto most of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accomplishment of which Business, he obtained also a Patent for the advancing a certain number of Persons to the Hereditary Dignity of Barons, or Knights of Nova Scotia, as we call them commonly, distinguished from others by a Ribon of Orange-Tawny, the Money raised upon which Patent was to be wholly employed towards this Plantation. But being unable with those helps (as certainly Plantations are of too great burthens for a private Person) or willing to employ his Money to more profit, he sold Port-Royal to the French and after discontinued his Endeavours in it.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Port Royal, in Acadie or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay Francoise; once made a Colony of the French, by Monsieur de Monts, Anno 1604. continued with much difficulty till the year 1613. when destroyed by Sir Samuel Argal, then Governor of the English Plantations in Virginia, by reason that the Jesuits, whose Neighbourhood he liked not of, had begun to nest there. Sold since again unto the French, as before is said, by whom still possessed. This was taken by the English, but restored to the French by the Treaty of Breda, in the year 1667. It stands at the bottom of the Bay of France, and has a safe and large Harbour. 2. S. Lukes Bay, by the French called Port au Monton. 3. Gaspe, a noted Port in Nova Alexandria, opposite to the Isle of Assumption. 4. Gachepe, on a fair Bay in the same Coast also.

3. NORUM.

3. NORUMBEGA hath on the South West of it New-Scotland; on the North West of it New-England. The Air is of a good temper, the Soil fruitful, and the People indifferently civil; all of them, as well Men as Women, painting their Faces. The Men are much affected to Hunting, and therefore never give their Daughters to any, unless he be well skill'd in that Game also. The Women here are very Chaste, and so well love their Husbands, that if at any time they chance to be slain, the Widows will neither marry, nor eat flesh, till the Death of their Husbands be revenged. They both dance much; and for nimbleness, sometimes stark naked. The Sea upon the Coasts so shallow, and so full of Sands, that it is very ill sailing all along these Shores. The Towns or Habitations rather, so differently called by the French, Portugals, and Spaniards, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet most have formerly agreed upon Norumbegue, or Amuric, as the Natives call it; said to be a large, populous and well-built Town, and to be situate on a fair and capacious River of the same name also. But later observations tell us, there is no such matter; that the River which the first Relations did intend, is called Pempegouet, neither large nor pleasant; and that the Place by them meant is called Aggancia, so far from being a fair City, that there are only a few Sheds or Cabins, covered with the Barks of Trees, or the Skins of Beasts. Howsoever, I have let it stand on the first reports, it being possible enough that Town might fall into decay, deserted on the coming of so many several Pretenders, and that the Sheds or Cabins which the last Men speak of may be only the remainders of it.

4. Adjoining unto these Countries of Canada, are several Islands, not joined in any common name, but yet deserving some consideration in this place and time. The principal whereof, 1. NATISCOTEC, called the Isle of Assumption, situate in the very mouth of the River, was first discovered by Jaques Cartier, Anno 1534. in length 35 Leagues, seven or eight in breadth. The Island very plain and level, of a fruitful Soil, beautified with Trees of several sorts, replenished with great plenty both of Fowl and Fish, and furnished with convenient Roads, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabited for ought I can find. 2. RAMEE, a frie of little Islands in the great Gulf of St. Lawrence, on the South of Natiscotec, first found out or frequented by the Citizens of St. Malo in Bretagne, Anno 1590. of great resort for the Morse-fishing, used upon the Coasts, which is here so gainful, that a French Bark, in a very little time killed 1500 of them. These Morses (take this by the way) are a kind of Sea-Horses, or Sea-Oxen; with two Teeth of a Foot long, growing downward out of the upper Jaw; sold dearer than Ivory, because esteemed a sovereign Antidote against Poisons. They have also four Feet, no Ears, the Horns about half an Ell in length; the Skin, when dressed twice as thick as that of a Bull; their Flesh, when young, as sweet and tender as Veal. So fat and unctuous, that with the Bellies of five of them, there is made usually an Hog-head of Train-oil, as good as that of the Whale. 3. BRION, a small Island on the South of Ramee, about two leagues in length, and as many in breadth; of a rich Soil, fit for Pasturage, well shaded with tall and lofty Trees; and neighboured by a smaller Island called Isle Blanche, of the like Fertility. 4. BRITON, (Insula Britonum) so named from Jaques Briton a Frenchman, in the time of Francis the First, called also the Island of St. Lawrence, is situate on the South-East of the Isle of Brion; in form Triangular, in compass about 80 Leagues; pleasant and fruitful, though for the most part swelled with Hills. Destitute of Rivers, but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well stored with Shell-fish; and in the midst thereof a great Lake full of little Islands; the Woods replenished with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a Bird called Penguin. Inhabited by the Natives only, though the Portugals did sometimes endeavour a Plantation in it; but finding the Air too cold for them, they again deserted it. The chief Haven is by the English called now Newport; by the French, Port aux Anglois, from the great resort of the English to it, in regard of their Fishing. 5. ISLE DE SABLE, by the French so called, from the Sands which lie high about it; distant from the Briton Isle about 30 Leagues to the South; 15 Leagues in compass, but more long than broad, and of unsafe landing. The planting of it, in regard of the safety of the Place, attempted twice by the French and once by the Portugals; but without success. 6. Others of less note, as Mengo, and Les Isles des Oiseaux, I pass over purposely, there being nothing, or but little to be spoken of them.

So it appears by this Account, that though the French have given the Name of Nova Francia, to all these Countries; yet they never had the honour of the first Discovery, wherein the English and Portuguese had precedency of them: nor are possessed of any considerable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large share; the English Masters of the best Ports, and all the Islands of the Country in the hands of the Savages. Of these some great and powerful Nations over-sway the rest. The chief whereof are the Yaguas, on the North-East of Norumbegue, neighboured by the Ojibaguins, the Alboumequins, and the Nebicrines, the Samiquois, and Etechimins of Accadie and New Alexandria; the Montagnets, and the Antegovantans, on the Banks of the Canada. All of them stout and hardy People, false of their Words, treacherous in their Practices, and merciless in their Revenges. So well acquainted with the Factions and Divisions of Europe, that they know how to make use of one Nation against another; and by that means to keep themselves in their first Estate, without being subject to any. So that the footing which the English, French, or Scots have obtain'd amongst them, serves rather to secure themselves in the way of their Trading, than to entitle them unto any Possession and Command in the Country: the French being shut up in a few weak Ports on the North of the Canada; the Scots pretending only to a Bay or two in the South of Canada; and the English being only Tenants at the Will of the Natives, for such conveniency of Fishing as they have in the adjoining Islands.

This seems to have been the true state of these French Plantations, when our Author wrote about the year 1648. or sooner; but Louis XIV. the present King of France, having wonderfully encreased the French Navigation on the Ocean, (so that they have lately twice Engaged the English and Dutch Fleets united) he set his Heart upon the Newfoundland Fishery, as a Nursery for his young Seamen; and to that end sent plentiful Colonies to Quebecque, and other Places, supplied them largely with Ammunition and Provisions, and sent good Soldiers to command there, who have pushed on their Affairs with that good Success, that they have reduced all the Inhabitants of this Country under their Obedience, or forced them to retire; they have ascended the River of Canada to the great Lakes out of which it springeth, and found another River which falls into the Bay of Mexico; and they have built Forts upon these Rivers and Lakes, and thereby stoppt the Trade our Colonies of New-York and New-England had before with the Natives of Canada, for Beaver and other Furs: And since this War about 1689 or 90. they raised considerable numbers of the Natives, and fell upon our New-England Plantations; but were happily repulled with great loss, and the visit was returned them the next Year by the New-England Men, with an Army by Land and a Fleet by Sea; which had an unprosperous effect by the difficulty of timing their approach; so as to meet there both at once; by which means Quebecque escaped, and the French for the present maintain their Possession. All these Advantages the French gained upon us during our Civil Wars, by the care of Cardinal Mazarin and Monsieur Colbert, which after the Restoration of Charles II. by the Negligence of that Prince, were improved so as to be a terror to our Western Plantations, and at last to England too. The first step to the Redress of which, is, to boat them out of their Plantations in Newfoundland, and then to send a strong Colony Colony or two, well furnished with Ammunition and Necessaries to build Forts and Houses to inhabit in, and to till the Country: And lastly, to send every year a competent Number of light Frigots, to secure the Fishery there, and succour our Planted Colonies.

These Colonies ought not to be such as our Southern were, settled in scattered Houses about the Country; but old Soldiers drawn out of our Armies, and sent under good Commanders, with their Wives and Families to fill the Country, and to raise a Posterity to succeed them, after the manner of the Roman Colonies; and the Country being Cold, and not likely to yield any great encouragement, (though it will doubtless in a short time maintain the Inhabitants, and at last enrich them by their Trade with their Fish) they must at first be sent and be maintained at the Charge of the Crown, which will be a Reward to those that have well served the Crown; and turn at length to the security of England and of our Plantations in America, and bring the French Navigation on the Ocean to an end: And will, after all, be an excellent Nursery of Seamen to Strengthen our Nation at Home and Abroad too.

VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North, Canada; on the South, Florida; on the East, Mare du Nord; the Western boundaries not known or not well discovered. It is now bounded on the South by Carolina, a Plantation taken out of Florida; on the East by the Virginian Ocean; on the North by Mary Land; and on the West by Mountains and a vast Tract of undiscovered Lands; having the Apatatean Mountains on that side, by which it is separated from Canada; in our times much better discovered by the French. Out of these Mountains arise all the Rivers that water Virginia, and have their course towards the East, into the Virginian Ocean, whereas these on the other side fall to the North and South, and so into the Bay of St. Lawrence and the Gulf of Mexico, as the French report. So called in honour of Queen Elizabeth, that Virgin Monarch; when discovered (to any purpose) by Sir Walter Raleigh Anno 1584. By the Natural Inhabitants called Apalchen, from a Town of that Name, one of the Chief in all the Country.

The Inland parts hereof are mountainous and barren, but more healthful; full of thick Woods, a Receptacle for wild Beasts, and wilder Savages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitful; as will appear by the Survey of its several Provinces; premising first, that Virginia in the full Latitude thereof extendeth from the 34 degree, where it joins with Florida, unto the 44. where it quartereth on Norumbegua.

The first Discovery hereof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, Anno 1497. did first entitle the Crown of England to this Country. The Design after seconded by Mr. Hare, bringing thence certain of the petit Kings or Princes hereof, who did Homage to King Henry VIII. then sitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Westminster: but nothing farther done in pursuance of it. And though John Verazzani a Noble Florentine, at the Encouragement and Charge of King Francis the First, Anno 1524. discovered more of the Country than Cabot did; yet the French, too much in love with the Pleasures of France, or intangled in Civil Wars amongst themselves, looked no farther after it: Insomuch, that the Country lying thus neglected, was re-discovered, by the Charges and Direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1584. who sending Master Philip Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow upon this Employment, did by them take possession of it in Queen Elizabeth's Name, in honour of whom he caused it to be called Virginia. He sent thither a Colony, under the Conduct of the Noble Sir Richard Greenville; who not supplied with Necessaries for their Subsistence, returned home again. Sir Francis Drake in the year 1585 came thither, after he had visited St. Iago, St. Domingo, Carthagena, &c. found this Colony placed here in 1584 by Sir Walter Raleigh and then Governed by one Mr. Rudolf Lane, who came away with Deale, the Fleet being dispersed by a Tempest that should have relieved them: They at their return brought Deale into England, which before was never seen in this Island. In the year 1587. a second Colony is sent thither, but as unsuccessful as the first; the Business being undertaken only on a private Purse, not owned as the Interest of the State, or of publick Moment, till the year 1606. For the third Plantation, See Johnstonius, see Laert. p. 62. In the mean time, the North parts of this Country being more perfectly discovered by Captain Bartholomew Gould, Anno 1602. it was again planted in the year 1607. by Sir Jos. P. Smith; and the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to say, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into these three Parts 1. New England, 2. Novum Belgium, 3. Virginia, strictly and specially so called. To which the Isles of the Bermudas shall come in for a Fourth.

NEW ENGLAND hath on the North East Norumbegua; and on the South West, Novum Belgium, now called New York. So called by the Adventurers by whom first planted, not so much because opposite to Nova Zibibion, as some Men conceive, as an intimation of the like adjuncts of Distinction given by the French and Spaniards to Nova Francia, Nova Hispania, Nova Gallia, Nova Granada, and the like. It was discovered by Sebastian Cabot, under English Colours, in 1497. entered upon for the English by Mr. Philip Amadas in 1584. It lies in 40. and 41 degrees of North Latitude, 70 miles upon the Ocean, which affords it plenty of Harbour. The Air is healthful but the Weather very uncertain. It was first begun to be planted in 1606. In 1610. one Robinson an Independent Preacher struck in with the Design, and much promoted that Plantation. In the year 1629. there was a considerable Addition made to this Colony; so that till the year 1636. they flourished, and very much encreased in Buildings and Trade; but this year the Nazaganet Indians, which are the most Warlike and Fierce, began a War upon them, which in the next year was so well revenged by the English, that this whole Horde was destroyed. These Indians in Speech, Shape, Habit, and Manners are so very like the Samoiets, or the North-East Tartars bordering upon Russia, that it cannot be doubted but that they are descended from them; which will give an easie Account of the Origine of the American Nations, if it were a little better enquired into.

The Country situate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41 and 44. equally distant from the Arctick Circle and the Tropick of Cancer; by consequence, naturally of the same degree of heat with France France or Italy. But by reason of the thick Mists which arise from the Seas adjoining, those Heats so moderated, that the Air is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an English body. The Soil not only fruitful of such Commodities as grow there naturally, but also of all sorts of Grain which were brought from England. Great store of Woods and Trees, both for Fuel and Building; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of Salt and Fish upon the Shores; and as for Turkeys, Partridges, Swans, Geese, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeons, such a full variety, as serves not only for Necessity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of most note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many sorts of Fish, some Amber, Flax, Linnen, Iron, Pitch, Masts, Cables, Timber fit for Shipping: in a word, what soever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might at better rates, and with far less trouble, be supplied from hence, at least it we believe the Relations of it, published in the year 1622. This Colony is very strong; and they have built seven great Towns, the chief of which is Boston, which in 1670 had 50 sail of Ships belonging to it. In the Reign of King James the II. they would never submit to any Governour sent from England, but live like a free State. But a Quo Warranto being sent against them in the year 1683. by His late Majesty, they submitted to Henry Cranfield Esq; and in 1686 accepted Sir Edward Andrew, as Governour for King James.

The People for the most part well enough disposed, if not roughly handled; hospitable, and more civil than the rest of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in matters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremonies of the English, at their first settling there, Anno 1608. they would use to say, that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Tanto was an evil Spirit, which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worshipped him for fear. Which notwithstanding, I find not any great increase of Christianity among the Natives: our English Undertakers thinking it sufficient, if they and their houses serve the Lord, without caring what became of the Souls of the wretched People, which hitherto have sate in darkness and the shadow of death, notwithstanding those New Lights which have shined amongst them. And as for those New comers which have planted there, all English, though some immediately out of Holland; I cannot better tell you of what strain they were, than in the words of John de Laet, Novi Orbis lib. 3. cap. 8. where he observeth, Primos hosce Colonos, uti & illos qui postea accesserunt, potissimum aut omnino fuisse ex eorum hominum Secta, quos in Anglia Brownistas & Puritanos vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium superioribus annis se receperunt, & hinc ad socios sunt profecti. They were (saith he) either for the most part, or altogether, of that Sect which in England are called Brownists or Puritans; many of which had formerly betaken themselves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to join with their Brethren in New England. When our Author wrote, it was early days with this Plantation: But since that time they have Translated the Bible into the Language of the Natives, and converted many of them. I wish the Episcopal Clergy in the other Plantations would reflect upon the Drs. Reproach, and Amend as they have done; especially in relation to the Negroes in our own Plantations which might easily be converted to Christianity, (if their Masters pleased.)

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Tamascot, where our Men found Oysters of nine Inches long. 2. Nansick, a River of the Tarentines; one of the chief Nations of this Tract. 3. Sagadahock, of most Note, and deservedly too, a Mile and half broad at the Mouth or Influx, and so upwards for the space of a days journey, where it maketh a large Lake three days journey broad, with six Islands in it; nourished with two large Channels, the one from the North-East, the other from the North-West; each of them rising from a Lake; the least of which being four days journey long, two broad, the other doubleth it. The River which points to the North-West, falls into the River of Canada, 40 German Miles above Quebec. In which place, if a good Garrison were planted in a strong Fort, and well supply'd with Ammunition, it might easily hold a correspondence with New England, by the Lake, and secure the Trade of Furs with the Natives; and also be a curb upon the French Plantations on that River, and without this Caution, they will in time (if they have not already) do the same thing; to the great annoyance and impoverishing of New England. Of less note, 4. Apanawapesk, 5. Rantaffec, 6. Ashmahaga, &c.

The Country on the Sea-side is full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited, insomuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the space of 70 Miles above twenty Havens, some of them capable of 500 or 1000 Sail; most of them sheltered from the fury of Winds and Sea, by the interposition of some Islands, of which about 200 lye upon that Coast. In the space of 70 Miles he reckoned 40 Villages of the Barbarous People; the chief of which, are, 1. Macadacut, 2. Segocket, 3. Panmaquit, 4. Nuconcus, 5. Kennebecque, &c. all being called by the name of some Brook or Water, upon which they were seated. Since added by the English, 1. St. George's Fort, the first Plantation of the English, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagadahock, in a Demi Island, Anno 1607. 2. New Plimouth, seated in a large and capacious Bay; at the first Building (Anno 1620) consisting of Nineteen Families only, but in short time improved to an handsome Town: which as it was the first Town, so it was the Church which was settled there, modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinson's Church in Holland (that notorious Separatist,) and after made a pattern to the rest of these Churches: each Absolute and Independent in it self, without subordination unto any Superiour. For my part, I behold Episcopacy as the Primitive Government of the Church of Christ. But if there were no other Pretenders to it than Presbytery and Independency, I should as soon look for the Scepter and Throne of Christ (as they please to phrase it) in the Coordination of New England, as in the Presbyteries of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3. Bristow, upon the Seaside also, but more North than Plymouth. 4. Barnstable, so called with reference to a noted Sea-Town of that name in Devonshire; as 5. Boston, with like reference to as noted a Sea port in Lincolnshire, which is now the Capital of this whole Plantation, a very large and spacious Town, seated on the Sea shore, at the bottom of a large Bay; well inhabited by Merchants and Tradersmen, who drive a good Trade with Barbadoes, Jamaica, the Caribee-Islands, England and Ireland, by exchange of Commodities. It is a place of good Strength, founded upon three Hills, on which are raised Fortifications, with Cannon mounted, and well guarded. To this Town also belongs a considerable Fleet of Ships, employed first in Fishing at Newfoundland, and on their own Coast, and then compounding a freight with Corn and the other Commodities, they pass to our Southern Plantations, which are wholly from hence supplied with Victuals for their Negro Servants; it being to be had cheaper than they can raise it. The best of their Fish they Sell or Transport to the Portuguese and Spain; and the Sugars of Barbadoes, to the English Merchants; and oftentimes they themselves Transport them to England. This Plantation has ever pretended to be more free than any of the rest of our Western Plantations, and will not be Governed by the Acts of the Parliament of England, as the rest are, but have set up a Mint of their own, and Trade whither they please in their own Ships; and although they Reverence the Crown of England, and so Trade not with its Enemies, yet they in the two last Reigns did scarce acknowledge themselves to be Subjects, till their Charter was taken away, and a Governour sent to them, on whom they wreaked their Fury at the Revolution: This, tho' true of the whole, is mostly applicable to New Boston, which about 20 years since, had about 50 Sail of stout Merchant Ships; and now (in 1692.) are are much more in number without doubt, if not diminished by the present War. 6. Quilpiack, on the Bay of Massachusetts, a Town of an old Name, but a new Plantation. The other Towns are, 7. Charles Town, between the Rivers Charles and Mistick. 8. Dorchester. 9. Cambridge, consisting of several Streets and two Colledges, and divers fair well built Houses; the first University opened in our Western Plantations. 10. Reading, commodiously seated above a great Pond, and well inhabited, having one Mill for Corn, and another for Timber. 11. Salem, pleasantly placed between two Rivers: and about 30 or more other Towns, all of English names, as Bristol, Dorset, &c. which shews the Populoufness and Riches of this Plantation above the rest, which have but one or two Towns apiece; none of which are equal to Boston.

This part of Virginia, first discovered by Captain Gosnold, Anno 1602. and the next year more perfectly surveyed by some of Bristol, was by King Jam's, Anno 1606. granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, to be Planted and disposed of for the Publick: Sir John Popham, then Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas, being one of the chief also in that Commission. By his encouragement, and principally at his Charge, a Colony was sent thither, Anno 1607 under the Presidency of Captain George Popham, and Raleigh Gilbert, who built the Fortress of St. George at the mouth of Sagadahoc. But the President dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief Justice also; the Colony despairing of good Success, returned home again. Successfully again attempted, Anno 1614. the Undertakers were resolved to make farther trial of their fortune; and in the year 1626. sent out eight Ships more: but it never settled into form till the year 1630. When by the building of New Plymouth, and some encouragements sent thither to bring others on, it grew in very short time to so swift a growth, that no Plantation for the time ever went beyond it. The growth of Old Rome and New England had the like Foundation; both Sanctuaries, Ad quæ turba omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida confluit, as Livy telleth us of the one; resorted to by such of the Neighbouring Nations as longed for Innovations in Church and State.

NOVUM BELGIUM, or NIEU-NEDERLAND, hath on the North-East New-England; on the South-West, Virginia, specially so called. This part of Virginia is now erected into another Plantation, distinct from Virginia, and called by the name of Mary land. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their Plantation in it, Anno 1614. the Country being then void, and consequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxim in the Civil Laws, quæ nullius sunt in bonis, dantur occupanti. And yet they had some better Title than a bare Intrusion, having bought Hudson's Charts and Maps, and otherwise contented him for the Charge and Pains of his Discovery, Anno 1609. of which more anon.

This part of the Country extended from the 38 Degree and a half to the 41. 15. of a good temperature both Air and Soil: fruitful of those things which the Earth brought forth of its own accord; abundance of wild Grapes, Nuts, and Trees of great height and bulk for Shipping; plenty of Herbage, store of Plants, the effects of nature: and where the People did their part, such encrease of Maize (a Plant of which they make their Bread) as shewed their Care and Industry to be well bestowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furnished (within their command) with Wheat and other sorts of Grain; as also with Flax, Hemp, and such other Commodities as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods replenished with Deer, and the Plains with Fowl; the Rivers not inferior to any in Sturgeons, Salmon, and other the best sort of Fish which can swim in the Water.

The People, though divided into many Nations; and of different Languages, are much of the same disposition with the other Savages; clad in Beasts-Skins, for the most part without certain Dwellings; dwelling together many Families of them under one poor Roof made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the Bark of Trees. Their Household-stuff a Tobacco-pipe, a wooden Dish, and a Hatchet made of a broad Flint; their weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of Fishes. Their Religion Idolatry, or worse; their chief God the Devil whom they worship under the name of Menetto; but with less Pomp and Ceremony than is used in Africk. Of Manners, fearful and suspicious, (not without cause) wonderfully greedy of revenge, but, if well used, tractable and obedient unto their Superiours; fickle, but very faithful unto those who trust them; conceived to be inclinable to the Christian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of those who had studied Godliness more than Gain.

Rivers of Note they have not many. That want is supplied by many large and capacious Bays, all along the Coast. The Principal of those that be, 1. Mambatten, by some called Nassauus, but by the Dutch commonly Noordt River, which falleth into the Bay at May-port, so called by Cornelius May, the Master of a Ship of Holland, at their first Plantation: another Channel of it, which from the noise thereof they call Hell-gate, emptying itself against an Island called the Ile of Nuts. The River is at Fifteen or Sixteen Fathom deep, at the mouth thereof affordeth a safe Road for Shipping, but of difficult entrance. 2. Zuid River, so called, because more Southerly than the other; as fair as that, but hitherto not so well discovered.

Towns here are few, either of the old or new Plantations. The natural Inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of those Tribes under one Roof, as before was said; but those Families so remote from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a scattered Village. Nor do I find, that either the Hollanders or the English (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to Building: the Title of the Dutch being subject unto some Disputes; and the Possession of the English not confirmed and settled. Hudson an Englishman had spent some time in the Discovery of this Country, and given his Name to one of the Rivers of it. With him the Hollanders, Anno 1609. Hudson is said, compounded for his Charts and Maps, and whatsoever he could challenge in the Right and Success of that his Voyage. But they were hardly warm in their new Habitations, when Sir Samuel Argal, Governour of Virginia specially so called, (having dispossessed the French of that part of Canada now called Nova Scotia, Anno 1613.) disputed the Possession with them, alledging that Hudson, under whose Sale they claim'd that Country, being an Englishman, and licensed to discover those Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or dismember it (being but a part or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governour submits himself and his Plantation to his Majesty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for and under him. But a new Governour being sent from Amsterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes, but began to fortifie himself, and entitle those of Amsterdam to a just Propriety. To which end he gave unto the Country the name of New-Netherland, conferred new Names on all the Bays and Rivers of it, and Possessed himself of a little Island near that Branch of the Noordt River which themselves called Hell-Gate: where he laid the Foundation of a Town called New Amsterdam; and built a Fortress by the name of Orange Fort, which he Garison'd, and Planted with five pieces of Canon. Complaint whereof being made unto King Charles, and by him represented to the States of Holland, it was declared by the said States, in a publick Instrument, that they were no ways interested in it, but that it was a private undertaking of the West-Indian Company of Amsterdam; and so referred it wholly to His Majesty's pleasure. Which being declared, a Commission was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, to Plant the Southern parts thereof, which lie next Virginia, by the name of MARY-LAND; the like not long after to Sir Edmond Ploydon, for Planting and possessing the more Northern parts, which lie towards New England, by the name of New Albion. And though the Hollanders did then seem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there for the Sum of 2500*l.* yet taking advantage of the Troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raised their Demands to a greater height, but furnished the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to use their Weapons. A most mischievous and wicked Act, not only tending to the damage and discouragement of the present Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Christians out of all these Countries. But the best is, they were the first that smarted by it. The Savages thus armed and trained, fell foul upon them, destroying their Farm Houses, and forcing them to betake themselves to their Forts and Fastnesses. What hath been since done, (for the giving of new names to some of the old Places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the English, I can hardly say; but I fear that little will be acted, or to little purpose, till it be made a work of more publick Interest.

In the year 1664. there being then a War between Charles the II. and the Dutch; that Prince sent over four Commissioners to reduce the Colony; who marching with 300 Red Coats to Manhades, or New Amsterdam, the 29th. of August, turned out their Governour, and all the rest, but those that would swear Allegiance to the King of England, who were suffered wisely to enjoy their Houses and Lands as before. Thirteen days after, Sir Robert Carr took the Fort and Town of Aurania, now called Albany: Twelve days after that, Arasapha, now Delaware, by which the English became Masters of three handsome Towns, and as many Forts. The Province was thereupon given to James then Duke of York; and from his Title, with the principal place, it was called New York. It is seated very conveniently for Trade, Security, and Pleasure, in a small Island called Manhatan, made so by Hudson's River, which severeth it from the Long Island, which River is two Leagues broad, and Navigable above 100 Miles up into the Country. It contained then about 500 well built Houses, with Dutch Brick, the meanest not valued under 100*l.* To the Land-ward it had a thick Wall, and at the entrance of the River a good Fort, now call'd Charles Fort. And for Civil Government it was Incorporated, and Governed by a Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriff, and Justices of the Peace: The Inhabitants English and Dutch; they had a considerable Trade with the Indians for Elkes, Deer, Bears, Beaver, Otter, Raccoon Skins; for Venison and Wild Fowl in the Winter; and for Fish in Summer. The Island is Fourteen Miles long, and Two broad, stretching East and West, and the Town is at the West end next the Sea. Upon the same River 100 Miles higher stands New Albany, a place of considerable Trade with the Indians: between them, on both sides of the River is as good Corn as the World affords.

The Province of MARY-LAND is situate between the Degrees of 37 and 50 m. and 40 of North Latitude, and is bounded on the North by Pensylvania, New England, and New York; on the East by the Atlantick Ocean and Delaware Bay; and on the West by Virginia, parted from it by the River Parowmeck. The Bay of Chesopeak admitteth Ships 200 Miles up the Country. The Rivers are 1. Parowmeck, 2. Patuxent, 3. Sewern, or Ann Arundel, 4. Sacquo Sabamough on the East side of the Bay: on the West 5. Nantecoke, 6. Pocomoke. The Air is very healthful, and agreeable to the English now, the Woods are fell'd; the Air temperate, the Breezes from the Sea cooling its Heats, and the Winter being of no great duration; the Soil is Rich, and much of the same nature with Virginia; the chief Trade of it being Tobacco, more esteemed by Foreigners than the Virginians. The Lord Baltimore, the Proprietor of it, has erected a Mint; and there is a competent store of Foreign Coin besides this. There have some years since, been 100 Ships laden in one year, by this and the neighbour Plantations. The Principal Town is St. Marys, where the Courts Sit, and Justice is Administred according to Laws enacted by the common Consent. It is divided into Ten Counties; Cecil, Dorchester, Kent, Somerset, and Talbot, East of the Bay, Ann Arundell, Baltimore, Calvert, Charles, and St. Marys on the West of it: The Inhabitants about five years since, being estimated to be 16000 Persons, and they have begun to build Calverton, Herrington, and Harvey Town: St. Marys is seated on the River of St. George, and is beautified with many well built Houses, and is the chief Scale of Trade for that Province.

Since our Author wrote, there has been a new Plantation by Charles II. in 1681. granted to Pen a Quaker, by the name of Pensylvania, bounded on the East by the River Delaware, 12 Miles distance from Newcastle; So it is bounded on the North by New York; on the East by New Jersey; on the South by Mary-land, and on the West by undiscovered Countries, extending to 43 Degrees of North Lat. and settled upon the said William Pen, and his Heirs for ever. The Proprietor has divided it into six Counties, called Philadelphia, from the capital City begun by him to be built, Buckingham Chester, Newcastle, Kent and Suffex. Philadelphia is seated between two Navigable Rivers, Delaware and Skulkill, having two Fronts upon the Water, each a Mile; the latter is Navigable 100 Miles up by Boats, falling from the North-East into the River Delaware. In the year 1685 there were 600 Houses built in this City, the Foundation of which was laid in 82. This Plantation, tho' so lately settled, is become very numerous, and in a thriving condition; but then the beginning it with the Building of this great Town, before the Country was cleared, and the Trade settled, was observed to have an ill effect upon many of the Builders, who being run in Debt, were afterwards forced to sell their Houses to others; the Builders for the most part enjoying a very little while the benefit of their own Labours and Expences.

East and West JERSEY lye between 39 and 41 Degrees of Latitude between the River Delaware to the South, and Hudson to the North, having the Vergivian Ocean to the East. The chief Towns are Shrewsbury, Middletown, Burgin, Newark, Elizabeth-Town, Woodbridge and Piscataway. It has plenty of Springs, Rivolets, In-land Rivers and Creeks; and the Up-lands yield plentiful crops of English Grain of all sorts, besides Indian Corn, Flax and Hemp, which the Inhabitants began some years since to manufacture. It hath plenty of our European Cattle sent thither, and of Furs, Whale-Oil and Whale-Fins for a Trade. This Country was at first granted to the Lord Barclay, and Sir George Carteret, who are called in my Author, the late Proprietors thereof; there was then no Town in it.

New Jersey, between both these and New York River, and was granted to Sir Edward Billing; the Principal Town in it is Burlington, which was then newly begun, about 1680.

3. VIRGINIA, specially so called, hath on the North-East, Nieu-Nederlandt; on the South-West, Florida: the name restrained to this part only, since the two last Plantations, which before was common to the whole. (Since our Author's time, by other Settlements Jersey is Planted between it and New-York, then New-Netherland, to the West Maryland, and to the South Carolina, is taken out of Florida and added to our Plantations.) The Country lieth extended from the 34. to the 38. Degree of Northern Latitude: and by consequence the Air is inclined unto Heats, if not refreshed and moderated by a constant gale of Eastern Winds, which they call the Breeze, and the Blasts driving on it from the open Seas. Diversified most pleasantly into Hills and Valleys; the Mountains cloathed with Woods, and the Fields with Fruits. The Soil so fruitful, that an Acre of Land well ordered, ordered, will return 200 Bushels (25 Quarters) of Corn. Said also to be rich in veins of Allom, as also Pitch, Turpentine, store of Cedars, Grapes, Oil, plenty of sweet Gums, several sorts of Plants for the Dyer's use, some Mines of Iron and Copper, of Timber Trees almost infinite numbers; as also great abundance of Cattle, Fish, Fowl, Fruit, and of Maiz no scarcity. Some Chrystal is found amongst the Mountains, on the Shore some Pearls. Nothing deficient either in the Soil, or Air, for the encouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The People are but few in number for so large a Country, and those as different in Size as in Speech or Manners. Some of them whom they call Sasques-banoxi, of so vast a greatness, that in comparison of the English they seemed as Giants; clad with the Skins of Bears and Wolves in so strange a manner, that the Head of the Beast hung before their Breasts instead of a Jewel; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other side, whom they call Wigocomici, of so low a stature, that in relation to the other they appear as Pygmies. But generally they are all of tall stature, well limbed, for the most part without Beards, and the one half of the Head kept shaven; cloathed in loose Mantles, made of the Skins of Deer, with an Apron of the same to hide their nakedness; the rest of their Bodies painted over with figures of Serpents, or of some other Creature of as horrid shape. Strong and accustomed to the Cold, which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconstant, craky, and somewhat more industrious than the rest of the Savages, but given to anger and as greedy of revenge as any. Gods they have many, for they worship all things, (and them only) which are like to hurt them; as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, &c. So that it may be said of them, as once Lactantius said of the ancient Romans, (did not the ignorance of these poor Wretches render them excusable, and make them fitter Objects for our Prayers and Pity, than our Scorn) Dignissimi homines qui Deos suos semper haberent presentes. One Devil-God above all the rest, (they call him Oke) whom they worship, as themselves confess, more for fear than love. Not yet converted from these horrible and gross Idolatries by the long neighbourhood of the English; accused in that respect most justly by those of Rome.

No Country for the bigness of it can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers. The principal of which are 1. Powhatan, (so called by the name of that petit Royelet whose Territory it passeth through) which having run a course of an hundred miles, and navigable all that way by smaller Vessels, is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad, 2. Apamattuck, 3. Nansamund, and 4. Chikabamania; all Tributaries to Powhatan. 6. Pamunike, fourteen miles more North then Powhatan, but of lesser note. 6. Topabanoek, navigable 130 miles. 7. Patanomoke, passable by Boat 140 miles, and six or seven miles broad where it falleth into the Sea; encreased by many lesser streams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well stored with Fish. 8. Pautuxut, of a shorter Race, but a deeper Channel, than most of the former (16 or 18 fathom deep) and of more choice of Fish than the others are.

The Air of Virginia, is pleasant and wholesom, except in the Low-lands and Marshes; But then it is subject to violent Changes, especially when the North west Winds blow, (which is Common to it, with all the Counties on this Coast to the North of Virginia) which coming from the Mountains that are always covered with Snow (the Apalatean Hills) are violently cold. It abounds with all things useful to the Life of Man, except Wine and Oyl, which perhaps too may be raised, when it is more thoroughly planted, if Advatage be taken of the Position of Grounds exposed to the South East Sun, and secured against the North West Wind.

Along the Banks of the Rivers dwell their several Tribes, scarce any one of which make up an hundred Men, (that of Patanomoke excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160) many not yielding above 30, and some not so many. Their habitations, not containing above ten or twelve houses apiece, but in those houses sundry particular Families, are for the most part covered with the Barks of Trees; so placed that the common Market place standeth in their midst, at an equal distance; the houses of the Weroances, (or the Chiefs of their Tribes) and that which serveth them for a Temple, being somewhat finer than the rest. And of these habitations some are presented to us by the names, of 1. Ojaneck, by the English called the blind Town. 2. Pemeoke. 3. Sbycooke, said by my Author to be Croitas ampla, a large City; but we must understand him with Relation to the rest of this Country. 4. Chowanock. 5. Sicatan. 6. Mattaken. 7. Wapemioke. 8. Pyshoconock, said to be inhabited by none but Women. 9. Chipano. 10. Muscarnunge, both upon the Sea: most of them called by the name of those several Tribes which inhabit them.

This Country was first Granted by the Illustrious Queen Elizabeth to her Favourite Sir Walter Raleigh Kt. the Patent bearing date the 25th of March, in the 26th of her Reign, 1584. By which it was granted to him and his Heirs and Assigns forever: And accordingly the 27th of April, the same year, he sent Mr. Philip Amadis, and Mr. Arthur Barlow, with too Barks, to take Possession of it, as they did for him the 13th of July following, in the Island of Wokoxen on the Coast of Carolina. They only took Possession then, and immediately after returned, observing that Virginia was then called by the Indian Inhabitants Wingandacoa: The next year, 1585. Sir Walter sent Sir Richard Greenville with 7 Sail of Ships, and with him Mr. Ralph Lane, Mr. Thomas Candish, Mr. John Arundel, Mr. Raymond, Mr. Stukeley, Mr. Bremiger, Mr. Vincent, and Mr. John Clark. In this Voyage was left 150 Men, who remained there all that year under the Command of Mr. Philip Amadis: These Men returned the next year with Sir Francis Drake for want of Victuals, the Natives being combin'd against them. Sir Walter sent Supplies the same year; but they were gone before that ship arrived. In 1587 he sent another Colony of 150 under the Command of John White in 3. Ships, which remained there; but what came of it afterwards, I know not; for the next Expedition was in 1590. and then they were not seen, nor any account brought of them. Hackluit. In the year 1603. Diverse Persons who had purchased Sir Walter's Patent, made a Voyagethither, and discovered Wasson's Bay in 41. but these made no great Progress, till Sir John Popham, in 1606. who sent a Colony under Captain James Davis, whose first Settlement was at Sagadahock, where they built St. George's Fort: soon after which, James Town was begun.

In reference to the English and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the South-side of a large and goodly Bay for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thrusting it self a great way up into this Country, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before mentioned, is by the Natives called Chesepoack, and yieldeth the only safe entrance into this part of the Country: the Capes thereof for that cause fortified by the English: that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charles, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of most note, which have been either since built, or frequented by them, 1. James Town, (Jacobopolis) so named in honour of King James, on the South-side of that Bay, not far from the River Chikabamania: first founded in the year 1606. at what time it was trenched about, and some Ordnance planted on the Works. 2. Henries Town, (Hemicopolis) so named in honour of Prince Henry, the eldest Son of King James, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 18. miles from James Town. 3. Dales gift, so called, because built and planted at the charge of Sir Thomas Dale, Anno. 1610. 4. Bermuda, an open Burrough five miles from Hemicopolis. 5. Kentoughton, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Chesepoack, very much traded by the English.

6. Wicocomac, the chief Town of Powhatan, one of the Royalties of this Country; much courted by the English at their first settling here, and a long time after; a Crown being sent him by King James, with many other rich Presents, the better to sweeten and oblige him: but for all that, he proved a treacherous and unfaithful Neighbour.

The sum of the affairs of this last Plantation is, that the business being resumed in the year 1605, and a Commission granted to certain Noblemen and Merchants to advance the work, they fell in hand, by the Counsel and Encouragement of Captain Smith, with the building of James-Town (having first fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. These, being almost consumed by Famine and other miseries, were the next year recruited with 120 more, brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire having casually consumed their Houses, once again discouraged them. But the Houses, being re-edified, and a Church added to the Houses by the industry of Smith their Governour, the Colony began to flourish, and encrease in reputation among the Savages, especially having made (as they believed) a friend of Powhatan. In the year 1609, the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return; who left here 490 Persons, (and of them 200 expert Soldiers) 3 Ships, 7 Boats, 24 great Guns, 300 Muskets, with Victuals and Ammunition necessary; and 39 of their Weroances, or Petit Kings, Tributaries, and Contributioners to the English. Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Summers, sent thither with 9 ships and 500 Men, lost a great part of their numbers in the Isle of Bermudaz: the rest not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three ships more, An, 1610. But falling into a desperate sickness, and come home to England, he recommended the Estate of the English there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furnished them with Men, Cattel, and other necessities; after whom came Sir Thomas Gates with 300 men, and some heads of Cattel. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Henry Earl of Southampton, the Affairs here began to settle in a prosperous way: when unexpectedly in the year 1621, the Savages falling on them (fearing no such treachery) kill'd 340 of their Men; and had then also surpriz'd James Town, if one of the Savages who had received the Christian Faith, had not discovered their Intention. In the year 1623 a Complaint was made against the Proprietors of this Plantation, and thereupon their Patent was declared void, and leave given to all English Men that would to trade thither, which perhaps tended more to the Security of the Plantation, than the former way. Since that, recovered of that Blow, it went happily forwards, and might by this time have been raised to some Power and Greatness, if the English, by diverting on some by-Plantations, and by employing indigent and necessitous Persons in so great a work, had not discouraged the design. For certainty one might say of this Plantation, as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few or none were sent unto it (except the principals) but such as were in distress or debt, or some way or other discontented; Men never likely to advance and pursue a business of such publick Interest. Commendable howsoever in this particular, (though perhaps that Commendation do belong to their Governours) that being here, they kept themselves constantly to those Forms of Worship which were established and observed in the Church of England.

To Erect and settle a Plantation at the distance that Virginia lieth, must be very difficult at all times; but it was made more difficult by the Troubles that ensued under the Reign of Charles the II. yet after the Colony was once so far settled as to subsist and plant Tobacco, the Trade went on with it, and they spread their Conquest and cleared and planted the Country apace; so that the Country became divided into these Counties; Caratuck, Charles, Gloucester, Hartford, Henrico, James, New Kent, Lancaster, Middlesex, Nansemond, Lower Norfolk, Northampton, Northumberland, Rappahanock, Surrey, Warwick, Westmoreland, Weight, and York. In each of these Counties are held Petty Courts once a Month for the Administration of Justice, from which there lieth an Appeal to the Quarter-Session held at James Town.

The Number of the English Inhabiting this Country about 1680. was estimated at 40000. and they may now be near double, by reason of the Numbers that have since gone thither, or are born and grow up in the place; the Inhabitants encreasing here much faster than in England, partly by reason of the Warmness of the Country, so that they become Marriageable sooner, and partly by reason of the great facility they find in bringing up and providing for their Children, by reason of the uncultivated Lands about them.

The Natives, which were very numerous when the English settled amongst them, have been so wasted without any War by the small Pox, and Brandy, and other such strong Liquors brought in use amongst them by the English, (of which liquors they are great Admirers) that there is now very few left; and those that are, are in no Condition to contest with the English. At first the English were forced to labour themselves, to plant and clear their own Ground; but now they have trained up Negroes to work, and they are only their Governours and Directors; and the Children of these Negroes born there, prove much better, and more usefull than their parents, being born in a state of servitude, and accustomed to Labour from their Childhood, which the other were not. As the English encrease, so they begin to furnish themselves with Necessaries for Clothes and Linnen, &c. by the Product of the Country, and to depend less upon England for Supplies: So that many of the more Ancient Families live in a State and Equipage equal to that of the best Gentry in England; and for Plenty, and the Number of their Attendants, much above them; they having all that is necessary to the life of Man, or the pleasure of it, in great abundance; only they want Metals, and have not introduced that Plenty of Gold and Silver in the way of Trade (which is mostly by Truck or Barter) which we have.

Whilst I am writing this, Their Majesties have consented to the opening an University in this Country for the Education of their Childeren, and have granted a part of the Royal Revenue to that purpose.

I have never heard of any War that has been between this Colony and the Inhabitants. It is to be wished, that some of the Inhabitants would send over better Instructions, that what is wanting of the History of this or any of our other Plantations might be preserved; particularly, what became of the Colony sent thither in 1587. and whether it subsisted till 1607. when the final Settlement began?

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided, as was said, into several Tribes, every Tribe under the command of their several Chiefs: which Chiefs, though many in number, and of little Power, knew well enough how to keep their State unto their Subjects, and to shew it also unto Strangers. For when Powhatan was pleased to give Audience unto Captain Newport, and the rest of the English sent from Smith, they found him upon a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather, embroidered with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of Skins like an Irish Mantle: at his head and feet an handsome young Woman; on each side of the room twenty others, with their necks and shoulders painted red, and about their necks a great Chain of Beads: his principal Men sitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithstanding this great State, (and great it was indeed for such petit Princes) he and the rest became so subject to the English, that in Smith's time they did not only pay their Tributes, or Contributions, but at his command would send their Slaves and Subjects to James-Town, to receive correction for wrongs done to the Colony. And it is probable enough that those of New-England, being the greater and more powerful Plantation, (as followed with the stronger Zeal, and carried on by the united purses of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence also amongst the Natives, though I find it not expressed in so many particulars.

To the South of Virginia is another Plantation, now settled and called CAROLINA, from Charles the II. late King of England, extending from the Latitude of 36 to 29. which is its most Southern Bounds. It was in this Part of America that all the Colonies sent by Sir Walter Raleigh endeavoured to settle; Wokokon, Roanoke, and Oran, being all within these Bounds; and this was the Country he gave the Name of Virginia to; that which now beareth the Name, being discovered afterwards in 1606 or 1607. It was granted in 1603 to Edward Earl of Clarendon, George Duke of Albermarle, William Earl of Craven, John Lord Berkely, Artho. Lord Ashly, after Earl of Shaftsbury, Sir George Cartret and Sir John Colleton Knights and Baronets, and Sir William Berkley Kt. And they settled 2 Colonies, one at Albermarle River, and the other at Ashly River, in the lat. of 32. This of Albermarle was settled in April, 1670. upon a point of land 7 miles from the fall of Ashly River: in 1680 was built the Port Town, and called Charles-Town which in 1685 had about 200 Houses, and was growing daily, many of the Inhabitants of our Sugar-Islands retiring to this Town and Plantation before its Foundation were well laid. There rode before this Town at one time 16 Sail of large Ships. It suffereth nothing by the North East Wind, and is as to heat and cold much more temperate than Virginia. This Country is capable of all manner of Improvements, as well yeilding the same with the torrid Zone, as those of England, by reason of their short Winter, and the Land being of great Fertility, and wonderfully watered, there is nothing comes amiss to it. The first English that went thither found such plenty of Grapes, that there was few Trees or Shrubs without Vines about them, of which, the Country has 5. several sorts, and care has been since taken to Plant the Rhenish, Canary, Claret, Muskat, Madera and Spanish Grape; of all which, there were long since Compleat Vineyards. The Oyle Olive thrives here too wonderfully; as also Cotton, Indigo, Silk, Ginger, Tobacco, Flax, and Hemp; and Sugar they may have when they please. The Inhabitants they found there are of a mild nature, and neither able nor disposed to hurt the English; they being few in Number, and disunited amongst themselves by their Broils.

4. The Isles of BERMUDAZ, many in number, (some say 400 at the least) are situate directly East from Virginia, from which they are distant 500 English miles; 3300 of the same miles from the City of London. So called from John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, by whom first discovered. Called also the Summer Islands, from the Shipwreck of Sir George Summers upon that Coast; so much delighted with the sadness of the misadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to settle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatness than all the rest, to which the name is now most properly ascribed, is situate in the Latitude of 32 and 30 minutes: Well stored, when first discovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers Fruits, Mulberries, Palmites, Cedars; as also of Silk-worms, Pearls, and Amber, and such rich Commodities; of Fowl so in finite an abundance, that our men took a thousand of one sort as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Air hereof very found and healthy, found by experience the best argument in such a point to be agreeable to the body of an English man; yet terribly exposed to Tempests of Rain, Thunder and Lightning. For which, and for the many Shipwrecks hapning on the Coasts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be lild to own it, the Mariners have pleased to call it the Island of Devils. The Soil affirmed to be as fertile as any; well watered, plentiful in Mauze, of which they have two Harvests yearly: that which is sowed in March being cut in July; and that which is sowed in August being mowed in December. No venomous Creature to be found in all the Island, or will live brought hither. And besides these Commodities, of so late a being, so fenced about with Rocks and Isles, that without knowledge of the passages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with such knowledge there is entrance for the greatest Ships. The English have since added to these strengths of nature such additional helps, by Block-houses, Forts and Bulwarks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was first discovered (but rather accidentally than upon design) by John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, about the year 1522. and thereupon a Proposition made in the Council of Spain, for settling a Plantation in it, as a place not to be avoided by the Spanish Fleets, in their return from the Bay of Mexico, by the Streights of Bohama. And the King gave One Ferdinando Camelo, a Portuguese, large Privileges to encourage him to plant here; but the design miscarried. In the year 1595. Barboto, a French Pilot, suffered Shipwreck, 26 of his Men escaping on Shore, amongst whom was Henry May an Englishman. Neglected notwithstanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, sent to Virginia with some Companies of English by the Lord De la Ware, Anno 1609. Who being shipwrecked on this Coast, had the opportunity to survey the Island, which he so well liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it at his coming home. Anno 1612. the first Colony was sent over under Richard Mene, who in three years erected eight or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordnance. Anno 1616. a new supply is sent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applied themselves to sowing Corn, setting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and Planting that gainful weed Tobacco. Anno 1619. the business is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and Men of Honour being interested in it; Captain Butler sent thither with 500 men; the Isle divided into Tribes or Cantreds, to each Tribe a Burrough; the whole reduced to a settled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this all things so succeeded, that in the the year 1623. here were said to be three thousand English, ten Forts, and in those Forts fifty pieces of Ordnance; their numbers since encreasing daily, both by Children born within the Island, and Supplies. from England. In the year 1685. the Inhabitants were estimated at about 5000. so that this small Knot of Islands began to disburthen it self into Carolina, which lies in the same Climate, and is as good and as soft an Air. The long life and health of the Inhabitants is a great cause of their encrease; but then the Isle being small, the Trade is not great, so that Men rather live than get much in it; which to Men of more Active Spirits is a great cause of their Removing to people other places that want them.

O F FLORIDA.

FLORIDA is bounded on the North-East with Virginia; on the East with Mare del Noordt; on the South, and some part of the West, with the Gulf of Mexico; on the rest of the West, with part of New-Gallicia, and some Countries hitherto not discovered. Extended from the River of Palms in the 25 degree of Latitude, to Rio de Secco in the 34. which evidently speaketh it for a Country of large Dimensions.

It was first discovered by the English under the Conduct of Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1479. afterwards better searched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took possession of it in the name of that King, Anno 1527. and by him called Florida: either because he landed there upon Palm-Sunday, which the Spaniards called Pascua di Flores, or Pascha Florida; or else quia Florida erat Regio, by reason of that fresh Verdure and flourishing Estate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is said to be called Jaguasa.

This Country lying paralld to Castile in Spain, is said to be of the same temper both for Air and Soil, but that is abundantly more Fruitful: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage, as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize, (the natural Bread-corn of the Country) which they sow twice a year: viz March and June, and reap in the third month after, laying it in some publick Barns, and thence distribute it to the Necessities of particular persons. Well stored with several sorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Chestnuts, Grapes and Plums, of both excellent taste and colour: Beasts wild and tame, of all kinds which these Countries yield; and of like sorts of Fowl. The Woods and Forrests full of the largest Oaks, and the loftiest Cedars; some Cypress Trees and Bays, of a large proportion: with great plenty of that Wood, which the Inhabitants call Pavame, and the French name Sassafras, the Bark whereof is Medicinal against some Diseases; and another Tree which we call Esquine, affirmed to be a Sovereign and present Remedy for the French Disease. It is also said to be enriched with some Mines of Gold and Silver; neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards and French put a price upon them; and to have in it Emeralds of great worth and beauty, with many Turquoises and Pearls. Others report, that all the Gold and Silver which they have amongst them came from some Ships which had been wrecked upon those Coasts: contrary whereunto it is said by the Natives, that in the Hills which they call Apalæi, there are found great Veins of a reddish Metal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to search into them.

The people are of an Olive colour, great stature, and well proportioned; naked except their Privities, which they hide with the Skins of Stags: their Arms and Knees stained with divers paintings, not to be washed off; their Hair black, and hanging down as low as their Thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of Dissimulation. So stomachful, that they do naturally love War and Revenge; insomuch that they are continually in War with one or other. They are crafty also, and very Intelligent, as appeareth by the Answer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here among them, Anno 1594. For when he went to perswade the people that he was the Son of God, and came to teach them the Law, Not so, replied a Floridan; for God never bad thee to kill and slay, and work all kind of mischief against us. The Women, when their Husbands are dead, use to cut off their Hair close to their Ears, and strew it on his Sepulcher, and cannot marry again till their Hair be grown long enough to cover their shoulders. Hermophradites are here also in great plenty, whom they use as Beasts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kind of drudgery. They have all a gross belief of the Souls Immortality, but are otherwise Idolaters.

Mountains this Country hath not many, as being generally plain and level; the chiefest, those called Apalæi, before-mentioned, supposed by the Inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of most note; 1. Rio Secco. 2. Rio Grande. 3. Serrevabi. The two first named so by the Spaniards, and the last by the Natives. 4. Garrumna. 5. Ligeris. 6. Axona. 7. Sequima; and 8. Charente; so called by the French, according to the names of the best Rivers in France: both French and Spaniards having had severally and successively the possession of it. Here are also 9. Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers. 10. Rio de Nieves, or the River of Snow: And 11. Rio de Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular description of these Rivers, their Rise, Course, and Greatness, I find not in any of my Authors. Only Mercator telleth us of a twelfth River called Porte Riale, reckon'd the chiefest of this Country; the Mouth whereof is three miles broad where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the West, and the other pointing to the North. Some of these Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles; a Creature dangerous alike both by Land and Water. The French of latter times, in their Discoveries of Canada, and the great River and Lakes thereof, found one River which ran to the South; they enter'd and pursued the same so far, that they concluded it fell into the Bay of Mexico: But they going down, the same only in Boats, and not many in Number durst not pursue it too far, lest they should fall into the hands of the Spaniards, or never be able to get back again.

The Country, not so well discovered and planted hitherto, as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly distributed into several Tribes, as were all Nations of the World at their first Discovery. The principal of these they reckon the Quevenes, Marianes, Canagadi, Camoni, Avanares, and Malicones, the Susolas, Quitones, and other names not usual unto us of Europe; though these more passable than many which have gone before; mollified perhaps by the French and Spaniards, and not presented to us in their natural roughness: all governed by their Paracussi, or several Chiefs, and those at deadly Feuds and continual Wars with one another. Some have adventured on the names of particular Provinces, as Panuca, Avanares, Abarduofia, Jaguazia, Apalchia, Anthia, Samovia, Colas; but they acquaint us neither with their Site nor Bounds; except it be that Panuca lieth on the borders of Hispania Nova, beyond the large and spacious Bay of the Holy Ghost; and Calos near the Cape called Cabo di Florida. Others distinguish it by the names of the several Roylets; which varying with the change of the Person, makes that division to be very variable and uncer-uncertain also. But it is generally agreed, that the Peninsula which pointeth on the Isle of Cuba hath the name of Tequesta, or Florida specially so called; the name of Florida being first given by John Ponce unto this part only, though afterwards communicated unto all the rest of this Country. A Demy-Island, stretching in length from the South to the North, 100 Leagues; in breadth, where broadest, 30 Leagues, and in some places 20 only. Well known by the Cape of Martyrs, looking into the Isle of Cuba, the River of the Holy Ghost, and three goodly Bays, the chief whereof, that intituled to S. Joseph, all opening into the Gulf of Mexico, or the Bay of New Spain. The whole invironed about, save where it is joyned unto the Continent, with Bars of Sands, and scattered Islands, which serve unto it as the Out works to some notable Fortress.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Hellens, on or near a Promontory so named, where this Country bordereth on Virginia, once fortified and possessed by the Spaniard, but not long since abandoned. 2. Port de Charles, Aux Carolina in the Latine, built by the French upon the Banks of the River Maio; and so called in honour of Charles the Ninth, in whose time the Conquest of this Country was undertaken; but ruined by the Spaniard, in the War between them. 3. Port Royal, a well frequented Haven, on the mouth of the River of that name; but whether there be any Town now remaining I am not able to say. More in the Land (for these lie all upon the Borders towards Virginia) Apalche, supposed to be a place of great consideration, in regard of the opinion which was had of the Wealth thereof; (but found to be a small Town, of but 40 Cottages) and therefore first attempted and took in by the Spaniard, in their Invasion of this Country under Pamphilus of Narvaez, Anno 1528. Recovered by the Natives after his departure. 5. Ante, an open Burrough, nine days journey from Apalche, where the Savages gave the Spaniards a sharp Encounter, and slew many of them; but being vanquished at the last, they forsook the Town, of it felt not tenable. 6. Ocalis, an unwall'd Town, but consisting of 600 Sheds (for I dare hardly call them Houses) the chief of the Kingdom of Acuera. 7. Ofachile, the chief Seat of the King so called. And 8. Vitacuchus, a Burrough of 200 Cottages, the principal of the Kingdom of Vitacuchus: both taken by the Spaniards at the same time also. 9. S. Matthews, on the Eastern shore of the Demy Island above mentioned, possessed and fortified by the Spaniard. 10. S. Augustines on the same shore, but more South than the other, situate at the mouth of a small River so named, fortified by the Spaniard with many a strong Castle: but for all that taken by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1585. there being found in the Fort of S. John, in which the strength of the Town consisted, 28 Brass Pieces, and 20000 Florens in ready Money, for the pay of the Garrison. Repaired afterwards more strongly than ever formerly. The Spaniards have also Garrisons in two other places of this Country, viz. S. Philip, and S. Jago; but I cannot say distinctly in what part they are.

The Government of this Country is of one kind only, though managed by several persons: the Supreme Power residing in the Chiefs of their several Tribes; at such continual Enmity with one another, that they very seldom joyn together in any Councils wherein the publick is concerned. So that the Spaniards may affirm of the present Floridians, as the Romans did of the ancient Britains; Nec quicquam adversus validissimas gentes utilis nobis fuit, quam quod in commune non consulebant; the not communicating of their Councils hastned on their Bondage. Yet in the Government of these Chiefs there was somewhat of the Parliamentary way used with us in Europe: For as in all matters of Concernment those Chiefs advised with their Council; so if it were a business which concerned the Publik, their Priests and others of most note for Gravity and Wisdom were admitted to the Consultation. But being severally too weak for a strong Invader, and never joyned together to defend themselves, they made themselves an easie prey to the French and Spaniards. Et sic dum singuli pugnabant, universi vincuntur; by trusting to their single Forces, they were all subdued. For in the year 1512. John Ponce, a Native of Lyon in Spain, setting sail with three Ships from the Island of Porto Rico, on Palm Sunday fell on the Peninsula before described; and for that cause, or from the flourishing Verdure of it, called it Florida; but did no more than scour along upon the Coasts, and give new names to such of the Promontories and Rivers as he had discovered; and having only a slight Skirmish with some of the Savages, returned back again. The business eight years after was again revived by Vasques de Sylion, who setting sail from the Haven of Plata, in Hispavilla, attained unto the North-east parts of this Continent, bordering on Virginia, where he left names unto the Promontory of S. Hellens, and the River of Jordan: and having treacherously inflamed some of the Natives, (whom he had invited to a Feast) prepared for Spain: where he obtained the King's Patent for a new Plantation. But his perfidiousness could not prosper: For in the year 1544. coming with his Ships upon this Coast, one of them perished on the Rocks, and 200 of his men being killed at their landing, he gave over the Enterprize: the Spaniards hitherto making no more use of these Discoveries, than wickedly to enrich themselves by stealing men, whom as wickedly they sold for Slaves. Nor had the Voyage of Pamphilus de Narvaez, Anno 1528. any better end; though undertaken with a band of 400 Foot, and 20 Horse. For having took possession of the Country in the name of his Sovereign Charles the Fifth, finding some hopes of great Treasures to be had at Apalche, (distant above a Months Journey from the place of his Landing) he would needs march thither. In which Action, which he got that and some other Towns, yet he lost himself, few of his men returning safe into their Country, and they not knowing what became of their General. As fruitless, but more famous, was the Enterprize of Hernandes de Soto, begun in the year 1538. and continued til 1543. who with a little Army of 350 Horse, and 900 Foot, over-ran a great part of the Country, and brought many of the petit Princes under the Command of Spain. But making only a depredatory War of it, to enrich himself, and waste the Country, without settling any Colony, or building any Fortifications in it to make good his garrisons, the Action ended with his Life, which he lost by a Fever: the remnant of his Souldiers, whom the War had spared, under the Conduct of Luis de Mucopo de Alvarado, recovering Mexico not without great difficulties. The Spaniards having such ill Success in their Martial Expeditions in the year 1549. they sent some Priests to convert these thus exasperated Nations, which were all cut in pieces by the Natives.

And so the Spaniards leave the Stage, and the French enter; sent on this Voyage by Guyot Coligni, Admiral of France, Anno 1562. under the Conduct of Ribault, who falling on that part of the Continent which lieth on the East-side of the Peninsula, gave the first Promontory which he touched at, the name of Cape François; and after running Northward along that Coast, new-named the Rivers thereof by the names of the Seine, the Loire, the Somme, the Garonne, and others of most note in his own Country. Coming as far North as the great River of Porto Royal, he there built a little Fortress, which he called Fort Charles, where he left 26 of his men to keep possession, and returned for France; his Soldiers following not long after, as well as they could; destitute of Supplies from home, and not able with so small a number to command them there. The Action reinforced about two years after, under the Conduct of Landonier, who had accompanied Ribault in the former Voyage: by whom some farther progress was made in this Undertaking, and a little Town built on the Banks of the River Maio (so called by Ribault, because in that Month Month discovered by him) which he named Charles Fort, Arx Carolina in the Latin. But a Mutiny happening amongst his Men, and some Complaints made of him in the Court of France, he was called home, and Ribault sent again to pursue the Enterprize; who entering on his Charge in August, Anno 1565. was presently set on by the Spaniards, both by Sea and Land; his Ships forced violently upon the Rocks, the new Town sacked, the Colony put unto the Sword, very few escaping: Ribault himself murdered in cold blood by the Enemy, after Faith given him for his Life. It was thought that above 600 French were slain in this Action. So ended the French hopes in Florida, the King being then preparing for a new Civil War, and loath to engage himself against the Spaniard, till the year 1627. when at the Charge of Dominicus Gurgins, a private Person, out of an honest Zeal to the honour of his Country, and to cry quittance with the Spaniards for their treacherous Cruelty, it revived again. And though he found the Spaniards, after the defeat of Ribault, had repaired and fortified Arx Carolina, and raised two Castles more on the Banks of the Maio, which they had furnished with such pieces as they took from the French, and Garrison'd with 400 Soldiers; yet giving a courageous Onset, by the Aid of the Savages, (to whom the Name and Neighbourhood of the Spaniards was exceeding odious) he forced them all, demolished the Works, and hanged all such of the Soldiers as the Sword had spared, and so returned into France; where, instead of Honour and Reward for so great a Service, he was in danger of losing both his Life and Fortunes, compelled to lurk among his Friends till the Times were changed. The Spaniard, after this, to keep some kind of Possession, though not finding in it Riches answerable to their greedy desires, fortified St. Matthews and St. Augustines, on the East-side of the Demy-Island, with the Castles of St. Philip, and St. Jago, in other parts of the Country towards the North-East; thinking himself so strong in the Gulf of Mexico, that no Foreign Forces durst appear on that side of the Country. So that it seems he plays the Part of Aesop's Dog in the Manger, neither resolved to plant there himself, nor willing that any others should.

All this Care of the Spaniards has, however, been of no effect; for as the English under Sebastian Cabot were the first Discoverers of this Tract of Land; so the Providence of God has reserved the Possession of it to them: And they since 1663. have settled a strong and a thriving Colony in that very Part, upon the same Rivers the French before endeavoured to settle on, and have called it CAROLINA, from Charles II. And considering we are in Possession of all the Countries to the North of it, it was good Prudence to secure this Part, lest a powerful Nation should prevent us, and give us some Disturbance in it. But that which is of a more concernment to our Plantations, is the searching of the Rivers on the West-side of the Apalatean Hills, which has not as yet been much minded by the English. I have been informed by some of good credit that have been in Carolina, That these Mountains are not continued to so far as Carolina, but on the back of that Country all is Level and Plain, divided by Rivers which all fall to the South into the Bay of Mexico. The searching out the Truth of this, is a thing of great Consequence; but especially the finding the River Colbert, which would settle an easie Communication between Jamaica and these Northern Plantations; for the building a Town and Fort at the Mouth of this River, would afford means for our Plantations to send Corn and Provisions of all sorts to Jamaica, much more easily and safely than can be done the way of the long Sea; the Torrent of the Streights of Bahama forcing all Ships that go to the South to fetch a great compass to gain it; but if it were once sent down this River into the Bay of Mexico, it would be a short and an easie Passage to Jamaica. But this being a work of time, need be no farther insisted on here.

Having thus taken a Survey of the Main Land of Florida, let us next take a View of such Islands as lie dispersed up and down in the Seas adjoining; called by one general name LUCALIOS, or LUCALIA INSULAE, many in number, but reducible to these three Heads, viz. 1. The Tortugas. 2. The Martyres. And 3. The Lucaios, specially so called.

1. The TORTUGAS are Seven or Eight little Islands, lying on a heap at the South-west point of the Peninsula, called the Cape of Florida, in the height of 25 Degrees; distant from the Port of Havana, in the Isle of Cuba (opposite unto which they lie) about six Leagues. Well known among the Sailors, because much avoided, or rather avoided because known; the danger of their Company making their farther Acquaintance shunned.

2. The MARTYRES, called also the Caios, are three great Rocks rather than Islands, covered with a white Sand, and full of Bushes; the middlemost of the three the greatest: Situate over against the South-East Promontory of the said Peninsula, called from hence Cabeza de los Martyres; or, The Cape of Martyrs. Denominated thus by John Ponce the Spaniard, in his first Discovery of this Country, because they seemed afar off to have some resemblance to Men impaled upon Stakes, as many of the Martyrs were in the Primitive times. Infamous for the many Shipwrecks which have since there happened; but of great observation amongst Sea-faring-men, because they know by leaving these Rocks or Islands on the Left hand of them, that they are already entered in the Streights.

3. The LUCALIOS, specially so called, lie dispersed on the East of the Peninsula, many in number, and so called from Lucaioneque, the greatest and most Northern of them; situate in the 27 degree of Latitude; of more length than breadth, but hitherto known by name only. Of greater note, though not so big, is that called 2. Bahama, in the middle way betwixt Lucaioneque and the Peninsula; in length 13 Leagues, and 8 in breadth; memorable for giving name to the violent Current interposing betwixt it and the Demy-Island, called the Streights of Bahama; yet not so streight, but that they are 16 miles in breadth, though of so forcible a Course, that many times neither Wind nor Oars can prevail against it. 3. Guanabani, the most Famous of all these Islands, because the first that was discovered by Columbus, Thursday, the 11th of October, 1492. being then almost out of hope of proceeding any farther; who thereupon caused it to be called St. Saviours, because his finding it that Day saved his Life, the Spaniards having otherwise resolved to have slain him. Well shaded at that time with Trees; full of fresh Springs, and very plentiful of Cotton; now overgrown with Shrubs and Bushes. It is one of the Lucaios, between Florida and Hispaniola, between Guanima to the North, and Triangula to the South: It has a safe and large Haven. 4. Guanima, by Columbus, when first discovered, called, St. Maria de Conception; begirt about with Rocks and Quick-sands, but otherwise of a pleasant and fruitful Soil, full of delicate Springs. Others there are, to the number of 24. or thereabouts, whose Names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we find nothing of them but their very Names, I shall not trouble my self with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is said, that they obeyed their King so strictly, (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from a high Rock, they performed the same; though he gave no reason but his Will. The Women of so perfect Beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forsook their own Countries to enjoy their Loves: their Shape and Beauty the more discernable, in regard not suffered to wear any thing till their Purgations; nor after that, but Nets of Cotton filled with Leaves of Herbs. But now, and long since, there are neither Men nor Women to be found in any of them; the People being long since since wasted by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hispaniola, or consumed by Famine and Diseases, or otherwise made away in Prisons, and by several Torments, to the number of a Million and two hundred thousand, as some have told us. And so we pass unto the other side of those Northern Countries, opposite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the Main Land of Florida; that when we fall into the Countries now possessed by the Spaniard, we may not wander out of them till this Work be finished, except it be to take a Progress into some of the Islands, which cannot otherwise be visited, but by such a Start.

The securing to our selves the Possession and the Trade of these Plantations on the Continent, is of so great Use, Strength, and Advantage to the English Nation, now so great a Body of our People are settled there, that there is nothing of greater Consequence to us. The Tobacco's, and other Goods brought from Virginia, Mary-Land, and New-York, do not only serve these three Kingdoms, but the Remainder of it is transported by the Dutch to all the Kingdoms on the Baltick Sea, and to Russia; out of which there springs to England, in conjunction with our Sugar Trade, a Ballance to all our Trades with Germany and Holland; so that though the Spaniards much wondered that our English should so much please themselves with the planting that Stinking Weed, yet Experience has taught us, that the Riches arising from our Trade, are a far greater Advantage to us than their Mines of Potosi are to them, which have destroyed so many of their People, and made Spain so Poor and Lazy, that as fast as it is Imported it is carried away a gain by their Neighbours for meer Necessaries, very little of it remaining with them. The Corn and other Provisions of New-England, New-York, and New-Jersey, are of so great use to our Plantations on the Bay of Mexico, that they are not able to subsist without them, as was seen in this present War, upon an Interruption of that Trade: But as long as the French are possessed of the River Canada, they are on our Backs, and all the Nations we have driven up before us are at their Service, to return under their Command, and destroy us: So that the Securing to our selves the Trade of those Rivers, is a thing of absolute Necessity for our own Safety. The common Objection against things of this Nature, is the Charge and Difficulty of maintaining such remote Garrisons or Plantations; but as to the Charge, the Trade will in a short time pay that; many Nations that now know not the Use of Clothes being by this means brought to know and use them, and by degrees they will be also taught to manure their Ground too.

To shew this by an Example; the Germans and Britains, when the Romans came amongst them, were as Barbarous as the Northern Americans are now; but having from them learned the use of Tilling their Ground and Cloathing themselves; they became as Civil and Polite as the Romans themselves, and at last their Masters. The Indians do now drive a Trade with the French and English, for Beaver, and other Furs and Skins; and that brings them into a liking of our Commodities, which is a Foundation for a larger Trade, where before none was ever driven; and this in time will spread till it reach the Mur del Zur: So that if our Colonies be but maintained and supplied for a few years, they will at length maintain themselves, as the Hanse-Towns did in Germany, which were at first either Roman or French Garrisons fixed there, to Civilize the People, and Secure the Peace of Conquered Countries.

O F CALIFORNIA.

CALIFORNIA, in the large and general acception of it, containeth all those Provinces of Mexicana, which lie on the West-side of that Northern Peninsula, beyond Nova Galicia, and New Spain: though in the stricter, limited to that Province only which lieth on the other side of a long and spacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of California. But taking it in the largest sense, it hath on the West New Spain, and New Galicia, and so on to those undiscovered Parts which lie farthest North, to the Streights of Anian. So witnesseth John de Laet. Lib. 6. Cap. 11. CALIFORNIA communiter dicitur quicquid terrarum Novæ Hispaniæ atque Galliciæ ad Occidentem obijcitur, ad extremos Americæ Septentrionalis terminos, & Fretum quod vulgo 'Anian' vocant. Limited in the stricter sense and acception of it to an Island (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the West hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorography and Story of it, we must divide it into the Continent, and the Island: the Continent subdivided into the two large Provinces of 1. Quivira; and 2. Cibola: the Island into 3. California, specially so called; and 4. Nova Albion.

And first, The Continent of this Part which we call California, hath on the East some parts of Nova Galicia; and besides that, those vast and undiscovered Countries which lie on the West-side of Canada and Virginia, on the opposite Shore: Bounded on the North with the unknown Parts of this Mexicana; on the North-west, with the Streights of Anian, if such Streights there be; on the West, with the Sea interposing betwixt it and the Island, called Mer Vermiglio; and on the South and South-west, with the rest of Nova Galicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Noordt: A River which rising in the 40 degree of Northern Latitude, first parteth Tiguez, a Province of Quivira, from that of New Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Galicia; and after a long course falleth into the Sea, called Mer Vermiglio, above Cinoloa, another of the Provinces of that Division. Divided, as before was said, into the two great Provinces of, 1. Quivira; and 2. Cibola.

1. QUIVIRA, taking up the most Northern parts of this side of America, is said to be very plain and level; of few Trees, not many Houses, nor much store of People; quite destitute of Fruits and Corn, and yielding nothing for Man's Life but the Flesh of Beasts, which they eat raw, and swallow down in great bits without any chewing. The Men apparelled in Bulls Skins from the Head to the Feet; the Women, though in a cold Country, with no other Garment than their Hair, which they wear so long, that it serveth them instead of a Veil to hide their Nakedness. They live in Hoords and Companies, like the Hoords of the Tartars, not having any certain dwellings, (except some chief Men) but remove from one place to another, like the ancient Nomades. Near Neighbours unto Tartary, (from whence (not being much distant from it) it is supposed that the Inhabitants first came, and from hence by degrees Peopled all America. This has in all times been so far confirmed by the Observation and Experience of all those that have travelled in the North part of America, either upon the Mar del Zur, or upon the Virginian Ocean, that it may be set down for a certain Truth. I have above set down the Opinion of a Russ Commander, that Tartary afforded the stock that Peopled America. One Stockwell, an Englishman, was taken Captive the 19th of September, 1677. by the Indians of Canada, and by them carried Prisoner to Quebeck. "This Country (saith he) is inhabited by divers sorts of People, who are judged to be of the Tartars, called Samoieds, being divided into Tribes; their Speech is a Dialect of the Tartars; their Habit, before the English came amongst them, was the Skins of wild Beasts dressed with the Hair on, and drawn with Lines into several Works. In Winter they wear Snow Shoes fastned to their Feet, made like a large Racket for Tennis play; but now they wear Trading Cloth bought of the English. All these are Samoied Customs: And he observeth, the farther one goes to the North, the more the Indians resemble the Samoied Tartars in Language, Religion, Cloathing, Diet, and their way of Living; and amongst them that there are Man-eaters, as the Samoieds were about 1550. tho' they are now much civilized by the Russ. The Observation that the Indians wore Skins for Clothes before the English came amongst them, and since a sort of Cloth called Trade-Cloth, is a sufficient Instance how much the Trade of the World might be enlarged. America is of vast extent between California on the West, and New-England on the East; all the Nations inhabiting this Country, and all that lieth more to the North, go Naked, or only Cloathed in Skins of Beasts; but as the Trade goes on, may by degrees be brought to covet and wear our Cloth. Thus about 200 Years ago the Russ made all their Cloaths of Skins of Beasts, but by Trade and Commerce have been brought to wear Cloth.

The Country being full of Herbage, breeds great store of Cattel, differing not much in bigness from those of Europe, but that they have a high Bunch betwixt their Shoulders; bristled upon the Back like Boars, with somewhat which resembleth the Mane in Horses, and the Beard in Goats; their Legs short, and clad with Fetlocks, their Horns short, but sharp: the whole Beast of an Aspect so horrid, that a Horse will not venture near them, till well acquainted. Yet in these Beasts lie all their Riches, these being to these People, as we say with us of our Ale to Drunkards, Meat, Drink, and Cloth, and more too. For the Hides yield them Houses, or at least the covering of them; their Bones, Bodkins; their Hair, Thread; their Sinews, Ropes; their Horns, Maws and Bladders, Vessels; their Dung, Fire; their Calveskins, Budgets to draw and keep Water; their Blood, Drink; and their Flesh, Meat. There is thought to be some Traffick from China, or Cathay, hither; for when Vasquez de Coropado conquered it, he saw in the farther Sea certain Ships, not of common making, which seemed to be well well laden, and did bear in their Prows the Figure of Pellicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Country but one of these two. I know, some place this Country more within the Land; and others are so far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it close unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coast, upon good Authority, though I deny not but that some Parts hereof may be more remote. Or else to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; That the Maritime parts being known by other Names, the In-lands might retain more specially the Name of Quivira, as we have seen in many other Countries before described.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, because I find mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira; the one called Scio, the other called Cicuic, and the third Tiguez, which I look upon as the Maritime Parts of the same one Country, but better Peopled and frequented than the Islands are, because lying in the way of Traffick. The principal Towns of which Provinces are, 1. Acus, or Acuco, a small Town, but situate in a strong and defensible Place, about which grows some store of Cotton, which from the Place the Natives call by the Name of Acuco. 2. Tiguez, on the Banks of a River so called; inhabited by a stout and courageous People; who being resolved not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when besieged by Vasquez de Coronado, after they had held out above six Weeks, laid all their Household-stuff and Treasure in an heap together, which they set on fire; and taking their Wives and Children into the midst of their Ranks, made a desperate Sally on the Enemy. A Resolution worthy a better Fortune, most of them being slain in the Fight, and the rest trod under the Horses Feet, or drowned in passing over the River. Yet would not those few which were left give up the Town, till it was fired about their Ears, and no longer Tenable; the Spaniards buying this Victory (notwithstanding the great odds of their Arms) with the loss of most of their Horses, the death of seven of their Men, and the wounding of 80. 3. Cicuick, a small Borough, but the Chief of that Province, four days journey from Tiguez; from whence the whole way unto Quivira, specially so called, being 90 miles; hath in it neither Stone nor Tree, nor any Land mark; insomuch as the Spaniards were fain to make heaps of Cow-dung to serve for their direction in their coming back.

The first discovery of this Country is to be attributed to the diligence of Antonio de Mendoza, Vice-Roy of Mexico, who desirous to get Wealth and Honour by some new Adventures, employed in the Discovery of these Northern parts Fryer Marco de Niza. By him, and by a Negro which he had for his Guide, there was some light gotten of Cibola, the next Province to this; but so disguised in Lies, and wrapt up in Fictions, that that Light was little more than Darknes. Yet by that glimmering, Francisco Vasquez di Coronado, in the year 1542. undertook the Business; and sped so well, that having made his way through Cibola, he took the Town of Tiguez, as we heard before, and laid his way open to Quivira. Moved to a farther journey by the report of the Savages, (who desired to harken him out of their Country) telling him of the Wealth of Tatarax, who reigned in the In-land parts of Quivira, a Bearded Man (those of this Country wearing none) of a white Complexion, and one who in his Chapel worshipped a Cross, and the Queen of Heaven: On went the Spaniards towards Quivira, and found out the Tatarax, a poor naked Prince, Master of no more Treasure than a Brazen Plate hanging on his Breast, and without any such Sign of Christianity as they did expect. So frustrated of all their hopes, and having got nothing but their Labour for their Pains, and the Honour of a new Discovery, with the loss of many of their Men, they returned to Mexico, Anno 1542. Some Fryars made bold to stay behind, but were all slain by the People of Quivira, except only one, who like Jab's Messenger was left to carry the News of the Murders; the Spaniards never after looking into these cold Countries, where nothing else was to be gotten but Blows and Hunger.

2. CIBOLA hath on the North Quivira; on the South and South-east parts, New Galicia; from which divided by the River called Rio del Nord, as before was said; the West-side of it washed with the Mar Vermiglio, interpolated betwixt it, and the Island of California, specially so called. By the Natives it is called Zuni.

The Air hereof indifferently temperate, if not too much subject in the Winter to Frosts and Snows. The Country for the most part level, rarely swelled with Hills, but those very Rocky. No Trees that bear them any Fruit; few Trees at all, except it be a Wood of Cedars, from which abundantly supplied both with Fuel and Timber. Plenty of Maize, and small white Pease, which they make their Bread of; great store of Venison, but they kill it only for the Skin; some quantities of Sheep, known for such by their Fiecces only, but otherwise as big each of them as an Horse, or Oxe, some of their Horns weighing Fifty pounds. Of Lions, Bears, and Tygers, so great a number, that they have more than enough for themselves, and could well spare them to their Neighbours.

The People generally well Limbed, and tall of Stature, ingenious in respect of some other Savages; and though Naked except their Privities only, or covered only with a Mantle, yet those Mantles wrought in divers colours; which, with some quantity of Cotton which they have amongst them, (none of it growing in their Country) shew them to be an industrious Nation, and to maintain a course of Trade with some of their Neighbours. A farther Argument of which, is those painted Skins which they have from Cicuick, or some other Country which lies towards the Ocean, my Author telling, that they travel for them eight days journey towards the North: And probably enough, may be some of those Commodities which the Inhabitants of the Maritime Provinces of Quivira do receive from Cathay, or China, with which they are supposed to Traffick, as before was said. Like industry is noted in the Women also, one of which will grind and knead more Maize in a Day, than the Women of Mexico do in four. In other things not differing from the rest of the Savages.

This Country was first made known to the Spaniards by the Travels of Fryer Marco de Niza, employed on new Discoveries by Antonio de Mendoza, as before was said. Leaving Couliacan, the most Northern Province of Nova Galicia, he overcame a tedious Desert four days journey long; at the end of which he met some People, who told him of a pleasant Country four days journey farther, unto which he went. And staying at a place called Ucapa, he dispatched the Negro, whom he took with him for his Guide, to search towards the North, by whom he was advertised after four days absence, that he had been informed of a large and wealthy Province called Cibola, a Months journey thence; wherein was seven great Cities, under the Government of one Princess, the Houses of which were built of Stone, many Stories high, the Lintels of their Doors adorned with Turquoises; with many other strange Reports of their Markets, Multitudes and Riches. But neither the Fryer nor the Negro had the hap to see it; the Negro being killed on the very Borders, and the Fryer so terrified with the news, that he thought it better to return, and satisfy the Vice-Roy with some handson Fiction, than put himself upon the danger of a farther journey. To that end he enlarged and amplified the Report which the Negro sent him; gave to the Defarts in his way the names of the Kingdoms of Tonteac, and Marata; ascribed unto this last a great City called Abacu, once well inhabited, but at that time destroyed by Wars; to the other a more Civil and well-clothed People than in other places. Inflamed with which Reports, Vasquez de Coronado undertook the Action, but found the Fryer to be a Fryer; nothing of moment true in all his Relations: the Kingdom of Marata to be found only in the Fryer's Brains; Tonteac to be nothing but a great Lake, on whose Banks had once been many Cottages now consumed by Wars. And as for the seven Cities of such Wealth and Bigness, he found them to be seven poor Boroughs, all situate within the compass of four Leagues; which made up that so famous Kingdom which the Fryer dreamt of. The biggest of them held about 500 Cottages; the rest of them not above half that number. One of them, lest he might be said to return without doing something, he besieged and took, but found it such an hot piece of service, that he was twice beaten down with Stones as he scaled the Rampiers: but having taken it at the last, he found in it great plenty of Maize to refresh his Army, and caused the Town, (consisting of 200 Houses, or thereabouts) to be called Granada, for some resemblance which it had to that City in Spain. Such as have since endeavoured the discovery of these North west parts, and sailed along the Shores hereof on Mer Vermiglio, have added hereunto the names of some Points or Promontories, known in the Maps by the names of 1. Porto de S. Clara, not far from the Mouth or Influx of Rio del Noordt. 2. Las Plaias. 3. S. Michael. 4. Rio de Teron. 5. Laques del Oro, bordering on Quivira. And 6. Roy Cornado, on the East of that.

Betwixt this Region and Quivira, specially so called, lieth a Country, which the said Vasquez names Tucayan, memorable for the famous River of Huex; on the Banks whereof, for the space of 20 Leagues, stand 15 Burroughs well built, and furnished with Stoves, (if he hath not in this part of the Story out lied the Fryer) as in other cold but more civil Countreys, against the extremities of Winter. This Region, stretching seven days journey to the River of Cicuick, I reckon to belong to the North-east parts of Cibola: As I do also the fruitful Valley of Aroia de Coraxones, which they passed in their way hither from Couliacan; with the Town and Territory of Chichilticalla, and the Valley of Nuestra Senora, or our Ladies Dale, in the South parts, of it: not knowing otherwise what Province to refer them to.

Proceed we now unto the Island, the other general part of this Division, parted from Cibola and New Galicia by a narrow Sea called Mer Vermiglio, and by some the Gulf of California; environed on all other parts by the Main Ocean. Extended in a great length from the 22 degree of Northern Latitude to the 42, but the breadth not answerable. The most Northern point hereof called Cabo Blanco, of which little memorable. The most Southern, called the Cape of S. Lucas, remarkable for the great Prize there taken from the Spaniards by Captain Carvendish, in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1587. Supposed in former times to have been joyned in the Northern parts of it, above the Latitude of 27, to the rest of the Continent; and so described in most of our later Maps, till the year 1626. and after that in the Chart or Map of John de Late, Anno 1633. which I wonder at; himself affirming, that in many of the old Maps it was made an Island, lib. 6. 1. and that he had seen a fair Map in Parchment, very fair and ancient Draught, Quæ Californiam, in ingentis Insulæ modum à Continente divideret, in which it was expressed for a spacious Island, lib. 6. cap. 17. The reason of the Error was, that those who first endeavoured the discovery of it, sailing up the Sea of Mer Vermiglio, found it to grow narrower and narrower towards the North, till it seemed to be no bigger than some mighty River; but that of such a violent Current, that no Boat was able to pass upwards with Wind or Oar, unless haled up with Cords by the strength of Men. And taking it to be a River, they gave it the name of Rio de Bona Guia, known by that name, and continued in that Opinion of being a River, till the year 1620. or thereabouts. At what time some Adventurers beating on these Coasts, fell accidentally upon a streight, but violent passage, on the North hereof, which brought them with a strong Current into Mer Vermiglio, discovering by that accident, that the Waters falling into that Sea, was not a River, as formerly had been supposed, but a violent breaking in of the Northern Ocean; by consequence, that this part of California was not a Demi-Island, or Peninsula, but a perfect Island. And looking on it as an Island, we have divided it into Nova Albion, and California, specially so called.

And first, 3. CALIFORNIA, specially so called, containeth the Southern parts hereof, as far as to the Latitude of 38. where it bordereth on Nova Albion. Of which Country, though so near to New Spain, and New Galicia, and though discovered so long since, we yet know but little: the Spaniards either wanting Men for new Plantations, or finding small encouragements here to invite them to it. Furnished on the Sea-coasts with great plenty both of Fish and Fowl, which they find in great Islands of Weeds floating on the Seas; and more within the Land, with a kind of Beast haired like a Goat, and with Teats like a Cow, but otherwise resembling Deer, which they kill with their Dogs. Some Mountains in it are said to cast Fire-ashes, which the Spaniards for that reason call Cacofogo. The People are numerous and thick set, insomuch that on the Banks of the supposed River of Bona Guia were numbred three and twenty Nations all of several Languages. In their Persons like the rest of the Savages, but of different Dresses. Some of them painting their Faces all over, some half way only, others with painted Vizards, resembling Faces: Holes in their Nostrils for their Pendant; the tips of their Ears loaded, if not over-loaded with the bones of Fishes hanging at them; a Girdle about their Waste, to which they fasten a bunch of Feathers that hang down behind them like a Tail: the Women using the like Bunches before them also. Their chief God the Sun, (as that of Cibola is the Water) which they most affectionately worship as the cause of the increase of their Fruits and Plants. Joined in Commission with which God, they were taught by Alarcon a Spaniard to worship a wooden Cross (the more irrational Idolatry of the two) which he caused to be erected at his coming away; with instructions to kneel before it every Morning, at the first rising of the Sun: so teaching them to worship their two Idols at once, or translate translate their Devotions from the Sun, a Creature of God to a plain wooden Cross (of which they knew nothing but the form) the work of a Carpenter. It is also told us of this People, that each Family is ordered by the Father of it, without other Government: yet so well managed, that they allowed but one Wife to a Man, and punished Adultery with death: The Maids not suffered to converse or talk with Men before their Marriage, but to abide at home and work: the Widows not to Marry again, till they had mourned at least half a year for the death of their Husbands: Matters more favouring an Utopian Commonwealth, than a Californian.

Places of most observation in it; 1. The Capes of St. Clara, and St. Lucas: the first on the South-east point of the Island, towards new Galicia; the other on the South-West towards Asia. 2. St. Croixes, (Sinus St. Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven near the Cape of St. Clara; so called, because discovered upon Holy-Rood day. 3. Cabo de las Platas, more within the Bay; so named, because the Shore shewed in little Hillocks, without Grass or Shrubs; the Spanish word signifying as much. 4. Cabo Boque, towards the bottom of the Gulf, (from whence the Land on the other side may be easily seen) in the Latitude of 29. 5. St. Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Island of the same name, with some Cottages in it. 6. St. Thome, an Island of 25 Leagues in compass, at the mouth of the Gulf; rising towards the South in an high Mountain, under which is a convenient Road for Shipping, the Sea being thereabouts 25 Fathoms. Then on the other side towards the Sea, we have 7. St. A-bad, a convenient Haven, surrounded with a Country which seemed Rich and Pleasant. 8. Cape Trinidad, a Promontory well known to Seamen. 9. Cape de Cedro, so called from the Cedars growing near it; in the Latitude of 28 and 15 Minutes; with an Island not far off of the same name also. 10. Cape Enganno, in the Latitude of 31. 11. Puebla de las Canoas, so named from the multitude of Boats (by themselves called Canoes) which the People used four degrees more Northward than that Cape. And 12. Cabo de Galera, so named from the resemblance which it had to an Hat, in the Latitude of 26. But these two are placed by John de Laet within the Country of Scyo, one of the Provinces of Quirina Understand here, that these are only the names of Places, not of Towns nor Villages (for whether there be any such I am yet unsatisfied:) and that there are many other Promontories, Bays, Rivers, and Islands on both sides of this Region, which I find no names for.

The first discovery of this Country we owe to Ferdinando Cortez, (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534, furnished out two Ships from the Haven of St. Jago, on the Western Shores of Hispania Nova, to search these Seas: who making some small progress in it, encouraged him the next year to pursue it in Person; and passing up the Gulf, as high as to the River of St. Peter, and St. Paul, (so called, because discovered on the 29th. of June, the Annual Feast of those Apostles) for want of Victuals and other necessary Provisions, he returned back again. The business having slept a while, was in the year 1539. awakened by Francisco de Ulloa, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before; who did not only search to the bottom of the Gulf, but having thoroughly canvassed all the Eastern Shores, he turned his course, and made as fortunate a Discovery also of the Western Coasts. Landing, he took possession of the Country, with the wonted Ceremonies, for the King of Spain; and in the place set up a Cross to serve as a Remembrance of his being there. After him followed Ferdinando de Alarcon, who discovered many Leagues up the course of the supposed River of Buena Guia; where Naguacatus, one of the Chiefs of their Clans or Tribes, did submit unto him: advancing so far towards the North, that at the last he heard news of Cibola; but was unprovided at that time for a Journey thither. And on the other side, Roderico Cabrillo, in the year 1642. coasting along the Western Shores of this Country, discovered two small Islands beyond Cape Galera; the one of which he called St. Luke's, and the other the Island of Possession, and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinia. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver, and hungry Honour yielding but a poor Subsistence; the farther search of these Countreys was quite laid aside, almost as little known now, as before Columbus first set sail upon new Discoveries. About the year 1680. The Spaniards sent a Colony to settle at the South end of California, who could give no great Account of the Place, more than the Customs and Manners of the People, of which enough has been said by the Author.

4. NOVA ALBION, formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but some part of this Island; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and so Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Discovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1577. and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England his own Country, which was once called Albion.

The Country is abundantly replenished with Herds of Deer, grazing upon the Hills by Thousands: as also with a kind of Conies, in their Feet somewhat like a Wombat, and on each side a Sack, where they keep such Victuals as they cannot eat. The Flesh of these Conies serves the People for Food; and of their Skins the Kings or Chief of their several Tribes make their Royal Robes. The Men go quite naked, the Women with a piece of Matt instead of an Apron; Chaste, and Obedient to their Husbands. Their Houses made of Turf and Osier, so wrought together, as serves to keep them from the cold: in the midst whereof they have an Hearth where they make Fire, about which they lie along upon Beds of Bulrushes. What Towns they have, or whether they have any or not, and by what Names called, if they have any, must be referred to a farther Discovery; there being nothing to that purpose delivered hitherto. And yet not seated so far North, but that it may be capable of a farther Light, if any Noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The English were no sooner landed, but the Inhabitants presented themselves before the General with Presents of Feathers, and Cauls of Network made of Bull rushes; which he received, and requited with great Humanity. The news of their arrival being carried farther, one of their Kings thought fit to bestow a visit on them: A Person of a goodly stature, attired in Cony-Skins, with many Tall Men attending on him, one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged Three Crowns, with as many Chains; the Chains of Bone, but the Crowns of Knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniously composed. After him followed many of the common sort, every one having his Face painted white, black, and some other Colours; and every one with some Present or other in their Hands, even the very Boys. Being brought into the General's Presence, the Mace-bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not understood: and that being ended, the King caused the Crown to be put upon the General's Head, and the three Chains about his Neck; the common People offering Sacrifices about the Field in great Solemnity. Not to be interdicted those Superstitions, though the English (whom they took for Gods) seemed to be offended at them. Finally, after much kindness expressed on both sides, the General promising in the name of the Queen of England to take them into his Protection, he caused a Pillar to be erected in the Place; on which he fastned the Arms of England, the Queen's Name, and his own; and so returned unto his Ships; but the Country lying so far off, that no benefit could redound by it to the English Nation, but the honour of the first Discovery; the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at last quite left out of the Maps or Charts; only a Point or Promontory, by the name of Po. de Francisco Draco, being left unto us to preserve his Memory. And though we have caused the name of Nova Albion to be restored unto the Maps, as it was before; yet we must let the Reader know, that the name of New Albion hath been given lately with as much Propriety, but more hopes of Profit and Advantage, to that part of Virginia which lieth betwixt Mary-land and New-England, as before was noted.

Opposite to Cape Blanco, and the extream North parts of Amerita, the supposed Kingdom of ANIAN, from whence the Streights of Anian, which are thought by some to part America from Asia, do derive their Name, is conceived to lie. Supposed, and supposed only, for not certainly known: the very being of such a Kingdom, and such Streights, being much suspected.

O F

NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the East and South with Nova Hispania, or New Spain; on the West, with Mer Vermiglio, better known heretofore by the names of the River Buena Gusa, and the Gulf of California; the Countries beyond it on the North-East not fully discovered hitherto. So called because of some resemblance which it was thought to have to Gallicia, a Province of Spain in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for distinction-sake.

It is situate between the 18 and 20 degrees of the Northern Latitude, which measured from the Port of the Nativity; (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Nawidad) where it confineth on New Spain, to the most Northern border of Cinaloa, makes 300 Leagues; the breadth hereof, for so much as is possessed by the Spaniards, being but an hundred only. But taking in New Biscay, and Nova Mexicana, into the Account, the breadth will be greater than the length.

The Air hereof is generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat than cold; many times subject unto Thunders, and great Storms of Rain, in June, July and August, and at all times to Earthquakes; in the rest of the year the Air is serene, but for the most part of so found a Constitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old Age; contagious Diseases seldom known amongst them. The Ground by consequence somewhat of the driest, if not moistened with the morning Dews, which fall very frequently, and no way Marshy; about Christmas 'tis subject to gentle Frosts, but very healthful. And whether by the temperature of the Air, or Soil, apt to produce a kind of Gnat, (which the Latines call Cimices) affirmed to be as big as a Bean, which by their stings do very often plague the People, and raise Blisters on their Bodies as big as Walnuts.

The Country more mountainous than plain, and in most parts sandy. Quarries of Stone in many places, but little Marble, or any other Stone of value. Good store of Mines of Brass and Silver, few of Gold or Iron; and amongst all their Metals a great mixture of Lead. The Soil so rich, that it yields 60 Measures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, above two hundred: The Rivers plentiful of Fish, and the Woods of Beasts: Great store of Bees without stings, which make their Honey in the Forests without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figs, Malacatons, and other European Fruits, they thrive better here than they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive; of which the last is most an end undermined by Embers; and the first thrusts out such a Harvest of Leaves, occasioned by the natural rankness of the ground, that they seldom come to their perfection. But this in time will be effectually cured as these Trees come to maturity, those Trees which natural grow very fast, not bearing Fruit till they have done growing. This was observed of the Olives of Greece also when they were first planted there, but afterwards the depauperating the Soil cured it.

The People are wavering and inconstant, apt upon any discontent to forsake their Houses, betake themselves unto the Woods, and many times to return to their ancient Barbarism; crafty, and docile even in matters which concern Religion; but slothful and impatient of any labour, to which not to be hired but for very great wages.

Much given to Singing, Dancing, and sometimes to Drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquor, few of them would betake themselves to the cares of Husbandry. When the Spaniards settled here they were exceeding wild and fierce, and not easily reduced from eating Man's flesh. Of Stature reasonable tall; their Garments for the most part a Shirt of Cotton, with a Mantle over it, fastned with two Buckles about their shoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatness of their several Tribes: Those Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who succeed hereditarily; but subject to the Judges, and other Officers, of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themselves generally to Merchandize, and the search of Metals; some few to Husbandry and Grazing, but make not the best use which they might of the Country: For tho' here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes and of Cochineel, yet they neglect to refine the one, or to attend the ordering of the other, finding perhaps an easier or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

The Mountain of most note in all this Country is that betwixt Guadalaajara and Zacatecas; a League in height, but of such a Precipice withal, that no Horse nor Cattle can ascend it: their other Hills rocky, but clothed with Woods full of vast Pines, large Oaks, and great store of Wolves. The River of most name is that called Bazania, which, rising out of the Lake of Mechuacan in Nova Hispania, falls down a Cataract about four Leagues from Guadalaajara of ten Fathoms deep, and so tumbleth into Mare del Zur: in no place Fordable, nor having any passage over it but on Reeds and Rafts, on which the Passenger sitteth with his commodities, his Horse swimming by; not safe at any time, and at most times dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20, some of 12 Leagues compass, environed with rich Pastures on every side. Those of less note shall be remembered in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of, 1. Cinaloa. 2. Couliacan. 3. Xalisco. And, 4. Guadalaajara, on the Western Shores. 5. Zacatecas. 6. New Biscay. 7. Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all these somewhat shall be said, though of each but little.

1. CINALOA is the most Northern Province of Nova Galicia, bounded upon the West with the supposed River of Buena Gusa, and some part of the Bay of California; on the East, with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepefcan; on the North, with the South parts of Cibola; on the South with Couliacan.

The Air for the most part clear and healthy, the Soil fat and fruitful, productive of Maize, Pulse, a sort of long Pease, which the Latines call Phascoli, but we have no Proper English name for; of which abundantly plentiful. Great store of Cotton-wool, wherewith both Sexes are apparelled. Well watered with the Rivers; 1. Petatlan. 2. Tarahochala. 3. Paschua. 4. Taquim; of no long course, all of them rising from the Hills of Tepefcan, and those but 36 Leagues distant from the Sea-shores. By reason of these Rivers, here are very rich Pastures, which breed great store of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattle.

The People are generally tall, higher than the Spaniards by an hand-breadth, warlike and strong; not conquered by the Spaniard without great difficulty; their Arms a Bow and poisoned Arrows, with great maffy Clubs. Their Garments for the most part of Cotton-wooll; their Hair nourished to a great length, which the Men tie up in a Knot, but the Women suffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes, at the first coming of the Spaniards thither, without Cloaths at all, but to hide their shame; most miserable poor; worshippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongst them.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Philip and Jacob, situate on the Bank of a River, about 42 Leagues from the Town of Couliacan, but of no great note. 2. S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards, Planted here long since, and re-inforced by a Supply brought thither in the year 1554, by Francisco de Tharra; scarce able to defend themselves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon disturb them with a fresh alarm. Besides these, here are only some scattered Villages, and those not many: the Spaniards finding only 25 old Forts in all the Countrey, when they first made themselves Masters of it, under the Conduct of Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People every-where submitting without any resistance; or, if they gathered to an Head, soon dispersed again. For what could naked Men do against an Army?

2. COULLICAN, or CULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coasting along the Bay of California, which it hath on the West, and part of New Biscay on the East, and the Purple Sea to the South and West, within the Jurisdiction of the Governour of Guadalaxara; the Countrey well provided of Fruits, inferiour unto none for all sorts of Provisions, and not without some Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Rio des Mucheras, or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; so called, because the Spaniards found there more Women than Men, occasioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons. 2. Rio de Sal, a goodly River, both sides whereof are very well Peopled. 3. Piaftla, more towards Xalisco.

The People not much different from the rest of Gallicia; save that their Women were more handsome, both for Dress and Personage; all cloathed in Garments of Cotton Wooll, when first known to the Spaniards; and yet the Men not free from the sin of Sodom. Their Houses neatly thatched with Straw, and over the Lintels of the Doors some Paintings, as shameless as the very foulest of Aretine's Postures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted to their cost with Silver, which they are compelled to dig and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Piaftla, on the River so called, about a days Journey from the Sea, well built, and artificially contrived in respect of others; never recovered of that blow that it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conquest of this Country wasted all before them. 2. Quinola near Rio de Mucheras. 3. Quatrabarríos, an old Town, but new named by the Spaniards, because it consisted of four parts. 4. El Leon, an old Burrough, which from a Lion there found had this new name also. 5. Couliacan, on a River so named, once the chief of this Province. 6. S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nonnez de Guzman, in the Latitude of 25, but afterwards deserted, or removed rather to a siter Place, and now fixed in the Valley of Harroba, two Leagues from the Sea, in a flourishing and wealthy Soil both of Corn and Pasturage. The whole Countrey conquered by the Spaniards, Anno 1531, under Nonnez de Guzman, most barbarously burning down the Towns, and destroying the People; as if they came not to subdue, but root out the Nation.

3. XALISCO, or GALESCO, as some Writers call it, hath on the North Couliacan; on the South, New Spain; on the East, the Province of Guadalaiaara; on the West, the large Bay of California: So called from Xalisco, the chief Town of it, when subdued by the Spaniards.

The Soil hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good store of, but not often. Herbage good for Cattel, which is reckoned for their greatest want. The North parts called Chiametla, of the two most fruitful, and better Peopled, having in it store of Wax and Honey, with some Mines of Silver. The People formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrel; from which reformed since their Conversion to the Gospel. Tenacious still of one of their ancient Customs, which is, to carry the smallest Burthen upon their Shoulders, and not under their Arms; which to do, they think very much misbecoming.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. St. Sebastians. 2. Rio de Spiritu Santo; and the great and famous River of Barania, spoken of before. Upon the Banks of which are situate their most principal Towns, viz. 1. Xalisco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierre de Xalisco, thrusting it self into the Bay of California, over-against the Islands called The Three Maries; the City taken and destroyed by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1530. 2. Compostella, now the chief City of the Country, and a Bishop's See, founded by the said Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1531, when he had fully conquered the Country; by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Santo. But founded in so ill a place, and so bad an Air, destitute both of Food for Men, and Grass for Horses, as plainly shewing him to have better judgment in souldiery than in Architecture. This City is 100 Miles from Guadalaiaara to the West, and not far from the South Sea. In 1570, the Bishop removed his See from this City to Guadalaiaara, by reason of the great Thunder and Lightning. 3. Purification, a small Borough on the Sea-side, and in the extremity of this Country towards Nova Hispania, near the Port of Natividad. 4. S. Sebastian in Chiametla, on the River so called, first built by Francisco de Tharra above-mentioned; who having found hereabouts some rich Mines of Silver, brought hither in the year 1554, a new Spanish Colony, and building Houses for his Miners in convenient places, occasioned the whole Tract to be called de Tharra.

4. GUADALAIARA hath on the West Xilisco; on the East and South, by Mechoan, a Province of Nova Hispania; on the North, the Province of Zacatecas, well watered with the River Barania, which runneth through the midst thereof, some of his by-streams moistening the other parts. The Country very wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentiful of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat, and such other Fruits as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the People we have before, applied in general to all the Natives of New Gallicia, but most peculiar unto these.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Guadalaiaara, so called with reference to a Town of that name in New Castle, and giving name unto the Province, situate on the Banks of the River Barania, or some branch thereof, in a sweet Air, and a most rich and pleasing Soil; there founded by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1531, when he had perfected his Conquest: better advised in the choice of the place, then in that of Compostella before-mentioned. A City of so good esteem, that it passeth for the Metropolis of all New Gallicia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the Residence of the Kings Treasurers, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Compostella, Anno 1570, and the Seat of the Parliament or Courts of Justice, of this Province. Beautified on this last occasion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciscans, and another of Augustine Friers. It is 40 Leagues distant from the South Sea, and 80 from Mexico to the West. 2. Del Spiritu Santo, built by the said Nonnez in that part of this Country which is called Tepique; but not not esse observable. 3. Santo Maria de los Lagos, built by the same Founder, 30 Leagues on the East of Guadalajara; and the best defence of all this Province against the Chichimecas, a barbarous and untamed People on the North and East parts of this Country, who harbouring themselves in the thickest of the Woods, and some unknown Caves, do many times prey upon the Country; which they would utterly destroy, if they were not thus repressed.

5. ZACATECAS is bounded on the South with Guadalajara; on the North, with New Biscay; on the West, with Calisco, and some part of Xalisco; on the East, with Panuco, one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Country is of a different nature. In the West parts, called properly Los Zacatecas, rich in Mines of Silver (no one Province more) but destitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other Provisions; as if it were designed for some wealthier Miler, who could live upon the sight of Treasure. The Eastern parts, properly called Uxitipa, not so well furnished with Silver, but most abundantly provided with all sorts of Fruits; their Woods replenished with Deer, their Fields with Corn, and every Tree giving Entertainment to some Bird or other: In a word, nothing wanting in it either for Necessity or Pleasure. Of the People I find nothing singular, but that they are affirmed to be more industrious than the most of their Neighbours; whether by force or nature, (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-Mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Los Zacatecas, neighbored by most wealthy Mines, 40 Leagues on the North of Guadalajara; inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciscans. 2. S. Martins, 27 Leagues from Zacatecas, the Mines whereof were first opened by Francisco de Tharra, before-mentioned; who with many Slaves, and all things necessary for a War, was sent upon that Errand by Lewis de Velasco, then Viceroy of Mexico, Anno 1554. The Town inhabited by a Colony of 400 Spaniards, besides Women and Children. 3. S. Lukas, and, 4. De Avinnon, built amongst Mines as wealthy as those before, by the same De Tharra: As also was, 5. Erena a small Town, but of the same Estate for Silver, distant from Zacatecas 25 Leagues towards the North-west. 6. Nombre di Dios, in the most Northern parts of this Country, 68 Leagues from Guadalajara, the foundation of the same De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quiered them, after some Rebellions, by gentle usage, built this Town in a pleasant and fruitful Soil; and having got the Government of the Countries which he had discovered, drew hither so many of the Spaniards, and chief Men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of some silver Mines, that it became the chief and best peopled Town of all this Province. 7. Durango, in the Valley of Guadiana, about 8 Leagues distant from Nombre di Dios, Peopled by a Colony of Spaniards, conducted thither by Alonso Pachico, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this Treasure. 8. Xeres de Frontera, first built for the repressing of some of the Savages, who use to infest the Borders towards Guadalajara, during the Regency of the Marquis of Villa Maurique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for UXITIPA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco, subdued by Lopez de Mendoza, employed therein by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1529, at that time Governour of that Province; dismembred from it since the Conquest of Zacatecas, and made a Member of the Prefecture of New Galicia. The chief Town of it is called S. Lewis, built in a pleasant Valley by the said Pachico, and by him Peopled with a Colony of Spaniards; the Town not distant from Panuco above 20 Leagues.

6. NOVA BISCALIA, or New Biscay, hath on the South

Los Zacatecas; on the West, Cinaloa; on the North, Nova Mexicana; the Countries towards the East not discovered hitherto. So called by Francisco de Tharra, by whom first subdued, from the near Neighbourhood which it had unto Nova Galicia, of which it hath been always since reckoned for a part.

The Country is subject in the Winter to great Frosts and Snows; but notwithstanding, well provided of all things necessary, and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have also some of Lead, which serve very fitly for the melting and purifying of the other; used to this purpose not alone in these Mines of New Biscay, but in those also of New Spain. The People resolute and stout, not conquered at the first Attempt, nor won so much by Force, as by fair Persuasions.

Places of most observation in it, 1. S. Barbara, and, 2. S. John's, about three Leagues distant; built only for the benefit of the Mines adjoining. 3. Ende, the farthest Town which the Spaniards have towards the North, of whom a Colony was there planted (by reason of the adjoining Mines) by Roderico del Rio, who did also fortify it by the direction of De Tharra, under whom a Colonel. Distant from S. Barbara and S. John's about 20 Leagues, and 120 Leagues from Los Zacatecas. More North by 70 Leagues at least, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniards, are said to be those four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Ciengas; but I have nothing of them certain.

This Country was first subdued by Francisco de Tharra, who after he had built Durango, in the North parts of Los Zacatecas, and assured that Province, advanced with a Troop of 130 Horse for the Discovery and Conquest of his Northern Neighbours. Encountred at the first more with hunger and thirst, than with any opposition of the Inhabitants; insomuch, that they were fain to eat their Horses: and afterwards, by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greatest part of such Horses as were left uneaten. But not discourag'd herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his Passage through the Woods by the Swords of his Soldiers, he prevailed at last; and having settled it in peace, returned by the way of Cinaloa, which he also conquered, and planted there a Colony in the Town of S. John's, as was said before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA is bounded on the South with New Biscay; on the West, with Quivira; the Countries on the North and East, not discovered hitherto, tho' some extend it Eastwards as far as Florida. Extended 250 Leagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that, none can tell; the Relations of this Country being so uncertain, and indeed incredulous, that I dare say nothing positively of the Soil or People, but much less of the Towns and Cities which are said to be in it. So named by Antonio de Espejo, a Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom discovered and subdued.

For first, they tell us of the People, that they are of great Stature, and that like enough; but not so probable that they have the Art of dressing Chamois, and other Leather, as well as the best Leather-dresser in all Flanders: or that they have Shoes and Boots so well sewed and soled, that no Shoe-maker in all St. Martins could do it better. Then for their Towns, that they are very fair and goodly, the Houses well-built of Lime and Stone, some of them four Stories, and in most of them Stoves for the Winter-season. The Streets even, and ordered in an excellent manner. Particularly, they tell us of a Town called, 1. Cbia, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cuames, which is said to contain eight Market-places, and all the Houses to be plaistered and painted in most curious manner. 2. Of Acoma, that is situate on the top of a Rock, a great Town yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a pair of stairs, but exceeding narrow, hewn out of the Rock, exceedingly well fortified by Nature, (they say true in that, if any things are true which they tell us of it) and all their Water kept in Cisterns, (but no body can tell from whence they have it.)

3. Of Combas, on a Lake so called, the City seven leagues long, two broad; (a second Ninive) but the Houses scatteringly built amongst Hills and Gardens, which take up a great deal of the Room: Inhabited by a People of such strength and courage, that the Spaniards only faced it, and so went away. Much of this stuff I could afford you, but by this taste we may conjecture of the rest of the Feast.

The Country was first discovered by Augustino Royoz, a Franciscan Frier, Anno 1580. who out of zeal to plant the Gospel in the North, accompanied with two other Friers of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Savages, the Souldiers play'd the Poltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Beltram, a Frier of the same Order (from whose mouth we must have the former Fictions) desirous to preserve the Lives of his Fellows which staid behind, encouraged one Antonio de Espeio, a Native of Corduba, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in such an holy Cause: who raising a Band of 150 Horse, accompanied with many Slaves and Beasts of Carriage, undertook the business. I omit the many Nations of the Conchi, Pasagates, Tobosi, Patarabyes, Tarrabumares, Tepoanes, and many others as hard names, which he passed through in his way. But coming at the last to a great River which he called Del Noerdt, there he made a stand; caused the Country on both sides of it to be called Nova Mexicana, and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, situate in the 37 degree of Northern Latitude, and distant from Old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name since changed to that of S. Foy, but still the Metropolis of that Province, the Residence of the Governour, and a pretty Garrison, consisting of 250 Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming hither, viz. 2. Socorro, so called by the Spaniards, because that of Succour & Relief they found there for their halt-starved Bodies. 3. Senecu, 4. Pilabo, and 5. Seviletta; old Towns, but new Christened by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Gospel; each of them beautified with a Church. 6. St. Johns, built afterwards in the year 1599. by John de Onmate, who with an Army of five thousand followed the same way which Espeio went, and having got a great deal of Treasure, laid it up in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance. This is the most I dare rely on for this Country. And this hath no such Wonders in it, but what an easie Faith may give credit to: Though I had rather believe the Frier's whole Relations, then go thither to disprove any Part thereof.

NOVA HISPANIA.

NOVA HISPANIA is bounded on the East with a fair and large Arm of the Sea, called the Bay of New Spain, and the Gulf of Mexico; on the West, with parts of Nova Galicia, and Mare del Zur; on the North with the rest of New Galicia, some part of Florida, and the Gulf; on the South with Mare del Zur, or the South-Sea only. So called with relation to Spain in Europe, as the chief Province of that Empire in this New World; with reference to which the Kings of Spain call themselves Reges Hispaniarum, in the plural number. It contains all that space of Land between the North and the South Sea, and between the Terra firma, and the streight of Panama to the East, and Florida to the West; which by the Indians was called Anahuac; that is, the Land by the Water.

It extendeth from the 15 degree of Latitude to the 26 exclusively, i. e. measuring it on the East-side by the Bay of Mexico to the North of Panuco; but six degrees less measuring it on the West-side to the Port of Natividad, where it joyneth with Gallicia Nova. Or making our account by Miles, it is in breadth from Panuco unto Mare del Zur, 200 Spanish Leagues, or 600 Italian miles; but hardly half as much on the other side. The length hereof, from the East point of Jucatan, to the borders of Gallicia Nova, 1200 Italian miles, or 40 leagues; which is just double to the breadth.

The Air exceeding temperate, though situate wholly under the Torrid Zone, the heats thereof much qualified by those cooling Blasts which fan it from the Sea on three sides of it; and by those frequent Showers which fall continually in June, July, and August, the hottest seasons of the year. Abundantly enriched with inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, some of Brasse and Iron, plenty of Coco-

Nuts, of which we have spoken before; great store of Cassia; such a wonderful increace of Cochineel, that 5670 Arrobas of it (each Arroba containing 25 Bushels of our English measure) have been shipped for Europe in one year. Where by the way, this Cochineel groweth on a small Tree or shrub having very thick Leaves, which they call a Tuna; planted and ordered by them as the French do their Vines: out of the Seed whereof ariseth a small Worm, at first no bigger than a Flea, and the greatest not much bigger than our common Lady-Cows, which they much resemble; which feeding on the Leaves, and over-spreading all the ground in which they are, are gathered by the Natives twice a year, stifled with Ashes, or with Water, (but this last the best) dried to a powder in the shade, and so transported into Europe. Here is also great plenty of Wheat, Barley, Pulse of all sorts, and of all such Plants and Roots as we set in gardens for the Kitchen; Pomegranates, Oranges, Limons, Citrons, Malacatons, Figs, and Cherries, even to superfluity; Apples and Pears in less abundance; few Grapes, and those few they have, not fit for Wine; plenty of Maize, and other Plants unknown in Europe; Birds and Beasts wild and tame of all sorts, and of each no scarcity. Not thus in all places of it, nor in all alike; but some in one, some in another, according to the constitution of the Soil and Air: which is so different in this Country, that in such parts hereof as are hot and dry their Seed-time is in April or May, their harvest in October; but in such places of it as are low and moist, they sow their Corn in October, and reap in May: thus having two Harvests in a year, and yet but one. This Kingdom had Kings of its own, from the year 1322 to 1520; about two years before which time, Francis Cortez, a Spaniard, entred this Kingdom with 11 Ships and 550 Men; by help of which, he Sack'd the the Town of Pontonchon, and defeated by his Cannon and Horse 40000 naked Indians, who came to revenge this Injury; by which he got such Footing in that Kingdom, that in the year 1531 he took the City of Mexico, August the 13th, and put an end to this Indian Empire.

The People more ingenious than the rest of the Savages, exquisite at some Mechanick Arts, especially in the making of their Feather Pictures; and so industrious withal, so patient both of Thirst and Hunger, that they will sit at it an whole day without meat or drink; turning every Feather to the light, upwards and downwards, every way to see in which posture it will best fit the place intended to it. No better Goldsmiths in the World, nor men more expert any where in refining Metals; curious in painting upon Cotton whatsoever was presented to the Eye. But yet so barbarous withal, that they thought the Gods were pleased with the blood of men, which sometimes they sacrificed unto them. So ignorant, that when they first saw the Spaniards on Horse-back, they thought the Horse and Man to have been one Creature; and would ask what the Horses said, when they heard them neigh. So careless of the worth of Gold, that they would part with great quantities of it for Knives, Glass Beads, little Bells, and such petty Trifles. But whatsoever they once were, is not now material: The Spaniards having made such havock of this wretched People, that in 17 years they destroyed above six millions of them, roasting some, plucking out the Eyes of others, consuming them in their Mines, and mercilessly casting them amongst wild Beasts, where they were devoured. As for those who do remain, besides their own natural ingenuities, they have since learned the Civilities and Arts of Europe. What else concerns this Soil and People, we shall shew more particularly, if we find it necessary in their proper places.

Amongst the Rarities of this Country, (though there be many Plants in it of a singular nature) I reckon that which they call Magney, or Meth, said to be one of the principal: a Tree which they both plant and dress, as we do our Vines. It hath in it 40 kind of leaves fit for several uses. For when they be tender, they make of them Con-ferves, Paper, Flax, Mantles, Mats, Shoes, Girdles, and Cordage: upon them there grow certain Prickles so strong and sharp, that the People use them instead of Saws. From the top of the Tree cometh a Juice like Syrup; which, if you seeth it, will become Honey; if purified, Sugar: they may make also Wine and Vinegar of it. The Bark of it roasted maketh a good Plaister for Hurts and Sores; and from the highest of the Boughs comes a kind of Gum; which is a sovereign Antidote against Poysons.

Nor is it a less Rarity, though less useful to the good of Mankind (except it be to keep them in continual mind of the Fires of Hell) that they have a Mountain in this Country called Propocampeche, (situate in the Province of Mexico) which vomiteth Flames of Fire like Aetna: and another in the Province of Guanaxaca, which sendeth forth two burning streams, the one of red Pitch, and the other of black; a fit resemblance of those Fountains of Fire and Brimstone. Though they have many other Mountains yet these are most Memorable. The Vulcano's dispersed here and there on the Globes of the Earth, are of great use to Mankind, because they spend and vent those fiery Vapours and Exhalations; which gathering in the Cavern's below, are the cause of Earth quakes; and but these Vents, would be much more frequent and destructive than now they are. And of this we have had both ancient and late Examples in the Countries that are better known to us. And as for Rivers, though very well provided of that watery Commodity; yet here are none remarkable for length or greatness, but Panuco only, of which more presently. The want thereof supplied by some famous Lakes, and the Neighbourhood of the Gulf of Mexico. Amongst the Lake, the principal are those of Mexico, (whereof more anon) and that of Chapala, bordering upon Gallicia Nova; which for its greatness hath the name of Mare Chapalicum, out of which there is made yearly great abundance of Salt. But that which is of greatest beauty in the Gulf of Mexico, the greatest and goodliest of the World: in form compleatly Circular, its compass no less then 900 miles; environed with the main Land, the Peninsulas of Florida and Jucatan, and the Isle of Cuba. Two only passages in and out: the one betwixt the point of Jucatan and the Isle of Cuba, where the Tide with a violent Current entrencheth; the other betwixt the said Island and the Cape of Florida, where it makes as violent an Exit: the Sea so heady in the midst, and yet safe enough that ships are not to sail in it directly forwards, but must bend either towards the North or South, as their Journey lieth. Upon this Gulf the King of Spain hath always some Ships in readiness, by which he more assureth his Estates in this part of America, than by all his Garrisons. As indeed without a Fleet of ships, it is utterly impossible to guard these Passes; they being about 40 English League broad, nor perhaps with a Fleet, because the Current both in and out is so Rapid; so that few Buccaners of late times have been able to confute all the pretended strength of these Passes; and to shew all that will venture at it, may pass there without restraint: But it is here as in the Ocean, the slow Sailer, and weaker Fleet must yield to the stronger. The Spanish Ships when such attack, when otherwise are in their turn forced to retreat. This weakness of the Spaniards in the Bay of Mexico, is grown upon them since the Author wrote; and therefore is not so much to be attributed to him as a fault, as to the change of the times. The Reader may by the way observe, he Divides this great Bosome of the Ocean, encompassed to the East with Islands; and to the South, West, and North, with the Continent of America into two great Gulfs or Bays, That of Mexico to the North; and that of Hondura to the South; called also by the Spaniards, Mar del Nora; in which lieth Jamaica, now in a great degree the Mistress of it.

It comprehendeth the Provinces of 1. Panuco, 2. Mechuacban, 3. Mexicana, 4. Tlascala, 5. Guanaxaca, 6. Jucatan. Some others of less note but reduced to these.

1. PANUCO, the most Northern Province of all New Spain, by some called Guaftecan, is bounded on the East with the Gulf of Mexico; on the West with Uxitapa, a Member of the Province of Zacatecas in new Gallicia; on the North with Florida and some Countries not yet discovered, from which parted by the River of Palms; on the South-west, with Mechuacan; and on the South with Mexicana. So called from Panuco the chief River of it, which rising out of the Hills of Tepecuan, bordering upon Cinacoua and Couliacan, and dividing New Biscay from the Province of Zacatecas, passeth through the middle of this Country, and so at last into the Gulf.

The length hereof is reckoned to be 50 Leagues, and the breadth as much. Divided into three Provinces. That towards Mexicana, called Aiotuxetlan, of a fruitful Soil, and not without some Mines of Gold; once very populous till in the year 1522, dispeopled in a manner by Ferdinando Cortez in his War against them. The other called Chila, less fruitful, but possibly for want of people to improve the Land: for being formerly of a stout courageous nature, and trusting overmuch to their Fens and Fastnesses, they put the Spaniards to such trouble when they warred upon them, that the Conquerors, to secure themselves from all future dangers, endeavoured to root them out, and destroy them utterly. The third lieth towards the River of Palms, inclined to barrenness, and unpleasant, but the name I find not.

Chief Towns hereof, at the coming of the Spaniards hither. 1. Las Caxas, 2. Yxcuyan, 3. Nachapatan, 4. Taquimite, quinte, 5. Tuxeteca, desolate and laid waste by the cruel Spaniards. Of most note now. 6. Tanebipa, and 7. Tameclipa, two small Burroughs in the Province of the River of Palms, (for so I call it) inhabited by the Natives only. 8. S. Kallap, another small Town, but in the Province of Chila, inhabited by a few Christians with a Convent of Augustinian Friars: sacked by the Savages in the year 1571. 9. Tampice, or S. Lewis de Tampice, a Colony of the Spaniards situate on the North Banks of the River Panuco, and at the very mouth thereof; where it hath a very large Haven, but so barred with Sands, that no Ship of great burthen can make use of it: the River otherwise so deep that Vessels of 500 Tun might sail 60 Leagues at least in it against the Stream. 10. S. Stevan del Puerto, on the Southern side of that River, in the Latitude of 23. about 65 Leagues on the North of Mexico, from the Sea eight Leagues; now the Metropolis, and Town of greatest Trade in all this Country. Built by Ferdinando Cortez in the place where formerly had stood Panuco, once the chief City of the Province, but by him destroyed. Opposite hereunto, on the other side of the River lie great store of Salt-Pits, out of which the people of this Town raise their greatest profit. In the year 1572 it had but Ten Christian Inhabitants, and one Priest; and was much oppressed by the most Numerous Indians. 11. S. Jago de los Valles, or S. James in the Vallies, 25 Leagues Westward (but inclining to the South withal) from S. Stevan del Puerto; situate in an open Country, and therefore fenced about with a Wall of Earth: To the Inhabitants whereof (all Spaniards, as in that before) the King of Spain hath granted many fair possessions, to defend those parts (then being the borders of his Estates) against the Savages.

This Country first attempted by Francisco Garai, but the Conquest of it finished by Cortez, as before is said: each striving, as it seemeth, who should most delace it, and be enrolled for the greatest Man slayer of the two. But having carried on the course of their Victories almost as far as to the River of Palms, they desisted there; either because already glutted with humane Blood, or that the conquest of those parts would not quit the charge. Inasmuch as in all that Country, from the River of Palms to the Cape of Florida, though lying all along on the Gulf of Mexico, the Spaniards have not one foot of ground secure enough, because it lieth all along that Gulf, that no other Nation can possess it. How much soever of Probability this might seem to English men to have, when this Author Wrote, viz. 1630. yet since that by the great Trade and perpetual Navigation which we have to Jamaica and Barbadoes, it is known now, that the Spaniards cannot hinder the setting of Colonies upon the Coast of Florida: as I believe, it is not their Interest to do it: And we are already possessed of the right of the Countries, out of which these Rivers arise to 29 degrees of Latitude; which will also include the falls of a great many of them, as parts of Carolina

2. MECHOACHAN hath on the North-East Panuco; on the East, Mexicana, on the South part of Tlascala; on the west, the main Ocean; and on the North, the Province of Xalisco in New Galicia. So called from the abundance of Fish, which their Lakes and Rivers did afford them; the word in their own Language signifying Locum Piscis, or a Country of Fish.

The breadth hereof on the Sea-coast is 80 Leagues, in the borders towards Mexicana but sixty only. The length I find not yet agreed on. Bled with an Air so sound and sweet, that sick Folks come hither out of other Countries to recover their Health. Well stored with Rivers, some Lakes, innumerable Springs of Running Water, and here and there some hot Baths issuing from the Rocks. The Soil so plentifully productive of all sorts of Grain, (even to admiration) that in some parts hereof four measures of Seed have brought forth 600 measures of the same Grain in the following Harvest. Well wooded, and by reason of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Pastures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all America for Medicinal Herbs and Plants, of every sovereign nature for the Good of Mankind. It affordeth also store of Amber, Mulberry-Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and such other things as chiefly serve for Pomp and Pleasure.

The People tall of Stature, but strong and active; of a good Wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They speak four Languages of their own, but that most generally used is by the Spaniards called the Tarascan Tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious Language, yet most of them speak the Spanish also. More pliant to the Manners and Apparel of that Nation, than the rest of New Spain, (the Mexicans excepted only;) and so inclinable to the Gospel, that they are almost all gained from their old Idolatries. Inasmuch that the whole Country being divided into fifty Parishes, every Parish hath its several Priests and inferior Ministers, who in the Language of the place, do instruct the people in which they preach to them, and hear their Confessions; besides many Convents of Dominicans and of Augustine Friars.

It containeth in it upwards of 150 Towns or Burroughs, besides scattering Villages; ninety of which have Free Schools in them, and almost every one a Spittle for relief of the Sick. The Principal thereof, 1. Zinzoutza, the Seat of the old Kings of Mechuacan; in the first Times of Christianity in this Country made a Bishop's See, till removed to Pascuar. The first Bishop Nasquez de Quiroga, 2. Pascuar, of no great note at present, but that the Bishop's See was removed thither because nearer to Mexico; from which distant 47 Leagues. 3. Valladolid, now the chief City of this Province, and the Bishop's See, removed hither from Pascuar, and here finally settled in a Fair Cathedral, Anno 1544. situate near a large Lake, (said to be bigger than that of Mexico) which doth not only afford the City great store of Fish, but yieldeth them the opportunity of several pleasures, which they take in Boats upon the Water. The Lake and City by the Natives called Guayangareo. The Fish that is taken here, is sold to the Provinces near the Lake, to the great enriching the Inhabitants. Laet. p. 268. 4. S. Michael, in the way from Mexico (from which distant about 40 Leagues) to the Silver Mines of Zacatecas. First built by Lewis de Velasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the People of this Province from the Chichimechas, a barbarous and hitherto an unconquered People, who terribly molest the Nations upon whom they border. 5. S. Philips, built at the same time by the said Velasco. 6. Conception de Saylaa, 17 Leagues from Valladolid, 35 from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez, the Vice-Roy, Anno 1570. to be a Stage for Travellers in their Journeys Northwards. 7. Guaxanato, bordering on Panuco, and not far from S. Jago de Los Valles, rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea we have, 8. Acatlan, on the borders of New Galicia, two miles from the Ocean; a Town of not above 30 Houses, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and safe Road for Shipping, (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it seldom without the company of Sailors. 9. Natividad (or Portus Nativitatis) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly set sail to the Philippine Islands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Cavendish in his Circumnavigation of the World. 10. S. Jago, (or S. Jago de Buena Esperanza) a little on the South of Natividad, the Shores whereof are said to be full of Pearls. 11. Colima, ten Leagues from the Sea, but more South than the other; built in the year 1522. by Gonzalvo de Sandoval. 12. Zacatula, by the Spaniards called Conception; situate on the Banks of a large (but nameless) River, which rising about the City of Tlascala, passeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards, hither was a distinct Kingdom of it self, not subject nor subordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were most of the Princes of these parts: the Frontiers of the Kingdom fenced with Stakes of Wood like a Palizado, to hinder any sudden Incurtion of the Mexican Forces. The last King, called Tangaywan Bimbycha, submitted of his own accord to Cortez, Anno 1522. and willingly offered himself to Baptism. But the Spaniards were not pleased with either, because deprived thereby of the Spoil of the Country. But at last, Nonnez de Guzman, then President of the Courts of Justice in Mexico, picked a Quarrel with him, accused him falsely (as is said by the very Spaniards) of some practices against his King, burnt him alive with most barbarous and unheard-of Cruelty, and so confiscated his Estate.

2. MEXICANA is bound on the East with the Gulf of New Spain; on the West, with Mechuacan; on the North with Panuco; and some part of Nova Galicia; on the South, with Tlascala, and part of the Southern Sea. So called from Alexico, the Chief City, not of this Province only, but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, measuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130 Leagues; thence growing narrower, in the midland parts hardly above sixty; and on the Shores of Mare del Zur not above seventeen. The length hereof extendeth from one Sea to the other; that is to say, from the Point of Lobos in the Province of Papantln, on the Gulf of Mexico, to the Haven of Acapulca on the Southern Ocean: but the determinate number of Miles I do not where find. But measuring it from 17 degrees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22, and allowing something for the slope, we may conclude it to be much of the same length as it is in breadth, that is to say, about one hundred and thirty Leagues.

The Country is inferior to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical and Ingenious Arts which are here Professed, and in the abundance of Fruits and Cattle: of which last here is such store, that many a private man hath 40000 Kine and Oxen to himself. Fish is here also in great plenty; that only which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico standeth, being reported worth 20000 Crowns yearly to the King's Exchequer. The People for the most part witty and industrious, full of Valour and Courage: good Handicraftsmen, if they stoop so low as to Trades and Manufactures; rich Merchants, if they give themselves to more gainful Traffick; and hardy Souldiers, if trained up and employed in service. Their Ancient Arms were Slings and Arrows; since the coming of the Spaniards practised on the Hurquebuse. In a word, what was said before of New Spain in general, as to the Soil and People of it most applicable to this.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Los Topes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlascala. 2. Citala, and 3. Mitla, both running Eastward towards the Gulf. 4. Papagato, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco; with a fair Bridge over it. 5. Las Balsas, of a violent Course and in bigness equal unto Tagus in Spain; passable only by a Bridge made of Ralls and Reeds, not very strongly joyned together. 6. The River of S. Francis, both large and swift, but in some parts fordable. Mountains of note I find not any which require a more particular consideration; and so pass them over the more easily.

Towns of most note in it, 1. Mexico, the Seat of an Archbishop, and of the Spanish Vice-Roy, who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give Directions, and determine Controversies; unless it be in such great Causes which are thought fit to be referred to the Council of Spain. This City was first situate in the Lakes and Islands, like Venice; every where interlaced with the pleasant Currents of Fresh and Sea-Waters; and carrying a face of more Civil Government then any of America though nothing if compared with Europe. The Inhabitants pretend it was built in the year 1322; but the Spaniards by the Current and Thread of their Story, say, it was built in Year 902. It was many Ages since, the Royal Seats of the Kings of Mexico, and had then a great and splendid Palace, called in their Tongue the Cepac. But the Town being August 13. 1521. destroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on the firm Land on the edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and spacious Plain; and made the Capital of all his Conquests. Streets are great, straight and beautiful. Its Churches Magnificent, and its publick buildings Noble. It has an Aqueduct three Miles long, and many Monasteries. Jehn de Turre Cremita, our Country Man Mr. Gage, and some others, have given large Accounts of this Noble City, which is the greatest in America. It has no Walls, Forts, Bastions, nor any Cannon, or defence whatsoever, but what the number of its Inhabitants afford, which is a part of the Spanish Jealousie, for fear a Vice roy should set up for himself. In the Year 1527. Pope Clement the VII. made it a Bishops See. In the Year 1547 Paul the III. made it an Arch-Bishops See; in which Year Cortez the Conquerour of it Died. In 1551 it was made a University by Charles the V. The Plain on which it bordereth is said to be 70 Leagues in compass, environed with high Hills, on the tops whereof the Snow lieth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the least of them forty miles in circuit, the one salt, and the other fresh: each of them alternately ebbing and flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the salt Lake standeth the City of Mexico, with many other goodly Towns and stately Houses: on which Lake also 5000 Whearies are continually plying. The Town in compass is six miles, and containeth 6000 Houses of Spaniards, and 60000 Indians. It is a by-word, That at Mexico there are four fair things; viz. The Women, the Apparel, the Houses, and the Streets. Here is also a Printing-House, an University, and a Mint, the Cathedral Church, Ten Convents of Nuns, several Houses of Jesuits, Dominicans, Franciscans, Augustinians, and other Religious Orders; some Colledges, many Spittles and Hospitals, and other publick buildings of great state and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently call'd Temistitan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occasion, of which more hereafter. Most miserably endamaged by the breaking in of the Waters, September the 21. Anno 1629. which swelled so high, that they not only overwhelmed the meaner Houses, but the Vice Roy's Palace; drowned many thousands of the People, and destroyed the Household-stuff of the rest. Occasioned by the Avarice of the Kings Ministers, who had inverted the Money to their private use, which should have fortified the Banks. But being a rich and wealthy City it soon recovered of that Blow, attained in short time to such infinite Riches, that generally the Merchants, Trades-Men and Artificers, do brave it in a greater State and more splendid Equipage than any People under Heaven of the like condition. In the Year 1555. Thompson, an English Man, estimated the Inhabitants that were Spaniards at 1500 Families; but the Indians in the Suburbs were then thought to be above 300000 Souls. It is seated 65 Leagues from the North Sea, and 75 from the South Sea. It was then increasing, being seated in a temperate Air, and a fruitful Soil, and abounding with all things needful to the Life of Man, at cheap rates. Hacklutt, To. 3. p. 454. In 1572 the Families were estimated at 50000; about 6000 of which were Spaniards. ib. 463. It is very subject to Earthquakes, well Watered, and enjoying plenty of all things. There is no way to the City but over three Causeways on the North, West, and South sides, the latter of which is the longest. There are also two Lakes of Water, called by the name of this City; one of which is fresh water, and Seven Leagues long, and Six broad; the other is salt Water, and is 40 Leagues in Compass.

When

When Cortez rebuilt this City, there were 100000 Houses rebuilt mostly by the Indians, in the latter end of the former Century, there were 4000 Spanish Inhabitants, and 30000 Indians; but in the Year 1625, the Spaniards were estimated at, between 30 and 40000, and the Indians are so consumed by hard usage, and the work of the Lake, that they were not thought above 2000 mere Indians, and 1000 Mestizos. It is the greatest and one of the richest Cities in the World; enjoying a vast Trade on the South Sea to China; and the East Indies, and on the Atlantick to Europe, but then it is the weakest, all Arms are forgotten, and the Spaniards live so securely, that there is neither Gate, nor Wall, Bulwark, Platform, Tower, Armory, Ammunition, or Ordnance, to secure it from a Domestick or a Foreign Enemy, but they rely on the Protection of St. John de Ulbuack their Patron St. for all, as Mr. Gage assureth us who saw it. It has however about 15000 Coaches for Pleasure, and a Magazine of Wealth, that will both tempt a Conquerour and reward him too. 2. Texcuco, situate on the same Lake, but six Leagues from Mexico; heretofore twice as big as Sevil; and for the beauty of the Streets, and elegancy of the Houses, not inferiour to any. Served with fresh Water from the Hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though seated on the brink of a salt Lake 3. Quitlavaca, built wholly in the Lake, like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela; a City of 2000 Households: the way unto it over a Causey made of Flints, half a League long, and about twenty Spans in breadth. 4. Uztacpalapa, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of fresh Water, and a beautiful Fountain. A City of 10000 Households, six Leagues from Texcuco, and two from Mexico. 5. Mixicalzingo, a Burrough of 4000, and 6. Cuyocan, one of 6000 Families; both upon the Lake: beautified in the Times of their Paganism with many Temples, so gorgeously set out to the Eye, that a far off they seemed of Silver; most of them now converted into Monasteries and Religious Houses. 7. Chulula, the fairest of all the Lake, scarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for state and bigness: said to contain 20000 Families, and to be beautified with so many Temples, that their Turrets equalled the number of the days of the year. The People so addicted unto their Idolatries, & so barbarous in their bloody and beastly Sacrifices, that no fewer then 6000 Infants of both Sexes were yearly murdered on their Altars. 8. Mestiland, seated on an high Hill, begirt about with most pleasant Groves and shady Woods. A Town of about 30000 Inhabitants, the Villages about the Hill being reckoned in: situate 14 Leagues or two days Journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Panuco, the Highway on both sides set with fruitful Trees, to the great comfort and refreshment of the way-faring Men. 9. Clantimoleper, twenty Leagues from Mestiland, a Mannor to which 40000 of the Natives do owe Suit and Service. 10. Antepeque, on the South of the City of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Propopampeche; a Town belonging to the Marquels of Valla, and seated in the most delicious place of all New Spain. 11. Acachicba, on the North east of Mexico, betwixt it and the Gulf, bordering on the Province of Pepantla. 12. Acapulco, an Haven-Town of the South-sea, situate on a safe & capacious Bay, at the entrance of it a league broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations & Docks for shipping: so that it is accounted the safest Haven of all those Seas. At the bottom of it towards the West stands the Town and Castle, the Castle opportunely seated on a little Foreland, both to command the Town and secure the Port: well walled, and fortified with four very strong bulwarks, on which are planted good store of Ordnance; the Garrisons consisting ordinarily of 400 Souldiers: strengthened the rather in regard of the usual intercourse which is betwixt this Port and the Phillippine Islands. When an English Man Travelled this Road in 1603. the Town was not great. The Dutch entered this Port in 1615. 1624. and forced the Spaniards to a Composition, Laet.

The original Inhabitants of this Country (as far at least as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecas, now the most rude and barbarous Savages of these parts; together with the Ottomies, somewhat more civil than the rest, but yet rude enough. By these possessed till about the year 902, as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquished and disseized by some new Comers, whom they called by one Name Nawatlacos: issuing, as it is conceived, from those parts of Gallicia Nova, which are now called Nova Mexicana, Anno 720, or thereabouts, but lingering in their March, and waiting all the Countries as they lay before them. Of these there were seven Tribes in all, i. e. the Sachimilci, the Chalca, the Tepaneca, the Culva, the Tlafluci, the Tlascalteca; all of them settled in these parts, and the five first about the Lake, before the coming in of the seventh Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, so called from Mexi, their chief Captain; who much delighted with the situation and conveniences of Temistlan, then a ruined Town, caused it to be re-built and beautified by the name of Mexico. This Town from that time forwards was reputed the Head City of their Common-wealth; the six Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of those Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Aristocratical manner. But weary at the last of this equal power, which the prevalency of some Tribes had made very unequal; the Mexicans one of the weakest of the Tribes, oppressed by the rest, resolved to separate themselves, and to commit the ordering of their Affairs to a King of their own at first elected by themselves, but afterwards, when once they had conquered most of the other Tribes, the choice was entrusted unto six, one for every Tribe, (the Tlascalteca, which was the seventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlascala, governing themselves long before as a State apart: Who in their choice had an especial eye on those which were strong and active, and fit for Military employments; the People holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their King, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Polity and Institutes of this Mexican Kingdom I forbear to write of, farther then as they lie before me in way of their Story, digested by the Government and succession of their several Kings, whose names and actions do occur in the following Catalogue of

A. Ch. The Kings of MEXICO.

|------|---|
| 1322 | 1. Acamapitzli , Nephew to the Kings of Couliacan , but of the Mexican blood by the Fathers side, elected for the first King; who joyned Couliacan and Tongancan unto his Estate, and settled that Kingdom at his death in the way of election. |
| 1373 | 2. Vizovitzli , Son of Acamapitzli , subdued the Tribe of the Sachimilchi , and others of the neighbouring Nations. |
| 1394 | 3. Huizilbuiel , Son of Vizovitzli , conquered the Tribes of the Chalca and Culva , with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants. |
| 1415 | 4. Chimalpupuca , Son of Huizilbuiel , won the Town of Tequixfuiac , and reduced the rebellious Chalca under his Command. |
| 1425 | 5. Ischoalt , Brother of Huizilbuiel , by the Valour of his Cousin Tlacaellec , freed himself from the yoke of the Tepaneca , to whom the Mexicans had before that been Tributaries, and added their Dominions unto his Estate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whose death the Electors by a joynt consent chose Tlacaellec for their King |

King, as a man of whole Vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refused it, saying, that it was more convenient for the Common wealth that another should be King, and that he should execute that which was for the necessity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back: and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the Publick, as well as if he were. Upon this generous refusal they made choice of Motecuma the first.

- 1438 6. Motecuma, one of the Brothers of Chimalpuuca, brought in the Custom of using no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of such Prisoners as the new King should first take in the Wars. By the Valour and good Fortune of Tlacaelle he subdued so many of the Nations (whose names I hold unnecessary to be here repeated) that he extended his Estate from one Sea to the other.
- 1467 7. Axayacaci, the Nephew of Isechalt by his Son Teco somoliquito, enlarged his Empire by the Conquest of Tetentepeque 200 miles from Mexico, to fit himself with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlaxcalco, who rebelled against him, to so hard a freight, that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple.
- 1479 8. Ticocatzitzi, the son of Axayacaci, added twelve Cities with their Territories to the Mexican Empire.
- 1484 9. Abucosom, Brother of Ticocatzitzi, extended his borders to Guatemala, repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico, and brought thither a Channel of fresh Water.
- 1502 10. Motecuma II. Son of Axayacaci, before his Coronation conquered 44 Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian should bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18. year of his Reign was subdued by Cortez.

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards stand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medelline, a Town of Extremadura, 1485. and in the nineteenth year of his Age imployed himself in the Trade and business of America; for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clerk unto the Treasurer for the Isle of Cuba; where he husbanded his affairs so well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in short time he was able to put in 2000 Castellans for his stock, as Partner with Andrew de Duero, a wealthy Merchant. Grown richer, he was taken to be a Partner with James Valesques, in the Discovery of Tabasco and the parts near Fucutan, Anno 1518. And now resolved to venture all his stock both of Friends and Money, he furnished himself with eleven Ships, and with 550 Men, set sail from Spain, and arrived at the Island of Acusamil, (now called Santa Cruz) and sailing up the River of Tabasco, sacked the Town of Pontoonchon, the Inhabitants refusing to sell him Victuals. After this by the help of his Horse and Ordnance, he discomfited 40000 of the naked Savages, gathered together to revenge themselves for the sack of that Town; and received the King thereof in Vassallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Westward he should meet with some Mines of Gold, he turned his course for the Haven of S. John de Ulloa; where landing he was entertained by Tendilla, Governour of the Town and Country for the King of Mexico: who understanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of so great an Emperour, (of which Tendilla had informed him by special Messengers) sent him many rich Presents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the sight hereof, he resolved to go unto the place where such Treasures were, took possession of the Country in the name of Charles the fifth King of Spain and Emperour of the Indies. He first sent la Herrera, but in his Expedition he perished. After this more than 400 Foot, 100 Horse, and six pieces of Ordnance, he pursued his Journey; by private means he understood to be invited to the Town of Cholula (a Town of 10000 Inhabitants) to his March kindly received into the Town by the highest Honour, he caused to acknowledge himself a Vassal to Spain, and to present him, in the name of a Tribute, with so much Treasure as amounted to 100000 Castellans of Gold. A Quarrel growing not long after, Motecuma, the Emperour King was by one of his own Subjects killed in a Tumult; and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. He aided with the whole Forces of Tlaxcalm, and a Recruit of more Spaniards (sent thither on a Design against him) he made up an Army of 10000 Savages, 1000 Spanish Foot, 80 Horse, 17 pieces of Ordnance; and having with great diligence made ready a Navy of 12 Gallies, and 6000 Canoes or Boats, laid siege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a Siege of three months the City is taken sacked and burnt August 13. 1521. But afterwards rebuilt more beautifully than it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hand of the Spaniards, by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventure; endowed for that good service by Charles the fifth with the Town and Territory of Tecoatepecque, in the Province of Guaxaca, and many other fair Estates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the Title of Marquis of Valia.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are said to have worn a Crown resembling that which is now used by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation was held with great Pomp, but most bloody Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almost infinite, raised out of all Commodities, and paid in kind, whether Natural, or Artificial only: the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and sharing with them in their wealth: some paying in Cups full of powder of Gold, of two handfuls apiece; some Diadems, and Beads of Gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turquoise-stones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pictures, &c. not to say any thing of matters of inferior value. All which in such a wealthy and large Estate, must needs afford him a Revenue equal to the greatest Monarch. And for the encouragement of his Souldiers and Men of War, there were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at least such distinctions of personal merit as had resemblance to such orders:) the first distinguished by a Red Ribband, the second called the Lion or Tiger Knight, and the third the Grey Knight: all privileged amongst other things to be clothed in Cotton, wear Breeches to adorn themselves with Gold and Silver, and to have Vellies gilt or painted; high points, and not permitted unto any else. But it is time that I proceed to the rest of the Provinces.

4. T L A S C A L A lieth betwixt Mexicana and Guaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred leagues; the breadth along the Shores of the Gulf reckoned 80 Leagues, on the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their Bread of; the word in that Language signifying Locum Panis, or the Place of Bread, the same with Bethlehem in the Hebrew.

The Country is very plentiful both of Corn and Cattel, full of rich Pastures, and wonderfully stored with Maize; Level and Plain, except towards the Sea, where occurreth a large Chain of craggy Mountains. The richer in the fruits of Nature for those fair and pleasant Rivers wherewith it is watered. The principal of which, is Rio de Grijalva, so called from John de Grijalva, who first discovered it; imployed herein by James Valesques, the advancer of Cortez. 2. Rio de Zempoal, so called from the Town of Zempoallan, about which it riseth. 3. Zabuate, which makes it way through the Chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Gulf. 4. Rio di Zacatula, a River of the longest course in all this Province; rising near Tlascala, and falling many leagues off into Mare del Zur. The people much of the same nature with those of Mexico, though upon jealousies of State their most bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good use to advance their Conquests on that Kingdom.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tlascala it self, which gave name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Common-wealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate in a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, and in the middle of a large, but pleasant Plain, 60 miles in compass. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hither, that it contained 300000 Inhabitants, now scarce 50000. It had four Streets, (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of War: and in the midst a Market place so fair and spacious, that 30000 persons might assemble in it to buy and sell, or for any other business. The Inhabitants of this City, being the ancient Enemies of the Mexicans, joyned with Cortez, and enabled him to take Mexico, and he obtained from Charles the V. that they should never pay any Tribute, except to the King of Spain; which was a Sheaf of Wheat for every Person, which amounteth to above 13000 Bushels the Year. The Spaniards have fixed here a Bishops See, and extended the bounds of the Diocels from Sea to Sea 100 Leagues. This City is a very great Mart of Cattle, Cochineel, and all Indian and Spanish Merchandise. But the Bishops See in the year 1550, was removed to Puebla de los Angeles. 2. Pueblos de los Angeles, (the City of Angels) but most commonly Angelos: built by Sebastian Remirez, Anno 1531. in the way from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, from which last 22 leagues distant. A Bishop's See, and thought to contain in it 1500 Families, in 1555. it consisted of about 600 Spanish Families, being seated in a pleasant and a fruitful Soile. 5. Hackluit To. 3. p. 453. In 1568. it had 1000 Spanish Inhabitants. This City was built by the Spaniards after the Conquest of New Spain, ib. 456. It lies four Leagues North from Taxala. ib. 3. Zempoallan, on the River so named, the Inhabitants whereof did great service to Ferdinando Cortez, in his Conquest of Mexico. 4. Napuluca, of great resort for a Fair of Cattle; and such a kind of Court for ordering the Trade thereof, as we call the Pie powders. 5. Guaxocingo, a pleasant and well-peopled Town, situate at the foot of the burning Mountain, before mentioned, by the ashes and embers whereof the Fields are many times annoyed. 6. Segura, or Segula de la Frontera, in the Region of Tepeac, built by Cortez the next year after the Conquest of Mexico, with fair streets and handsom Houses; by whom peopled with Spaniards. This Town lies in the Road from Vera Cruz to Mexico; consisting of about 2000 Inhabitants; part Spaniards, part Indians. It was called before Tepeacac. The Inhabitants being all slain by Cortez, for Sacrificing Twelve of his Men, and eating their Flesh. It is plentifully supplied with all necessaries and yields plenty of Grapes; but the Spaniards will suffer no Wine to be made, to keep the Indians in subjection to Spain, Gage. Last. placeth it Lat. 11. 48. 7. Vera Cruz, the first Town built in this Country by the said Cortez, now a Bishops See: situate near unto the Gulf, and a great Thorough-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which it is distant about 60 Leagues. Seated upon a Plain, and washed on the South by a River, on the East by the Sea. In 1555. it had about 300 Families, and was only used as a Store-house, for the Goods passing to and fro between Mexico and Spain. The Air being very unwholesom, and subject to burning Agues, and other Distempers, so that many of the Seamen died here. Hackluit T. 3. p. 453. Vera Cruz, is the same with Villa Rica 16. p. 455. It is only Inhabited from the end of August to the beginning of April, for the discharging and loading of the Goods; and then all the Merchants retire to Xalapa, or some other more healthful place, so that none of that Nation are delivered in the Town. This has kept it small and poor, though the greatest Wealth passes through it of any place in the World, Ibid. 456. 8. S. John de Ulloa, the most noted Port of all this Province; tenced with a Peer against the fury both of Winds and Sea; defended naturally by Rocks and Quick-sands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both sides of the entrance. This lyes in the Gulf of Mexico in the North Lat. of 18. 30. in a small Island, but in an unwholesom Air. The entrance of the Harbour is by three Channels; the best of which lyeth to the North. This Harbour is the best they have, but very much exposed to the violence of the North Wind, so that many Ships perish in it. The Spaniards had here no Defence, till John Hawkins an English Captain took it, upon which in 1572 they built a strong Fort here to preserve the Town. Five Leagues from the North lyes Vera Cruz, Hackluit T. 2. p. 462. 9. Medellin, built by Cortez, Anno 1525. and planted with Spaniards: so called in memory of a Town of the same name in Extremadura, in which he was born: situate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlascalans were originally one of the seven Tribes which drove the Chichimeca's out of their possessions: and either finding no room left for them on the banks of the Lake, or else willing to subsist alone, withdrew themselves from the rest, founded the City of Tlascala, and there erected a Democratical Estate. Stomached for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by those of Mexico, after they had subdued the rest, they still maintained themselves against all Attempts; and in the end assisted Cortez in the destruction of that Kingdom they so deadly hated. Priviledged for that reason by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of Tribute, (except it be a Sheaf of Wheat for every person) and suffered to live under his Protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name, is said to contain 200 good Towns and Burroughs, 1000 Villages and upwards; and in them 15000 of the Natives, besides Spanish Colonies, distributed into 36 Classes or Rural Deanries for Ecclesiastical Government, in which are thought to be 30 Convents and Religious Houses.

5. GUAXACA, is bounded on the West with Tlascala, on the East with Jucutan and Chiapa, one of the Provinces of Guatemala; on the North, with the Bay of Mexico; and on the South, with Mare del Zur. Extended on the South-sea to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to 50 only: in breadth from Sea to Sea, where it bordereth on Tlascala, 120 leagues; not above 60 where it confineth on Chiapa. So called from Guaxaca, once the Chief Town of these parts, now named Antequera.

The Air hereof is very sound and sweet, and the Soil as fruitful; plentiful not only of those Commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Country, but of such quantities of Silks, and store of Mulberries, that if the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue, would suffice to endow five Bishopricks, as good as that which they have already. Scarce any River of this Country but hath Sands of Gold: such plenty of Cochineel, (a rich Grain used in dying Scarlets, of which before) as also of Cassia, Gold, Silver, and other Metals; that if the People did but add some industry to the wealth of the Country, they might be the richest men in all America. But being naturally slothful, and impatient of labour, they lose all opportunities of gathering riches, and live but from hand to mouth, as we use to say. Docile enough, and so indulgent unto those who take pains to teach them, that here here are reckoned 120 Convents of Dominican Friars, besides other Schools: these last conceived the greater number.

It is subdivided into many particular Provinces, (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds;) as 1. Misteca, 2. Tutopeque, 3. Zapoteca, 4. Guazacoalco, 5. Gueztaxatla, and the 6. Vale of Guaxaca, this last most memorable, in that it gave the Title of Marquess de Valle to the famous Cortez. It is a Bishops See, fair and beautiful: seated 60 Leagues from Mexico to the South in a pleasant Valley. It has no manner of Defence, but is an open Town, like the rest of their Inland Towns. And in 1626. it had about 2000 Inhabitants. The Air is temperate; the Soile very rich; and it enjoys so commodious a Trade, both with the South Sea, and the Atlantick Ocean, by the Port of St. John de Ulbuck, that no City was then in a more thriving State. Mr. Gage who saw this Town in 1626 was so pleased with it, that he would fain have lived here if he might. Towns of most observation, 1. Tiozopotlan, once the chief Town of Zapoteca; and the seat of their King. 2. Cuortlavaca, of great note for a Labyrinth nor far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3. Antequer, in the Valley of Guaxaca, a stately City and beautified with a fair Cathedral; as that is with Marble pillars of great height and thicknes. It is 80 Leagues from Mexico; which in 1535 was made a Bishops See, under the Arch Bishop of Mexico, by Pope Paul the III. It stands in the Road that leads from Chiapa to Guatemala, on a small River that ariseth near Cimulan. Once it was inhabited by 500 Spanish Families, as Herrex said: but Cbilton an English Man in the year 1570. found not above 50 Spanish Families, and the rest Indians, Laet. p. 262. 4. S. Iulionso in the Province of Zapoteca. 5. S. Jago, in the Valley of Nexapa, seated upon a lofty Hill. 6. Del Spiritu Santo, distant about three leagues from the shores of the Gulf, in the Province of Guazacoalco; the foundation of Gonsalvo de Sandoval, Anno 1526. It was built by Cortez, in the year 1522. to curb the Barbarous Indian Nations in those parts. 7. Aguatulco, or Guatulco, a noted and convenient Port on the South Sea, much used by those which trade from Peru to Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern Seas. By consequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpose both by Drake and Cavendish, in their Voyages about the World. This Town lyes upon the Mar del Zur; and has a very good Harbour. In the year 1587. it was taken by Tho. Cavendish without resistance; though it had then 100 Houses, and burnt down to the Ground, Lat. 15. 40. North of the Line. It has a Church and a Custom house, and is one of the most considerable Towns in New Spain. 8. Tacoantepeque, a Port of the same Sea also, but of far less Note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650. inhabited by 150000 of the Natives liable to Tribute, besides Women and Persons under Age; not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6. JUCUTAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Island, is fastened to the Continent only where it meeteth with Guaxaca, the farthest point of it opposite to the Isle of Cuba. Discovered first by Fernandes de Cordova, imployed therein by Don Christopher Morante, Anno 1517. and called Jucutan, not as some conceit it, from Jotlan the son of Heber, who they think came out of the East, where the Scripture placeth him, (Gen. 10. 30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucutan, which in the Language of the Country signifieth, What say you? For when the Spaniards at their first coming hither asked the name of the place, the Savages, not understanding what they meant, replied, Jucutan, that is, What say you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compass of it, taking the Province of Tabasco into the account, is said to be 900 miles, or 300 Leagues.

The Air hot, and the Country destitute of Rivers; not otherwise provided of Water but by Pits and Trenches, which abundantly supply that want. Sufficiently barren, the Soil not bearing Wheat, or any European Fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Nor have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal to enrich the people; who must either live by Trades and Labour or else beg their Bread. Nothing remarkable in the Country, but that here seemed to be some remnants of Christianity at the Spaniards first coming hither: the people constantly observing a kind of Baptism, which they call in their own Language a second birth expelling by that word a Regeneration; not suffering any one to marry until so initiated. And possible enough it is, that this may be the Country upon which Madoc ap Owen fell; who though he might by some good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he should make any such second Voyage hither as is said in their Chronicles, I by no means grant. There is vast Foundations of Stone buildings; though they have no Iron, nor any other Metals whatsoever. They never contracted Matrimony before they were Baptized, and fasted three days before admitted to it: but they had nothing of Christianity besides this Ceremony, without any Form of words; so that it was nothing but a shadow of Baptism. They have now a plenty of European Cattle brought in by the Spaniards. Mountains running from East to West divide it into two parts, the North part is very Populous, because better watered, and cold by the Breezes; but those that live on the Mountains are most healthful and live longest.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Merida, almost in the Navel of it, situate in the 20 degrees of Latitude, the ordinary seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop: distant from the Sea on each side about twelve Leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought to have some resemblance. 2. Valladolid, 30 Leagues from Merida, beautified with a most sumptuous Monastery of Franciscan Friars. 4. Campeche, (or Francisco, as the Spaniards call it) situate on the Shore of the Gulf. A Town, when first known to the Spaniards, of 3000 Houses, and beautified with such Monuments of Art and Industry, as shewed there was somewhat in this People which was not barbarous: since that more observable for being suddenly surpris'd by Parker, an English Captain, An. 1596, who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the Town and many Prisoners; besides a great Ship full of Gold, Silver, and other the like precious Commodities, designed for the King of Spain's own use. 4. Tabasco, situate in the best part of this Country, so different from all the rest, that it is made by some a distinct Province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nuestra Señora de la Victoria, most commonly Victoria only; and that in memory of the first fortunate Victory which Cortez had upon this People, arming themselves against him for the Sacking of Pontouchan. Laet. bounds it thus, To the East saith he, it hath Yucatan, of which it is a district, to the West Guazacoalco; to the South the Mountains of Chiapa, and Vera Paz; and to the North the Gulf of Mexico; on this side it is 40 Leagues, and as much from North to South: but it is Triangular and not Square. The Soil is plain and Marshy, full of Lakes and other Rivers, in which are plenty of Fish, and some very large. It has also great Woods. The Air is very moist, and subject for Nine Months to great and frequent Rains, which with the heat generates many Gnats and other troublesome Insects: but then it has plenty of Cattle, Maize, and Coco Nuts, Vines, Figs, and Oranges, Planted here by the Natives, but brought from Spain, &c. The Inhabitants were very numerous, but now they are much abated. The Spaniards live only in Tabasco, which is from Ciudad Real 70 Leagues to the East; from Mexico 160. to the South East. It stands upon a branch of the River Orizaba 8 Fathom deep, iiiiii 2 into into which many other Rivers and Torrents do fall. 5. Pontonchan, sacked by Cortez, for denying to supply him with Victuals. 6. Salamanca, so called with reference to a Town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coast of this Country lie many Islands, viz. 1. La Zarza, 2. Desconocida, 3. Triangulus, 4. Vermeia, 5. Los Negrillos, 6. Los Alacranes; all within the Gulf. Without it, 7. Zaratan, 8. Pantoia, 9. Lamany, 10. De Mucheres, or the Isle of Women, 11. Coxamul, by some called Acusamul. This last the biggest, is 15 Leagues long, 5 broad; and the most remarkable, as being the usual way which the Spaniards travelled in their Discoveries of this Country from the Isle of Cuba. For here first landed Ferdinando de Corduba, An. 1517. who passing over to Jucutan (but four Leagues distant) brought back nothing but Stripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grijalva, in the same pursuit; who passing by Jucutan to the Province of Guaxaca, left his name behind him to a River. And finally here landed the most fortunate Cortez, who coasting about the Demi-Island, landed near Tabasco, and there first handelled his good fortune with a notable victory. Yet neither the Island nor Peninsula were discovered perfectly till the year 1527. when both were subdued by Francisco de Madeteio to the Crown of Spain. The Island is now called Sancta Crux.

The Inhabitants have two Customs, viz. That of Humane Sacrifices, and that of Governing themselves in the Form of a Common wealth or Aristocrasie; which strongly perswade me that they are a Phœnician or Carthaginian Colony; which is in part Confirmed by their Tradition, that they are Advene, and Conquerors of the Province. Their Buildings, Cities, Living, every thing shew they are of a very different Original from the rest of the Americans. And it is also reported some Books were found in their Temples, not understood by them, and burnt by the Spaniards only for that cause. Now though their Transmigration is pleased too near our times to be of that Nation; yet that may well have happened for want of Chronologie, and Books to preserve the Memory of it, and keep up the true distance of time; the length of the time may also have very much changed their Language, from what it originally was. However, this may be, no man can shew any place on the Globe where Humane Sacrifices, and a Common-wealth has been found, (this excepted) but it is apparent, the Phœnician Colonies had been there, and I think no other Reason can be assigned why these had both contrary to the Practices of all the rest of America but this.

O F

G U A T I M A L A.

GUATIMALA, is bounded on the North by Jucutan and the Gulf of Honduras; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the East, (or the South-east rather) with Castella Area; on the West, with New Spain. Extended 300 Leagues in length, upon the Coast of Mare del Zur; but measuring by a strait line, not above 240. the breadth thereof 140 leagues where broadest; in most places narrower. So called from Guatimala the chief Province; as that from the prime City of it, honoured with the seat of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice. It yields plenty of Maize, Wheat, Cotton, and Coco-Nuts, which is their principal Merchandize. This Country was Conquered by Petro Alvaredo a Spaniard in the year 1524, Laet. p. 332.

The nature of the Soil and People (if differing in any material thing from those before) we will consider in the View of those several parts into which this Country is divided. The Principal whereof, 1. Chiapa, 2. Verapaz, 3. Guatimala, specially so called, 4. Honduras, 5. Nicaragua, 6. Veragua. The rest of less note easily reduced to these.

1. CHIAPA hath on the West New Spain; on the East, Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucutan; and Mare del Zur on the South. Extended 40 leagues in length, not much less in breadth; and anciently inhabited by four Nations all of several Languages.

The Soil not very natural for Corn or Fruits, though Pot-hearbs brought from Spain thrive well, as do Beans and Lentiles; yet Vines and other richer Fruits seldom come to good. Wood-Vines they have, which yield a very pleasant Pulp, and, if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their Trees most of them greater than in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypress; whole Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not so big as those of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Rosin, some such precious Gums as in other places are not usual; and some there are whose leaves being dried unto a powder, afford a sovereign Plaister for exulcerate Sores. And they have need too often to make use of these Plaisters, the Country being full of Snakes and other venomous Creatures, (some of the Snakes no less than 20 foot in length) whose poison being strong and deadly, doth require such help. Of the People nothing singular that I have met with, but that they are more musical and exact in Painting than the rest of the Natives.

Towns of most note in it, 1. Ciudad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Country of the Chiapenser, at the foot of an Hill; situate in a round Plain, encompassed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre; afterwards made a Bishops See, and Priviledged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by such City-Magistrates as they call Alcaldes. 2. Chiapa, in a Vale adjoining; before the building of the others of most note in this Province, yet still before it in regard of its situation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, than all the rest of the Country. 3. Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zoaques, Possessed of 25 Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monastery of Dominican Friars. 4. Capanavatzla, the principal Town of twenty five which the Quelenes held in this Tract; remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the same Dominicans. 5. S. Bartholomew, another Town in the Territory of the same Quelenes; near which is said to be a great Pit, or opening of the Earth, into which if any man cast a stone, though never so little, there presently followeth a loud and fearful noise like a clap of Thunder. 6. Guevetlan, built by Pedro de Alvarado when he was Governour of these parts; the Chief Town of a little Province called Soconusco. 7. Casapualca, a small Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the Fields adjoining, the Waters whereof are noted to rise and fall as the Ocean doth flow or ebb, and at equal distances of time. Of thirteen Townships which the Zeltules were possessed, I find no one named; though painted all of them, and set forth to the Eye of the Traveller, with Cochineel, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon the Rarities of Nature, I cannot but take notice (though somewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which turns Wood to Stones: of a Spring in the Cantred of Tafixa, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry, of another in the same Cantred, which for one three years, though it rain never so little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and so successively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many lesser streams, is swallowed up near a Village of the Chirapenses, called Ostutan, never after seen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are those of Guaxaca; though it be thought there be some Veins of Gold and Silver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work in the Mines.

2. VERAPAZ, is bounded on the West with Chiapa; on the East with Guatemala and Honduras; on the North, with Jucutan; and on the South, with the Territory of Scampuco. In Latine called Provincia Verae Pacis, by the Spaniards Verapaz; because not conquered by the Sword, but won to the obedience of the King of Spain by the preaching of the Dominican Friars.

The Country is 30 leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high hills and deep Valleys, but no fruitful Plains; generally overgrown with Woods, very large and thick, which so hinder the free passage of the Wind, and the Air hereof is very showry: insomuch that for nine months in the year they have always rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reason of this moisture much annoyed with Mosquitos, a kind of Gnats very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwise (as with Fish and other necessaries) they were well provided. It has also plenty of Corn and Cattle enough, but no Wheat, Reeds like Trees, and imployed as Timber in building; Flowers, and Bees some of which have no Stings. No Mines of Gold or Silver discovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. In stead whereof some of their Trees drop a kind of Amber, which they call Liquid Amber, some Mastick, and some other Gums: they have also many Medicinal Woods, as Sarsaparilla, that called China-Wood, and many others.

The people tractable and conformable to the Spanish Government, except the Lecandones and Pachutees, some Remainers of the ancient Savages; who keeping in the Mountains and craggy Rocks of this Country, have hitherto retained both their native Freedom and their old Idolatries. No Towns herein possessed by the Spaniard, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. They are for the most part Christians; and inhabit two third parts of the Country; the rest is left to the Barbarous Nations about them. The Dominicans have one Monastery. The Inhabitants are very poor, as wanting Cotton and some other things, and having little or no Trade with any of their Neighbours, Lact. The principal of these is S. Augustines, not so much memorable in it self, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains from which the Rain descending turns into Alabaster, naturally fashioned into Pillars and other Pourtraitures, into which also many Springs do convey their waters, which there being joyned into a body make a handsome River, able almost at the first appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they also have at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce: but of so little a use and trading, that I find no name for it, unless it should be that Xetapa which Herrera speaks of, by whom it is placed in Guatemala.

3. GUATIMALA specially so called, is bounded on the West with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalpa, on the East, with Nicaragua; on the North, with Honduras; and on the South, with Amacul Zur, or the Pacifick Ocean. Extended 30 leagues from the North to the South, and on the shores of Amacul Zur not above seventeen. But reckoning in Verapaz, Chaluteca, and S. Saviours, three adjoining Regions, by some made Provinces distinct, the dimensions of it must be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Country is Mountainous, but withal very full of Rivers, by consequence commodious both for planting and Hunting, Fruitful of Wheat, Maize and other Provisions, but those Fruits not lasting. Not so much subject unto War as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with Wounds. Full of Rich Pastures, and those Pastures of great Herds of Cattle: good store of Cotton wool, some Balsammum, and other medicinal Liquors; also of the best Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs, which I have no skill of. The People pusillanimous, and fearful, greater proficients in Christianity and Civility than most of the Savages, but so that it is thought they would relapse again to their ancient Paganism, and revive again their old Customs, if not held in by the brittle opinion of the Power of God. The men assumed to be good Archers, the Women good Spinners.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Guacapa, a River of a course but of 13 leagues, yet of great depth, and navigable the way, which falleth into the Mare del Zur. 2. Lecap, watering the Burrough of S. Saviours; which hath its rise from a great Lake, and his fall into the Same Sea. 3. Here is also said to be a Lake near the Village of Ataquepeque, of the Waters whereof are made both sulphur and Allum. And here is said to be a Volcano, or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited in Fire of late, the matter of it being spent, yet the sad Monuments of his Furies do remain among them: another not far off which still calls out smoke.

Towns of most note, 1. Guatemala, or S. Augustines, so called by the Spaniard: the chief Town of the Province, situate on a little River betwixt both Volcanos, but one of which most terribly wasted Anno 1541, when the Widow of Alvaredo, the Conquerour of it perished with many other. But being re-edified, it hath since exceedingly flourished, by reason of the Bishops See, the Residence of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice. In 1570. Chilton found here but 60 Spaniards, though Herrera saith, there were in his time 600. From the middle of May to that of November, there is no passage by this place to Mexico, by reason of the Rain. In 1634. Mr. Gage who lived here, saith there was about 5000 Families, besides an Indian Suburb, and the Trade very great by both the Oceans and by Land, with Mexico and Guaxaca, &c. p. 274. Guatemala stands 14 Leagues within the Land from the South-Sea, and is very rich by reason of the Gold passing through it from Veragua. Chilton in Hackluit. T. 3. p. 457. 2. S. Salvador, 40 leagues Eastwards from Guatemala, by the Natives called Guzculan; situate on the River Guacapa, seven Leagues from the Sea, and neighboured by a great Lake of five leagues compass. From the line towards the North, it is 13. 00; from the South Sea 7 Leagues; the Port being Acaxutla. The Fields about it are very Fruitful, and the Air temperate and healthful. Chilton found here in 1570. but 60 Spanish Inhabitants, Lact. p. 335. 3. Acaxutla, at the mouth of the same River, the Port Town to S. Saviours. Here all the Ships of New Spain come every year to load and unload. 4. S. Trinidad, by the Natives called Samfonate, the most noted Empory of this Country; the Place of Bartery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain and those of Peru. 5. S. Alibachi, two leagues from the Bay of Fonseca, which serves unto it for an Haven. 6. Xeres de la Frontera, the chief Town of the Cantred of Chalutecan, (by which it was formerly known) situate on the Frontiers toward's Nicaragua, and to the South-east of the the Bay of Fonseca. That Bay so named in honour of Roderico Fonseca, Bishop of Bruges, and President of the Council for the Indies, Anno 1532. by Giles Gonfales de Avila, who first discovered it. About and in this Bay are ten little Islands, four of them inhabited, and plentifully furnished with Wood, Water and Salt.

4. HONDURA hath on the South Guatemala, specially so called; on the West, the Bay, or Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz; on the North and East, the Sea called Mare del Noordt: on the South-east, Nicaragua; on the South, Guatemala specially so called. In length from East to West by the banks of that Sea 150 leagues, and about 80 leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras, imposed upon it from the depth of the Sea about the principal Head land of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Country is either Hills or Valleys, little Champain in it; fruitful of Maize and Wheat, and of very rich Pasturage; made so by the constant overflowings of their Rivers about Michalemas, which do not only soil their Grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them, 1. Hungara, 2. Chamalucon, 3. Ulna; all neighbouring by fertile Fields & pleasant meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here, but not yet discovered; the people being so slothful and given to idleness, that they rather live on Roots, than take pains in tilling of their Land; and therefore not easily entreated to toil for others, but where necessity and a strong hand do compel them to it. The Inhabitants are thin, the Spaniards destroying in a few years, at least two Millions of People, as Barthol de las Casas informed Charles the 5th.

Towns of most note, 1. Valladolid, by the Natives called Commyagna, 40 leagues distant from the Sea, situate in a pleasant and fruitful Valley, on the banks of the River Chamalucon; and honoured with a Bishops See, fixed here about the year 1558 but built near the place where once Francisco de Montez, Governour of this Province, had planted a Colony of Spaniards, Anno 1530, or as others 1539, by the name of S. Maria de Commyagna. And in 1558 the Bishops See was removed thither from Truxillo. The Inhabitants have endeavoured to turn the Current of the Trade of Lima in Peru, from Panama to this Place, as shorter, safer, and more healthful than the former; however this Town stands in the shortest cut between the Ports of Fonseca on the Mar del Zur, and that of Cavallos, on the Bay of Mexico, between which there is but 53 Leagues, yet at last there were other difficulties that could not be removed, that prevented the design. 2. Gracios de Dios, 30 leagues Westward of Valladolid, built by Gabriel de Rojas, Anno 1530. to be a place of defence for those who worked in the Mines against the Savages. But finding himself unable to make it good he defaced and left it. Re-edified again in (1536) by Gonsalvo de Alveredo, and since well inhabited. 3. S. Peters, eleven leagues distant from the Port of Cavallos, but seated in a most healthy Air; and therefore made the dwelling-place of the Farmers of the Kings Customs, who have their houses in this Town, and follow their business in the other, as occasion is. 4. Porto de Cavallos, so called from some Horses thrown overboard in a violent Tempest: the most noted Haven of these parts, and strong by natural situation, but so ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591. it was pillaged by Captain Christopher Newport, Anno 1596. by Sir Anthony Sberley. Deserted on those spoils, and not since inhabited. 5. S. Thomas de Castille, 11 leagues from Cavallos, naturally strong and fortified according to the Rules of Art; to which, as to a place of more strength and safety, Alphonso Briado de Castilla, President of the Sessions of Guatemala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6. Truxillo, seated on the rising of a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, (one of them that which is called Haguara) distant from Cavallos. 40 leagues to the East and 60 leagues to the North of Valladolid; surprized and pillaged by the English, Anno 1576. Not far hence towards the North-east lieth the Cape of Honduras, from hence the shore drawing inwards till it joyn with Jucutan, makes up a large and goodly Bay, called the Gulf of Honduras. 7. S. George de Olanco, so named from the Valley Olancho, in which it is seated; a Valley noted heretofore for some Golden Sands, which Guajape, a River of it, was then said to yield.

5. NICARAGUA is bounded on the North with Honduras; on the East with Mur del Noordt and the Province of Veragua; on the South, with Mur del Zur; on the West, with Guatemala. By Didaco Lopez de Salfedo, who first subdued it, it was called the New Kingdom of Leon; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither would not be so lost. It extends from East to West 50 Leagues, from North to South 80.

The Country is destitute of Rivers, except that part hereof towards Veragua, called Costa Rica, reckoned a Province of itself. The want hereof is supplied by a great Lake, or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 Leagues in compass, ebbing and flowing like the Sea; upon the Banks of which stands many pleasant Villages and single Houses. A Lake well stored with Fish, but as full of Crocodiles: and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it self into the Sea about four Leagues off. Not very rich in Corn (most of which is brought thence from Peru) but well stored with Cattle: level and plain, and shadowed with frequent Trees; one amongst others of that nature that a man cannot touch any part of it, but it withereth presently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrots as England of Crows; stored with great plenty of Cotton Wool, and abundance of Sugar Canes. In a word so pleasing generally to the eye, that the Spaniards call it by the name of Mabomet's Paradise.

The People for the most part speak the Spanish Tongue, and willingly conform themselves to the Spanish Garb, both of behaviour and apparel: well weaned from their old barbarous Customs, retained only by some Mountaineers, whom they call Chontales. All of good Stature, and of Colour indifferent white. They had before they received Christianity a settled and politick form of Government. Only as Solon appointed no Law for a man's killing of his Father, so had this people none for the killer of a King; both of them conceiving that men were not so unnatural as to commit such Crimes. A Thief they judge not to death, but adjudged him to be a Slave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his Service he made satisfaction. A course more merciful and not less just than the loss of Life. Considering the want of Men, we now have, and the great Depopulation of our Country, by our Plantations and Wars, more necessary to be put in Practice by us than by our Ancestors, who saw the English Nation over Peopled, when they settled those Laws which we now practice, in a quite different state of things. But if it be thought inconvenient to retain them in England, let Transportation to the West-Indies, Abjuration, &c. be the Judgment, and not Death, till they be taken in the same Fact after Transportation.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, situate on the Lake aforesaid, the Residence of the Governour, and the Bishop's See; built in Sandy Soil, and begirt with Woods. Here resides the Governour of the Province; in which are about 12000 Indians, who pay a yearly Tribute to the Spaniards. The North east is a burning Mountain, which continually throweth up burnt Stones and Sulphur. It was once thought very convenient for Managing the Trade between Peru, and Europe, by means of the Lake, and a River which falls into the Bay of Hondura as St. Juan, from which it stands but 70 Leagues to the West. This City (saith Mr. Gage who saw it in 1637) is very curiously built: The chief delight of the Inhabitants, consisting in their their fine Houses, and in the abundance of all things for the Life of Man, more than in Riches, which are more plentiful in the other parts of America. 2. Granada, on the same Lake, sixteen Leagues from Leon; beautified with a fair Church and strong Castles, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordova; the City seated in a liberal and wealthy Soil, well furnished with Sugar-Canes; for the refining of which here are many Work-houses, which they call Ingenio's. 3. Segovia, distant from the former about 30 Leagues, rich in Veins of Silver. 4. Jane, (all called according to the names of some Towns in Spain) situate at the end of the Lake aforesaid; from whence by a long and narrow Channel, it disembogueth into the Sea near the Port of S. John. 5. Realio, about a league distant from the Port of Possession, in the Latitude of 12 degrees and 40 minutes; inhabited for the most part by Shipwrights and Mariners. 6. Nicoia, giving name to a little Territory, within the bounds whereof standeth, 7. Avarines also. 8. Cartago, 40 Leagues from Nicoia, equally distant from both Seas, each of which hath a convenient Port: this Town is the Principal of that part which is called Costa Rica. Mr. Gage placeth it twenty Leagues from each Sea. In 1637 he found here many rich Merchants, and about 400 Spanish Families, two Abbies, 1. Nunnery, and a Bishop's See. The City was indeed small, but in a growing condition, it having a good trade with Panama, and Porto Bello. The City as he observed was seldom mentioned by the Spanish Writers, Page 426.

6. VERAGUA hath on the West Costa Rica; on the East; bounded with the District of Panama; washed on both the other sides by the Sea; extended 50 Leagues in length from West to East; not above 25, where narrowest, from one Sea to the other. It is the most Eastern Province in the Circuit of Guatemala, having on the North the Bay of Mexico, and on the South, the South Sea. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of greatest note in it at the first Discovery.

The Soil hereof is Mountainous and exceeding Barren, not fit for Tillage, and less useful in feeding Cattle; sufficiently provided of Maize and Pot-herbs, but else of little necessary for the Life of man, unless the People could eat Silver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Metals, but especially of Gold, here are such never-perishing Mines, that the Spaniards think them able to supply all Wants, and cure all Diseases. Once being asked what made them so greedy of that Metal, it was answered, That they were much troubled with Grief of Heart, for which Gold was a most sovereign Medicine. And as the Country, such the People, hardy, courageous, and warlike, and such as bear the Spanish Yoke with great impatience: the stoutest and most untamable People being bred most commonly in Mountains and woody Countreys. Christopher Columbus discovered this Province in the Year 1502; when the Inhabitants gave the Spaniards the value of 90 Marks in Gold for 36 Brass Bells, and said there was much Gold in the next Province: which simplicity of theirs, was the occasion of a much greater Calamity, than their Ignorant bargain for those Bells; but that the Christianity the Spaniards brought thither, will make good all their Temporal Losses.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1. Veragua which gives name unto it. 2. Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Yebra; at the mouth of which Columbus purposed to have settled a Spanish Colony, for the better transporting of his Gold. But finding that the Channel, on the ceasing of some Rain which had fallen before, was become so shallow, that no Ship could go in or out he gave over that purpose. 3. La Trinidad. 4. La Concepcion; all falling into Mare del Noordt. Their Chief Towns, 1. Concepcion, upon the mouth of that River, the Seat of the Governour. 2. La Trinidad, on the Banks of that River near the Port of Belen, and six Leagues Eastwards of La Concepcion. 3. S. Poy, (Oppidum S. Pidei) twelve Leagues from Concepcion on the South; where the Spaniards melt and cast their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4. Carlos, not far from the Shores of Mare del Sur. 5. Philippina, on the West of Carlos. Each seated on a large and capacious Bay. Before which Bay lie a Frie of Islands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongst them. Thirty in all; the principal, Zebaco, Cabaio, S. Marie, S. Martha, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented; the people being dragged into the continent to work in the Mines.

This Country oweth its first discovery unto divers men, according to the several members and divisions of it. The last in order being the first that was discovered, but the last that was conquered had the honour to be visited by Columbus himself. Who driving up and down these Coasts in the year 1502, hit on the entrances of the River, which afterwards he caused to be called Belen, where, hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Hurira not far off, he intended to fortifie. But the River failing him, as was said before, and finding nothing fit to sustain his men; he bent himself, though unwilling, to a farther search. He had before touched upon Honduras also, but I find not that he Landed on it: the settling of these Countreys being destinated to another hand. Twenty years after this the most fortunate Cortez, having fully quieted and composed the affairs of Mexico, resolved to make his Master Lord of the rest of America; and to that end sent out his Officers and Commanders into several Parts. By Pedro de Alvarado he subdued Guatemala; Hondura, by Christopher de Olid; Veragua and Nicaragua by Gonzales de Cordoba. But fearing lest the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he resolved to visit them in Person. Attended by a choice Band of 150 Horse, and as many Foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his journey in October 1524, and held on his Progress as far as to Truxillo; where finding that Gonzales de Cordoba had so plaid his Game, as there was no necessity of going farther, he made a stand, having marched above 400 leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526, he came home to Mexico: with whose return we conclude also our Survey of the Northern Peninsula, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexicana.

And so much for MEXICANA.

O F P E R U A N A

PERUANA, the other of the two great Peninsula's, into which the vast Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now stand divided, hath the form of a Pyramis reversed; more answerable thereunto than Africk, though that be so resembled. Joyned to the other by a strait and narrow Isthmus, called the Streights of Darien, whereof we shall have opportunity to speak more anon: which looks but like a Stone mislaid in so great a Building; or the first step by which we are to climb the top as in other Pyramids.

The name is derived from Puru, the chief Province of it: the Circumnavigation said to be 1700. miles. Nothing else to be said in the general, but what will serve more fitly for particular Places; except it be the description of some prime Mountains and Principal Rivers, which being of two long a course to be reckoned unto any one Particular Province, may more properly deserve place here. Of these chief are, 1. Orellana, or the River of Amazons: called by the first name from Francisco de Orellana, a Spaniard, who first discovered it; in the year 1541. by the second, from the Amazons, a kind of stout and warlike Women who are said to have inhabited on the Banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Peru, the fall of the North Sea, or Mare del Noords. A River of so long a course, that the said Orellana is reported to have sailed in it 5000 miles, the several windings and turnings of it being reckoned in: and of so violent a Current, that it is said to keep its natural taste and Colour above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea; the Channel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accounted 60 leagues from one Point to the other. It is one of the biggest Rivers of the World, and riseth near Quitum a City of Peru, out of two Marshes, which lye within two Leagues of each other at the foot of the Mountains of Cordillera; then running to the East, and being augmented by the streams of Coca Napo, and others, it passeth the Province of Canela and Pacamor, where it receives the River Xauxa, or Marania, so passing many other Provinces: after a Course of 1200 Leagues, it falls in the North Ocean between Brasile and Gutana. The Mouth of it is very large, being 80 Leagues over, and full of Islands. Peter Texeira, a Spaniard has made a very exact description of it, having in the year 1639 spent 10 Months in Surveying it. This relation was Translated into French, in the year 1682. and Printed at Paris. The Spaniards being then possessed of Brasile, and having heard that the Head of this River was in Peru. They designed by this River to transport their Rich Cargo's of Plate from that Kingdom to Para in Brasile, whereby they might be better secured from the Holland and English Ships. The first discovery was by Pizaro and Oralan in 1539. the latter of which was lost in the expedition, as was P. Orfua in 1561. in the same Attempt, and two Jesuits in 1606. In 1634 Caello Governour of Para failed in the Design; but two Monks came down from Quito, a Province of Peru to Brasile, which occasioned this Discovery. The Governour of Brasile sending Tixeria, after this with an Army up the River in Boats, which in one year arrived at Quito, and returned in another. This River runs from West to East 1356 Spanish Leagues. It is never above 5 Degrees from the Line to the South, for 600

Leagues, it is 30 or 40 Leagues over: abounding with Fish, and Fruitful Countries on its Banks. The Air is more Temperate and healthful than Peru, by reason of the high and Snowy Hills; and it has plenty of Trees for building; and it passeth by 150 Nations, in about 4000 Leagues. By the Indians this great River is called Tobo and Para, as indeed they call all Rivers, Lakes, and Seas, by the Last Name; by the Spaniards, Ias Amazonas, Orellana, and by mistake Oronoque. They all agree the outlet is very great, 50 or 60 Leagues over. It is very swift and rowls down a vast quantity of Water to the Ocean, so that it makes it fresh many Leagues from the Land. My Author says, the Principal Outlet is known both to the Dutch and English, who have frequented it on the account of the Trade with the Natives; but then they Industriously conceal it: And that he met with an English Man, who said he had been 300 Miles up this River, and had at last fallen into a vast Lake, the Waters of which were very Green, and not Potable; and also met one Indian Town of 300 Houses, and about 1000 Souls, Laet. Liber 17. ch. 3. This great Lake seems to me Parima. In the year 1598. the Dutch being Prohibited all Trade with the Spanish Dominions, began to trade to the parts of America washed by this River. They fell this first year into that Branch of this River, which was afterwards planted by the Portuguese, and called Para. In the following Years the Zea-landers viewed this River, and built two Forts upon it, which they call Nassaw and Orange, the first 20 Miles from the Continent, in a River Island, and 80 from the Mouth of the River; and the second 7 Miles lower. The English and Irish, did the like about the same time; but all these Colonies were destroyed by that of Para, ib. p. 634. 2. Oronoque, Navigable 1000 miles by Ships of burthen, and 2000 miles by Boats and Pinnaces. Having received into it an Hundred Rivers, it openeth into the same Sea with 16 mouths, which part the Earth into many Islands, (some equal to the Isle of Weigh;) the most remote of those Channels 300 miles distant from one another. By some it is called Raltana, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the Discovery and Description of it; or rather in discovering it so far as to be able to describe it. Oronoque, this River is called also Vyapari, and Springs from the East side of the Mountains of Popayan or New-Granada, and entreth the Ocean over against the Island of St. Trinida, yet is confounded with Meragnan, Laet. p. 608. This Noble River was in all probability discovered by Columbus in his third Expedition in 1498. In 1499 by Vespicius Americus, and in 1500 by Pinzonius, but none of these entered and searched it, till Dilaco de Ordes, in 1531 obtained a Commission from Charles the V. to Conquer this part of South America; he entered the River, but was soon oppressed with want of Provisions: yet he Wintered here and endeavoured (but without success) to fix a Colony, for he was Defected by all his Souldiers. The most Southern Outlet is a 100 Leagues from the most Northern, and altogether make 300 English Miles; so that it is much greater than that of the Amazons. 3. Maragnon, of a longer course than any of the other, affirmed to measure at the least 6000 miles from his first rising to his fall; and at his fall into the Sea to be less than 70 leagues from one side to the other. More properly perly to be called a Sea, than many of those great Lakes, or largest Bays, which usually enjoy that name. Maragan, Maranon, Marabanon, is a River of Brasil in the South Latit. 2. 30. by which it must be by the River Amazons, the same name is given to Orenoque; both which are already described, and to la Plata, which followeth. Abevil a French man in 1612. published an Account of this part of Brasil; in which he saith, there is an Island 25 Miles over in the mouth of this River. In the Bay made by this River and Island, there fall three fine Rivers, Mounin, Toboucour, Miaru. These Rivers are very great and rapid, and the Sands also on the East side of the River considered, it is of difficult Access. It has upon it 27 Villages, each consisting of 235. or six hundred Indians. The Air upon it is Serene, and neither subject to too much heat or cold. When the Sun returneth from the Winter Solstices, it raineth here 40 days, which is their Winter; and in the Summer, the Eastern Brizes blow from Sun rising to Sun setting, and are most strong at Noon. The Country about it has Plenty of Springs, and is so fertile, that tho it is never sowed nor helped, yet it brings forth plenty of Maze. The Merchandize to be met with upon this River are Saffron, Cotton, Balsum, Tobacco, Pepper, Dying-stuff, Sugar might be had here too if it were planted. Laet. pag. 620. from Abevil. 4. Rio de la Plata, a River of a less course than the other, but equal unto most in the World besides: In length from its first Fountain 2000 miles, in breadth at his fall into the Sea about 60 leagues; and of so violent a Stream, that the Sea for many leagues together altereth not the taste of it. All these, as they do end their race in the Atlantick, so they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at least some spur or branch of that body. The Americans call this River Paranaguazu, by the English and French the River of Plate. It riseth in Paragua, above the Lake de Los Xirates, and running a Vast Course to the South, and separating Paragua from Chaco beneath the City de Buenos Ayres. It entereth the Sea of Paraguay by a Mouth of Sixty English Miles in Breadth, or 40 Spanish Leagues; this River was first discovered by Sebastian Cabot, sent to that end by Ferdinand King of Arragon; And he it was that first gave it the name of Rio de la Plata, in which he sailed six Score Leagues. Hucklutt T. 3. p. 9. c. 7. After Cabot the next discoverer was John Diaz, a Portuguese in 1513. or as some say, 1515. he Perishing by the treachery of the Inhabitants upon it. In 1526. John Cabots Expedition is placed. In 1527. that of Didacus Carcias who found Cabot still here.

In 1535. Petro Mendoza was sent of purpose to discover it more thoroughly with 800 men in 11 Ships, and he built Buenos Ayres upon it. In 1540. Arvares Nunez, perfected the Discovery of it. The mouth is 32 Spanish Leagues over, and within it is 10 Leagues.

But before we venture farther on more particulars, we are to tell you of these Andes, that they are the greatest and most noted Mountains of all America; beginning at Timama, a Town of Popayan, in the new Realm of Granada, and thence extends Southwards to the Streights of Magellan for the space of a 1000 leagues and upwards. In breadth about 20 leagues, where they are at the narrowest; and of so vast an height withal, that they are said to be higher than the Alps, or the head of Caucasus, or any of the most noted Mountains in other parts of the World. They are much of the same height, and are seldom above 20, 30, or 40 Leagues from the Pacific Ocean. There are many of them which burn perpetually towards Chili. Not easie of ascent, but in certain Parts, by reason of the thick and unpassable Woods, with which covered in all parts thereof, which lie towards Peru (for how it is on the other side, or by what People it is neighbored, is not yet discovered:) barren and cragged too withal, but so full of venomous Beasts and Poisonous Serpents, that they are said to have destroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Peru, in his march that way. Inhabited by a People as rude and savage as the place, and as little hospitable. The most noted Mountain of America, as before was said, and indeed the greatest of the World. Of same sufficient of themselves, not to be greatened by the addition of impossible Fictions, or improbable Fictions. Amongst which last I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius, a right learned man, who will have these Mountains to be that which the Scripture called by the name of Sephar, Gen. 10. 30. and there affirmed to be the utmost East or limit of the Sons of Jockton: the vanity and inconsequences of which strange conceit we have already noted when we were in India, Laet. p. 483.

Proceed we now unto the particular Descriptions of this great Peninsula, comprehending those large and wealthy Countries which are known to us by the names of 1. Castella Aurea. 2. The New Realm of Granada. 3. Peru. 4. Chile. 5. Paraguay. 6. Brasil. 7. Guiana; and 8. Paria, with their several Islands. Such other Isles as fall not properly and naturally under the name of these, must be referred unto the general Head of the American Islands, in the close of all.

CASTELLA del ORO.

CASTELLA del ORO, Golden Castile, (Aurea Castella, as the Latines) is bounded on the East and North with Mare del Noordt; on the West, with Mare del Zur, and some part of Veragua; on the South, with the new Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Castile, with reference to Castile in Spain, under the Favour and good fortune of the Kings whereof it was first discovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for distinction sake, and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the first discoverers found in it. It is also called Terra Firma, because one of the first parts of Firm Land which the Spaniards touched at, having before discovered nothing but some Islands only.

The Soil and People being of such several Tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will consider both apart in the several Provinces of, 1. Panama. 2. Darien. 3. Nova Andalusia. 4. S. Martha, and 5. the little Province De la Hacha.

1. PANAMA, or the District of Panama, is bounded on the East with the Gulf of Uraba or Darien, by which parted from the Land of this large Peninsula; on the West, with Veragua, one of the Provinces of Guatemala in Mexicana; washed on both the other sides with the Sea. So called of Panama, the Town of most esteem herein, and the Juridical resort of Castilla Aurea.

It taketh up the narrowest part of the Streight or Isthmus, which joyns both Peninsula's together: not above

7 or 8 leagues over in the narrowest place, betwixt Panama and Porto bello, if measured by a straight line from one Town to the other ; though 18 leagues according to the course of the Road betwixt them, which by reason of the Hills and Rivers is full of turnings. Of some attempts to dig a Channel through this Isthmus to let one Sea into the other, and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by Land, we have spoken already.

The Air hereof is foggy, but exceeding hot, and consequently very unhealthy, chiefly from May unto November : the Soil either Mountainous and barren, or low and miry ; naturally so unfit for Grain, that it yeildeth nothing but maize, and that but sparingly ; better for Pasturage, in regard of its Plenty of Grass, and the goodness of it : so full of Swine at the Spaniards first coming hither, that they thought they never should destroy them ; now they complain as much of their want, or paucity. As for the Inhabitants, whatsoever they were formerly is not now material ; most of the old stock are rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their room ; so that the Country in all parts, except towards the Sea, is almost desolated or forsaken.

The Country, as before was said, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers ; the principal whereof, 1. Chagre, by the Spaniards called Rio de Legatos, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Noort, betwixt Nombre de Dios and Porto Bello. This River lies between the South and North of America, upon which the Merchandies bound for Panama and Peru do pass, so far as is Navigable. 2. Sardinilla. 3. Sardina. 4. Rio de Colubros, or the River of Snakes, and 5. Rio de Comagre ; all falling into the same Sea. Then on the other side. 6. Ghepo, whose Sand in former times yielded plenty of Gold. 7. Rio de las Balsas, on the Banks whereof groweth great store of Timber for the building of Ships. 8. De Congos, emptying it self into the Bay of Saint Michael.

Towns of most note, 1. S. Philip, seated on a safe and strong Haven, called Porto bello : built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the second, but by the Counsel of John Baptista Antonelli, to be the Staple of the Trade betwixt Spain and Panama ; partly in regard of the unhealthiness of Nombre de Dios, where it was before, but chiefly, because that Town was found to have lain too open to the Invasions of the English. Fortified with two strong Castles ; (on each side of the Haven one ;) but for all that surprized and pillaged by the English under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. This City was also since taken and plundered by the Buccaniers. It lyes five Leagues from Nombre de Dios to the W. Lat 9.20. The Harbour is Large and very good, having good Anchoring and fresh water 6 Fathoms near the shore, and 12 in the middle. There falls into the Sea here 12 Small Rivers or Brooks of water. There is about it plenty of Timber and of stones to ballast the ships with. Within this Harbour is a Small Creek safe from all winds, 500 yards Square, and 4 fathom one Quarter Deep. A Ship may go out with any wind but a Western, which doth seldom blow. To the South it has a good Scituation, for a City well watered and encompassed with ground fit for Tillage. This Account was given (by Baptista) to the King of Spain, Anno 1587. Hackl. T. 3. p. 552, 553. Nombre de Dios, conveniently seated in the upper Sea for a Town of Trade ; and for that Reason made the Staple of such Commodities as were trucked betwixt Peru and Spain, which brought from Spain, and landed here, were from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there shipped for Peru ; or brought from Peru, and landed at Panama, were by Land brought unto this place, and here shipped for Spain. It took this name by Didaco Niquisa, a Spanish Adventurer, who having been distressed by Tempests was driven in here, and bid his men go on shore in Nombre de Dios in the name of God. Nombre de Dios was taken first by Sir Francis Drake in 1572. It was after this neglected and not much regarded, Baptista Antonio finding but 30 Houses when he came to Survey it : The badness of the Air and Port, and Water, and Situation, all conspiring to the Demolishing of it, Gage's Travels page 170, 180. In reference hereunto by the Latines, borrowing a Greek word it is called Theonyma. Of great Trade once on the occasion before mentioned : but in the year 1614. the Trade was removed unto Porto Bello, by the counsel of Antonelli before named ; and some years after that, the Inhabitants also. To hasten which, the taking of this Town by Sir Francis Drake served exceeding fitly, who took it in his Second Voyage into America, in the year 1572, and plundered it. It was in part neglected afterwards, and in the year 1614. the King of Spain ordered it to be pulled down, and the Town of Porto Bello to be built with the same Timber ; which was accordingly performed by Peter Arias, Gage's Travels p. 170. 180. It is Seated in an unhealthful Marshy Ground, the Harbour bad, and the water not good, being Subject to the Violence of the North and East Wind, the Haven Fleet unsafe, and exceeding troublesome, and the way to Panama very bad. Hackl. T. 3. p. 551. Before the Town was half built, the English took Nombre de Dios, and destroyed it in 1601. in Sir Francis Drake's last Expedition, in which he died near this City, Gage's, p. 170. Laet. p. 153. The former of these observed the Haven to be very strong, having two Castles at the Mouth, and one in the bottom. 3. Acla, on the Coast of the same Sea also, but on the South-east of Nombre de Dios. 4. Nata, or S. Fago de Nata, situate on the lower Sea, on the Borders of Veragua, about 30 leagues on the West of Panama. 5. Panama, the chief City of Castella Aurea, the Residence of the Governour and the Courts of Justice, honoured with a Bishops See, a Suffragan to the Archbishop of Lima, and beautified with three fair Monasteries, and a Colledge of Jesuits, Seated in the 9. degree of Northern Latitude ; and so near the Sea, that the waves come close unto the Wall. A Town through which the Wealth of Spain and Peru passed every year ; yet not containing above 350 Houses : the number of the Souldiers greater than that of the Citizens. It was built by Petrus Arto for the reception of the effects brought from Peru, as Nombre de Dios was on the opposite side of the Isthmus, for those brought from Spain. It was honoured with the Birth-day of a Modern Saint, Rose of Panama, whose Sanctity was so conspicuous, that the Gnats and Flies in her Cell observed and revered it, as Father Oliva, the late General of the Jesuits, informs us in her Life. But alas ! This Saint has not been able to protect the Town from another sort of Flies, for January 25. 1671. it was plundered by the French, and in 1686. by Captain Lawrence a Buccaneer. This city is Govern'd by a President and Six Judges, and a Court of Chancery. It hath more Strength towards the Sea than any other Port I had seen, having Ordinance Planted for its Defence, but the Houses and Churches are built of Timber and Boards for want of Stone and Lime. The heat here is extraordinary great, Fish, Fruits, and Herbage for Sallads, is more plentiful than Flesh. The Spaniards are very Loose and Libidinous. The Moors being the objects of their Lust, and by it made very rich and Gallant. It is held to be one of the Richest Places in America, having by Land and the River Chagre, Commerce with the No. Sea, and by the Sou. Sea Trading with Peru, East India, Mexico and Honduras. It consisteth of about 5000 Inhabitants, and has 8 Monasteries. Every Ebb the Sea falls from it 2 or 3 miles, but leaves a stinking Mud behind it, which makes the Air unhealthful, Gage's Travels 80. p. 442. It has 5000 Inhabitants and eight Monasteries. 6. S. Cruix la Real, a League from Panama, inhabited totally by Negroes, brought out of Guinea.

This Province was the first of those on the Firm Land which were discovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Island lying on the Shore near Porto bello, which he caused to be called Los Bastimentos; because being cast hereon by chance, he found good store of Maiz and other Provisions, called Bastimentos by the Spaniard. But the chief Islands of this Province are those which Columbus never saw, called the Islands of Pearls, situate in the Southern Sea, opposite to Panama, from which distant 17 leagues, or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called Tarorequi, the other Del Rio; the rest of them rather Rocks than Islands. Much famed not only for the abundance, but the excellency of the Pearls there found; fairer than those of Margarita and Cubagua, so much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniards, till by their cruelty and coverousness they unpeopled the Islands, and destroyed the Pearls. Inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and some Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Masters Cattle in the Fields and Pastures.

Porto

2. DARIEN hath on the North the district of Panama; on the South, New Granada; on the East, the River of Darien, whence it hath its name, and the Gulf of Uraba; and on the West, the main Southern Ocean.

The Country is of a temperate Air, and a fruitful Soil: so happy in the production of Melons, and such other Fruits, that within twenty days after they are sown they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes and other Fruits; either Natural hereunto, or brought either from Enrope. A Tree here is called Hovo, not elsewhere known; the shade of which is conceived to be so wholsom, that the Spaniards seek them out to sleep under them. Out of the Blossoms of it they distil a perfumed Water; of the Bark a Bath or Lavatory, good for the opening of the pores, and redress of Weariness; and from the Roots they draw a Liquor, which they use to drink of. Of Beasts and Fowls great Plenty, whether wild or tame; and some of them not heard of in other places.

Principal Rivers hereof, 1. Darien, whence it hath the name. A clear Water, and much drank of, but of a slow course and a narrow Channel, able to bear no bigger Vessels than those of one piece of wood, used among the Savages, we may call them Troughs. But with this slow course it falleth at last into the Gulf of Uraba, a large arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is said to be eight Leagues over. 2. Rio de las Redas, and 3. De la Trepadera, both emptying themselves into the Gulf of Uraba. 4. Corobaci, on the same side of the Country also. 5. Beru, a River of the South Sea, not much observable, but that some have laboured to derive the Etymology of Peru from thence.

Towns of most note, though few of any, 1. Darien, on the Bank of the Gulf of Uraba; oftentimes so unhealthy by the Mists which do thence arise, that the Inhabitants use to send their sick people to the fresh Air of Corobary to revive their Spirits. By the Spaniards it was called S. Maria Antique, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Encisus a Spanish Adventurer, Anno 1510, and grew so suddenly into Wealth and Reputation, that within four years it was made an Episcopal See. But being built too near the banks of Darien, in a moorish and unhealthy place, both the Episcopal See, and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planted here; but either forsaken by themselves, or destroyed by the Savages; so that now from Acla to the bottom of the Gulf of Uraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but some few scattered houses in all that Tract, for the use of the Natives; who formerly made their Nests like Birds on the tops of Trees. 2. Blizu. 3. Los Angadefos; two small Villages on the other side of the Country, possessed by the Savages. Besides these, and some sorry Sheds here and there dispersed, all the rest is a desert. So that not being able to maintain the reputation of a distinct Province, the Government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Prefect of Panama.

3. NOVA ANDALUZIA hath on the West the River Darien, and the Gulf of Uraba; on the East, the Province of S. Martha; on the North, the main Ocean; and on the South, the New Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andaluzia, a Province of Spain. Called also by some Writers Carthagina, from Carthage now the chief City of it.

It is in length, from the Gulf of Uraba to the River of Magdalen, 10 leagues, and near upon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of Woods, but in those Woods great store of Rosin; Gums and some kinds of Ballams. Here is also said to be a Tree, which whosoever toucheth, is in danger of poisoning. The Soil, by reason of the abundance of Rain which falls upon it, very moist and spewy; insomuch that few of our European Fruits have prospered in it. Few veins of Gold in all the Country, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena; where the Spaniards at their first coming found great store of Treasure. But it was taken out of the Graves and Monuments of the Dead, not found in Mines, nor digged for, as in other places: such being the Reputation of that Territory in former time, that the Nations far and near did carry the Bodies of their Dead to be buried in it, with great quantities of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and stout, whilst they were a people. But giving the Spaniards many overthrowes before fully conquered, they have been so consumed and wasted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Rio de los Redas, and 2. Rio de los Anades, both falling into the Bay of Uraba. 3. Zedu, which passing through the Province above mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean over against the Island Fuerte. 4. S. Martha, of long course and much estimation. For rising in the most Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada, near the Equinoctial, it passeth through the whole length of that Kingdom, and at last mingleth its stream with that of the River Magdalen, not far from Mopox. By the Natives it is called Cauca. And as for Mountains, those of most note are a continual ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Cordellera, by the Natives Abibe; craggy and difficult of ascent; in breadth affirmed to be 20 Leagues, but the length uncertain, the farthest ends of them towards the South not discovered hitherto.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Carthagena, situate in a Sandy Peninsula, ten degrees distant from the Equator: well built, and for the bigness of it, of great Wealth and State; consisting of 500 Houses, or thereabout, but those neat and handsome. To the South it hath a Morals, so that is it approached by a Causeway of 250 Paces Length, well built, and a Bishops See, subject to the Arch Bishop of Granada. Beautified with a Cathedral Church, three Monasteries, and one of the best Havens of all America. This city was founded in the year 1532. by Petro Heredia, well fortified on both sides; since the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585. took it by Assault, and carried thence, besides inestimable sums of money, 240 Brass pieces of Ordnance. The English Landed five miles from the City and Marched directly to it, the Spaniards having sufficient time to provide for their Security by Sea and Land. And as to the first they defended themselves so well, that Drake could not break into the Harbour with his Ships by Sea, nor the General by Land, till the Sea retiring opened him a way into it. The Spaniards then fled and were forced to pay 100000 Ducats to redeem the City from fire, which was forthwith divided among the Soldiers and Seamen; the rest of the Prey was little, because the Inhabitants had sent away all that was Valuable to other Places. Yet the Terror of this expedition dwells still among the Inhabitants, as Mr. Gage saith in his Travels. This was also the first place the Spaniards Walled in the West Indies. In 1587. it had then 450 Spanish Families, and most of the houses were built with Stone, being vastly traded by all the other Plantations of the Spaniards in America. About this time the Spaniards first fortified it, and in the year 1630. it was encreased to 4000 Spaniards and 14000 Negroes, and the best Mart in America; encompassed with a Wall 18 foot high above the Level, and guarded with Bastions, and filled up with Earth, and Arm'd with 70 Brass Guns. See Hackluit To 3. p. 549. 2. Tolu, by the Spaniards called Saint Jago, 12 Miles from Carthagena: memorable for the most sovereign Balsom of all these parts, called the Balsom of Tolu; little inferiour, if at all, to the Balsom of Egypt. This Balm or Balsom is in my belief, the same with the Balm of Giliad and Jeriebo in latter times, found only in Egypt, and said to be now also found at Mecca in Arabia; The form of the Plant being the same, as appeareth by a Comparison of the description of it in the Authors that have wrote of both. 3. Mopox, or Santa Cruz de Mopox, near the Confluences of the Rivers of Martba and Magdalena. 4. Baranca de Melambo, on the Banks of the River Magdalen, six Leagues from the Ocean, where such Commodities as are brought by Sea for the New Realm of Granada use to be unshipped, and carried by Lighter or small Boats up the River. 5. Sebastia de Buenavista, built by Alfonso de Oieda, Anno 1508. in the first Attempt upon this Country; situate on a rising ground, near the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a League and half from the Sea. 6. Villa de Maria, 30 Leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4. S. MARTHA hath on the West Nova Andalusia; on the East, Rio de la Hacha; on the North the main Ocean; on the South the New Realm of Granada: about 70 Leagues in length, and as much in breadth. So called from S. Martba the chief City of it.

The Country is Mountainous and barren, not fit for Pasturage or Tillage; productive notwithstanding of Limons, Oranges, Pomegranates, and such other Fruits as are brought hither out of Spain. The Air on the Sea coasts very hot and scalding, and in the mid-land parts as cold, because of the Neighbourhood of some Mountains always covered with Snow. The principal of those Mountains, a long ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nievadas, or the Snowy Mountains; discernable by the Mariners 30 Leagues at Sea, by whom called the Mountains of Tairona, from a Valley of that name beneath them, the Inhabitants whereof, by the Advantage of those hills, have hitherto preserved their liberty against the Spaniards. The rest, though subject to the Spaniards, have their several Kings, affirmed to be an arrogant ill natur'd people; made worle perhaps then indeed they are, by reason of their hate to the Spaniards, whose Government they live under with great unwillingness.

Chief Rivers of this Province are, 1. Rio Grando de la Magdalena; which hath its Fountain in the Hills of the New Realm of Granada, not far from the Equator, but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and S. Martba, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; where dividing it self, it maketh an Island of five Leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; discernable for ten Leagues space, from the rest of the main by the taste and colour of the Water. This River is Navigable above 100 Leagues up into the Continent of America, so that by it the Marchandize of Europe is carried to Granada, and the Treasures of the latter are in three weeks brought down to the Atlantick Ocean, into which this River falls with a vast Mouth 26 Leagues East of Carthagena Nueva, so that it maintains its current 10 Leagues into the Ocean, and by reason of the Vortices made by the Contest between the River and the Ocean, it is dangerous falling into it. There is an Island in the Mouth of this River Five Leagues long, and half a League broad. The Hollanders do all affirm it has three mouths where it falls into the Ocean. Last. p. 369. The Mouth lyes in the Lat. of 12.40. from the Line to the North. Its head is near the City Popayan in the Andes, and washeth first Cassi, from the head to the fall 400 Leagues, and is Navigable to St. Fe de Bogota. This River is more properly St. Martba than Magdalena; and my Author in his Maps calls it so, but in his Description calls Magdalena, Cauca, both which Rivers unite at Mopox. 2. Rio de Cazaze, which falleth into the Magdalen; as doth also 3. Caesar, by the Natives called Pompatan; which having its Fountain near the City of Kings, in the Vail of Upar, passeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4. Ayumas, another River of this Tract; accompanied with whom he runneth Westward for the Space of 70 Leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalen, as before is said, near the Forest of Alpuerte. 5. Bubia. 6. Piras. 7. Don Diego. 8. Palamini. 9. Gayza, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of most observation. 1. S. Martba, situate on the Shores of the Ocean, in the latitude of ten degrees and 30 minutes: neighboured by a safe and convenient Haven, defended from the Winds by an high Mountain near unto it, and honoured with an Episcopal See. Small, and ill built when it was at the best; nor well recovered of the Spoil it suffered by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. and by Sir Anthony Shirly, the next year after. and in 1630 by the Dutch Admiral Adrian James Patre. In 1626. the Governour gave an account, that the Inhabitants were poor, few, and not well united among themselves. 2. Tenariffe, on the Banks of the Magdalen, 40 Leagues from S. Martba. 3. Tenalameque by the Spaniards called Villas de las Palmas, 20 Leagues to the South of Tenariffe. Ciudad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Vail of Upar, on the Banks of a deep and violent River called Guatepers, which not far off falleth into the Caesar: ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Tairona, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5. Ramada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the same Valley of Upar; as liberally furnished with Veins of Brass, as it is with stones. 6. Ocanman, on the Western Reach of the River Caesar, equally distant from its Confluence with Ayumas, and its fall into Magdalen.

5. RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-east of S. Martba, environed on two sides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the East) with large and spacious Arm of the Sea called Golfo de Venezuela, the extremities hereof North West, called Cabo la Vela; on the North east, Cabo di Coquibocoa.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a small Town, consisting of no more than an hundred Houses, but big enough to give name to so small a Province; built on a little Hill about a Mile from the Sea: the Haven inconvenient, and exposed to the Northern Winds, but the Soil about very rich, fruitful of all such Plants as are brought from Spain, well stored with Veins of Gold, excellent Salt wiches, and some Gems of great worth and virtue. Distant 8 Leagues from New Salamanca, and 18 Leagues from the Cape la Vela: surprized and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. 2. Rancheria, six Leagues on the East of De la Hacha, inhabited for the most part by such as get their living by Pearl-fishing. 3. Topia, five Leagues from La Hacha, and almost as much from the Sea: the fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca were terribly wasted by the English in the year aforesaid, because the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000 Ducats not to burn that Town, would not stand to his Bargain.

These Countries, discovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was said, were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two several men, employed in the subduing of their several parts, Anno 1518. To Didaco Niqueja was allotted the Government and Conquest of those parts hereof, which lie on the West of the Bay of the Uraba, containing the Prefectures of Darien and Panama, by the name of Castella de Oro; and to Alfonso Oidea, all that lay on the East of that Gulf, by the name of Nova Andalusia. But these two finished not the work, though the first began it: Encisus discovering farther on the River of Darien than Niqueſa had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South-Sea, where Panama and the best of their trading lieth, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Prefectures of S. Martha, and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and subdued by the Spaniard) being added to it. One of their last Kings which held out against the Spaniard was called Abibesa, who had his Palace on the top of a Tree, (as most of his Subjects had their Houses;) from which when Francisco de Vasquez, a Spanish Captain could by no other Rhetorick win him to descend, he laid his Axe to the Root and began to fell it: which ſeen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his Life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the New Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North with Castella Aurea; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Venezuela. The Countries lying on the South, are not yet discovered, shut up with vast Hills, and impassable Mountains, except only in those Parts which lie near the Sea, where the way lieth open to Peru. Thus called by Gonsalvo Ximenez, the first Discoverer; in the year 1536. who being a Native of Granada in Spain, gave this name unto it: It lying very remote from the Sea, upon the River of St. Magdalena; and in about two years it was reduced.

It is in length 130 Leagues, and as much in Breadth; reckoning Popayana for a part of it, though by some made a distinct Government. So that we may divide the whole into these two parts, 1. Granada specially so called, lying on the West; and 2. Popayana, lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA, specially so called, hath an Air for the most part well tempered betwixt heat and cold; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and shortness of days. It lying three or four Degrees from the Line to the North. The Country is full of Woods, but of great fertility, well stored with Corn and Pasturage, many Herds of Cattle, some Veins of Gold, and other Metals, and in that part hereof which is called Tunia, great plenty of Emeralds: and amongst their Woods, that called Guaiacum, medicinable for the French Disease, grows in great abundance. The People are tall and strong of Body, not very industrious, the greatest part of their time being spent in Songs and Dances; and very Barbarous, which the Spaniards had not reduced in 1630. The Women of a white and more clear Complexion than any of their Neighbours, and more handsomely habited, apparelled in black or Parti-coloured Mantles girt about their middles, their Hair tied up, and covered most an end with Chaplets intermixt with Flowers and artificially composed.

Rivers of note I find not any, but those of S. Martha and S. Magdalen, described before: nor any distinction of it into several Provinces; but by the names of Tunia, Bagota, Panches, Colymæ, and Musi, by which the Savages were distinguished when first known to the Spaniards; with reference to which the Principal of their Towns are by some described.

Towns then of greatest note, 1. S. Foy de Bagota, but commonly S. Foy the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of the Government. Built by Gonsalvo Ximenez de Quesada, at the foot of the Mountains, upon the River Pati, not far from the Lake of Guatavita, on the Banks of which they used to sacrifice to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, besides those of the Natives; and situate in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude. The Arch-Bishop has three Suffragans, Cartagena, St. Martha, and Popayana. It yields plenty of Cattle, Corn, and Fowls, for the subsistence of the Inhabitants, but not much Gold or Silver. 2. S. Michael, 12 Leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well traded Market. 3. Toycama, in the Territory of the Panches, a barbarous and Man-eating People, till reclaimed by the Spaniards; and Masters of the richest part of all the Country. The Town is about 15 Leagues from S. Foy, towards the North-east; and seated on the Banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is swallowed up in the body of Magdalen. 4. Tudela in the Country of the Musi and Colymæ, two warlike Nations; situate on the Banks of the River Zarbi, and made a Colony of the Spaniards at their first coming hither; but deserted by them not long after, for fear of the Savages, though the want of Provisions was pretended. 5. Trinidad, on the same River, but somewhat lower, and more remote from the Savages, by them notwithstanding much annoyed: the Fields thereof full of Veins of Crystal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalcedonies. 6. La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the same Territory of the Musi and Colymæ, Anno 1572. 7. Tunia, so called according to the name of the Tribe or Province in which it is situate; built on the top of an high Hill, that it might serve for a Retreat and Fortrefs against the Savages; now a well traded Empory, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to impress 280 Horse for present service. 8. Pampelona, 60 Leagues from S. Foy, towards the North-east, rich in Mines of Gold, and Herds of Cattle. 9. Merida, on the North of Pompiana, the farthest Town of all this Province, on the North-east towards Venezuela: as 10. S. John de los Planos, or S. John upon the Plains, is in the South east, 50 Leagues from S. Foy, and seated in a corner full of Veins of Gold.

2. POPAYANA, lieth on the West of New Granada strictly and specially so called; from which it is parted by the River Martha, which hath its original in this Country: on the North bounded with Nova Andalusia, or Cartagena; and with Mare del Zur upon the West; on the South by Peru: Extended in length from North to South 130 Leagues at the least; and from the River to the Sea betwixt 30 and 40. The Capital City is Popayan, seated near the rise of the River St. Martha, 140 Leagues from the South Sea to the East.

The Country over-cloy'd with Rain, yields but little Maize, less Wheat, and almost no Cattle; though in some places richer then it is in others. The People anciently Man-eaters, and as rude as any; now more industrious and affable than the other Americans, especially ally about Popayan, where the Soil is also better tempered than in other places. The Rivers of most note, beside that of S. Martha, which we have spoken of already, and some lesser streams which fall into it are, 1. Rio de S. Juan. 2. Rio de Cedros. 3. Rio de S. Jago; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greatest note, 1. Popayan, called by the name of the King hereof, when first known to the Spaniards, in the year 1537; situate on a nameless, but pleasant River, in the midst of a Plain, of great Wealth and healthy Air, in two degrees and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude; the ordinary residence of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop, under the Arch-Bishop of Santa de Te Bogota. The Building fair unto the Eye, but slight; excepting the Cathedral, and a Monastery of the Friars called De Mercede, which are strong and lasting. The Air is Temperate and healthful, but too much subject to Rain, Thunder and Lightning. It has plenty of Corn, Cattle, Fruits, and Herbs, and a double Harvest every Year. The Indians are more civil, Industrious, and Ingenious than most of the other Indians: The Houses are large, but mean as to the matter of them. 2. Antiocha, (or Sancta fides de Antiocha) on the borders of Nova Andalusia, 100 Leagues distant from Popayan. Seated upon a little River which falls into the Martha, from which twelve Leagues distant. 3. Caramanta, on the Martha, it self. 4. Patia, in a pleasant Valley on the banks of a small River, but of excellent water. 5. S. Anne, in the Cantered of Anzerman, by which name it is sometimes called: built on a little Hill betwixt two sweet Rivers, and compassed round about with a Grove of most pleasant Fruits. 6. S. Jago de Arma; the chief Town of the Cantered of Arma; situate on a Territory very rich in Gold, but otherwise unprovided of all manner of necessities; fifty Leagues to the North-east of Popayan. 7. Carthage, in the Province of Quimbaia, 22 Leagues from S. Jago de Arma; seated in a Plain betwixt two Torrents, seven Leagues from the River of S. Martha. 8. Cali, a League from that River, but on the Banks of another, in the Latitude of four degrees: neighboured by a vast and mighty Mountain, at whose feet it standeth; there built by Sebastian de Betalcazar, the first Discoverer of this Country. 9. Bonaventure, on a Bay so called in the Southern Ocean; a small Town, but of great use for the ready conveyance of the Commodities of New-Spain unto Popayan, and to other Towns of this Province. 10. Timana, 80 Leagues from Popayan towards the East, at the foot of that vast ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which hereabouts taking their beginning, extend as far Southwards as to the Streights of Magellan. 11. S. Juan de Pasto, situate in a pleasant Valley, but one degree from the Aequator. 12. Sebastian de La Plata, so called from its Silver Mines in the South-east confines of the Province. 13. Almagra, on the side of a Plain, but barren Mountain. 14. Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Chicu; in a barren Soil, were not Gold a Supplement of all wants, which there is found in some abundance.

To this Province belong also some Islands in the Southern Ocean: that is to say, 1. The Isle of Palmes, South of the Cape of Corientes, so called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2. Gorgona, opposite to the mouth or Outlet of Rio de S. Juan, an Island of three Leagues in compass; the Hills so high, the Valleys so extremely low, the Sun so little seen amongst them, and the Woods so dark, that some hath likened it to Hell. Not much observable, but that it did afford a lurking-place unto Franci Pizarro in his attempts upon Peru, when repulsed from landing on that Coast. 3. Eel-Gallo, a small Island, not a League in Circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Country thus divided into two Prefectures, but both subordinate to the Juridical Resort in the City of S. Foy de Bagota, is indebted for its first Discovery to two several persons, Granada specially so called was first discovered by Gonsalvo Ximenez de Quesado, employed therein by Ferdinando de Lugo, Admiral of the Canary Island, Anno 1536. who passing up the River of Magdalen without Molestation (more then the difficulties of the ways through Fens and Forests) as far as the Cantered of Bagota, was there encountered by that King, whom he easily vanquished, and waisting all his Territories, carried with him thence great quantity of Gold, Emeralds, and other Treasure. The residue of those Petit Princes, which then Governed in their several Tribes, either submitted to him without opposition, or else were vanquished at the first rising. Having discovered and subdued every several Province, and miserably murdered Sangipa the last King of Bagota, of whom he had made use in subduing the Panches, he caused it to be called the New Realm of Granada, for the reason formerly laid down: and summing up the Spoils he had gotten in this easie War, he found them to amount to 1800 Emeralds, 191294 Pezoes of the finest Gold, 35000 of a coarser and inferior Alloy. In his return, he heard the news of Sebastian de Betalcazar's marching on the other side of the River of S. Martha; who having at the same time discovered and subdued the Province of Popayan, was beating out his way towards the North Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Betalcazar, being by Francisco Pizarro, the Conquerour of Peru, made Governour of the Town and Province of Quito, and having secured all the Country to the very Sea, resolved to open a way homewards through those Regions which lay betwixt his own Province and Mare del Noort. And this did he resolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Countrey, full of Gold, was in that Tract possessed by Popayan and Columbaz, two petit Princes, but yet the greatest in those parts. Encountred in his march by the Royelets of Patia and Pasto, he soon made them weary, and retire themselves into the Woods and impassible Mountains; and passing slowly on, came at last to Popayan. Where, though the Savages entertained him with some frequent Skirmishes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to possess themselves of their best Towns, and to build others in such place as they thought convenient. But this was after the first Conquest, according to the coming over of succeeding Colonies. The first Conquest being finished Anno 1536, when the New Realm of Granada was subdued by Ximenez.

PERU.

PERU is bounded on the East with that vast ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the west with Mare del Zur; on the North with Popayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada; on the South, with Chile. So called from the River Peru, which being one of the first of Note which the Spaniards met with in this Country, occasioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700 Leagues, but the breadth not equal. In some Places 100 Leagues broad, in others 60, in the rest but 40; more or less, according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of so different a nature from one another, as if they were far distant both in Site and Soil. These parts are, the Plains, the Hill-Countries, and the Andes; the Plains extend on the Sea-shore, in all places level without Hills; the Andes, a continual ridge of Mountains without any Valleys; the Sierra, or Hill-Countries, composed of both. Each part stretcheth out from North to South, the whole length of the Country: the Plains from the Sea-Shore to the Hill-Countries, for the most part ten Leagues broad, in some places more; the Hill-Countries 20 Leagues in breadth where narrowest, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth, on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill-Countries it raineth from September to April, being alter that fair weather. In the Hill-Country the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may travel from Summer to Winter in one day; be frozen in the morning at his setting forth, and scorched with heat before he come to his journeys end. Some other differences there are: as that the Andes are covered with Woods and Forests, whereas the Hill-Countries are bare and naked; the Plains, where there are store of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea besides, sandy and dry, and in most places destitute both of Fruits and Corn: in some parts of the Hill-Countries, where there are no Rivers, and Rain but seldom, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other necessaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southerly Wind, though it bring no Rain with it; and in the Hills Winds from every Coast, and of every nature; some bringing Rain, some Snow, some claps of Thunder, and other fair Weather at the Heels of them. Inasmuch that it is observed, that such of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do find such pain in the Head and Stomach, as Fresh water Soldiers when first Sea-sick.

Not to pursue these differences any further in the several parts, we will look upon the whole in gross; which we shall find but meanly furnished for the bigness, with those Commodities which so large a Country might afford; inasmuch as many of the people live most on Roots, here being little Wheat, and not such quantities of Maize (the ordinary Bread-grain of the Americans) as to serve their multitudes. Nor find I, that the Cattle of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increase. Instead of which they have in their Woods and Pastures infinite numbers of Beasts, somewhat like wild Goats (which they call Meagras) and great store of a kind of Sheep, by them called Pacos, profitable both for Fleece and burthen; as big as a small breed of Horses, but in taste as pleasing as our Mutton and no less nourishing. A Creature so well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himself over-loaded, no blows or violence shall make him move a foot forwards, till his load be lessened, and of so cheap a Diet, that he is content with very little, and sometimes passeth three whole days without any water. The Camels of these parts are not much unlike them.

This, as it is by some accounted for a Creature proper to this Country only, (though in that mistaken) so may it pass among the Rarities hereof: many of which it hath both in Beasts and Plants, and inanimate Bodies also. Among their Plants they have a Fig tree, the North-part whereof, looking towards the Mountains, bringeth forth its fruits in the Summer only. the Southern part looking to the Sea, fruitful only in Winter. Some as deservedly do account the Coca for a Wonder, the Leaves whereof being dried and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding useful in a Journey. For melting in the mouth, they satisfy both hunger and thirst, and preserve a man in strength and his Spirits in vigour, and generally are esteemed of such sovereign use, that it is thought that 100000 Baskets full of the leaves of this Tree, are sold yearly at the Mines of Potosi only, each of which at the Market of Cusco would yield 12 pence or 18 pence apiece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I find no name for it, which if put into the hands of a sick person, will instantly discover whether he be like to live or die. For if on the pressing of it in his hand he look merry and chearful, it is an assured sign of his Recovery: as on the other side, of Death if sad and troubled. Amongst their Beasts, besides those spoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huanacu; of which it is observed, that the Males stand Sentinel on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Valleys; and if they see any men coming towards them, they set out their throats, to give their Females notice of some danger near; whom, when they come up to them, they put in the Front of the Retreat, interposing their own bodies betwixt them and their Enemy. Nor want the Rarities of Nature even in things inanimate: here being said to be a round, Lake near the Mines of Potosi, whose water is so hot, tho' the Country it self be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themselves are not able to endure the heats thereof, if they go but a little from the Banks; there being in the midst thereof a boiling of above twenty foot square. A Lake which never doth decrease, tho' they have drawn a great stream from it to serve their Metal-Mills.

More profitable, though less rare, are those Metals which those Mills are made for; and not less profitable, one of those Vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here than in other Countries of America: for which cause, and the resemblance which it hath to Henbane in form and quality, it is called the Henbane of Peru by Gerard, and from other of our Modern Herbalists. A Plant, which (though in some respect, being moderately taken, it may be serviceable for Physick, yet) besides the consumption of the purse, and impairing of our inward parts, the immoderate vain and phantastical abuse of this stinking Weed, corrupteth the natural sweetness of the breath, stupifieth the Brain, and indeed is so prejudicial to the general esteem of our Country-men, that one faith of

of them, Anglorum corpora, qui huic plantæ tantopere indulgent, in Barbarorum naturam degenerasse videntur. The two chief Virtues ascribed unto it (pardon me I beseech you this short Digression) are, That it voideth Rheum, and is found to be a soveraign Antidote against Lues Venerea, that loathsome disease of the French Pox. For this last, like enough it is, that so unclean a Disease may be helped with such an unfavoury Medicine. But for the first, it may perhaps consist more in Opinion than truth or reality; the Rheum, which it is said to void, being no more than what it breedeth at the present. We may as well conclude, that Bottled Ale is good for the breaking of wind, (which effect we find commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the same Wind which it self conveyed into the stomach. But Tobacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times grown a good fellow, and fallen from a Physician to a Compliment. An Humour which had never spread so far amongst us, if the same means of prevention had been used by the Christian Magistrates, as was by Morat Bassa amongst the Turks; who commanded a Pipe to be thrust through the nose of a Turk, whom he found taking Tobacco, and him to be carried in derision all about Constantinople. It is observed, that the taking of Tobacco, was first brought into England by the Mariners of Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1585. and that it happened not unfitly, in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate use of Drinking, which our Low-Country Soldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time, An. 1582. before which time, the English and all Northern people were deemed to be most free from that Swinish vice, wherein it is to be feared, that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken so excessively by both these Nations, that I may justly say with a learned Fleming, Herbæ ejus, non dicam usus, sed abusus, non modo in Anglia, sed in Belgio, & alibi, insanum in modum jam adolevit.

But the greatest Riches of this Country is most out of sight, hid in the bowels of the Earth, but found in those never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver, more eminently abounding in this own Province than in all America. For instance, whereof we may take the Silver-Mines of Potosi, discovered in the year 1545. the fifth of which, payable into the King's Exchequer, amounted in forty years to 111 Millions of Pezoes, every Pezo being valued at six shillings and six pence: and yet a third part of the whole was discharged of that Payment. By this one we may guess somewhat of the rest, as by the proportion of one member the Dimensions of the whole Body may be probably aimed at: unless the riches of these Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by some knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold than Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arias Montanus, and some other very learned men, That this Peru is that Land of Ophir to which Solomon's Navy went for Gold; induced thereunto by that Text of the Chronicles, lib. 2. cap. 3. vers. 6. That the Gold was the Gold of Parvaim. A fancy not of so sandy a Foundation as many others of that kind, if Peru had been the old name of this Country, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whereof, not only Spain but all Europe also is better furnished with Gold and Silver than ever formerly. For in the first Ages of the World, our Ancestors, the Britans, (I must digress here once again) had no other money than Iron Rings and brass-Rings, which they used for Instruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the most usual materials of their Coin was most times Brass, and sometimes Leather. Corum forma publicè percussum, as it is in Seneca. Of which last sort we find, that Frederick the Emperour made use at the Siege of Millain, and the English in the time of the Barons Wars. And why not so? considering that no longer since than in the year 1574, the Hollanders being then reduced to some Extremities made money of Past-board. But this happeneth only in cases of Necessity, the two Metals of Gold and Silver having for many hundred years (though not in such abundance as in latter times) been the chief Instruments of Exchange and Bartery betwixt man and man, and questionless will so continue to the end of the World. I know Sir Thomas More in the second Book of his Utopia, preferred Iron before Gold, because more necessary for all uses; Ut sine quo non magis quam sine igne atque aqua vivere Mortales queant: and that he giveth us there a Plot to bring Gold and Silver into contempt; telling us, how the Utopians use to employ those Metals in making Chamber pots and Vessels of more unclean necessities, eating and drinking for the most part in Glass or Earth. He telleth us also, how they make Chains and Fetters of Gold to hold in their rebellious Slaves and Malefactors; how they punish infamous persons by putting Gold-Rings upon their Fingers, Jewels of Gold in their Ears, and Chains of Gold about their Necks: how they adorn their little Children with precious Jewels, which Gayeties, when they come to Age, and see them worn by none but such little Children, they use to cast away of their own accord; as with us our elder Boys, leave off without constraint, their Babies, Cobnuts and other Crepundia. He farther tells us, how the Ambassadors of the Anemolii, (a confederate State of the Utopians) coming amongst them richly and gloriously attired, were took for Slaves, by reason of their Golden Chains, and the meanest of their followers thought to be the Ambassadors: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing Jewels, as if they had been Children still; and how the people laughed at their Chains of Gold, as being too weak to shackle such sturdy Fellows. Now though it pleased that wise State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongst them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any esteem which themselves had of it; but therewith to provide themselves of foreign Aids, and pay their Armies, when the necessities of their affairs, or other reason of State did require the same. How this Device would sort with the humours of those People whom Lucian anciently did fable, and some of latter times more really do fancy, to have their dwelling in the Moon, I am not able to say, as having hitherto had no commerce nor correspondence with the Inhabitants thereof: though possibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and find it to sort well enough with their condition. Certain I am, this sublunary World of ours, will never brook it. And so I leave it, and look back again on the Mines of Peru: the extraordinary plenty of Gold and Silver, which those and the rest of the New World have furnished the Old World withal; being conceived by many knowing and judicious men, to be the cause of the dearness of all Commodities at the present times, compared unto the cheapness of the times foregoing. For where much is, there will be greater prices given than in other places. And yet there want not some that add also other causes of the high prices of our days, viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and craft-men, Transportation of Grain, pleasure of great Personages, the excess of private men, and the like: but these last I rather take to be Con-causes, the first being indeed the principal. For (as that excellent Sir Henry Savil hath it in the end of his notes on Tacitus) the excessive abundance of τὰ ὑβρίων ὄντα, things which consist merely on the constitution of men, draweth necessarily τὰ φύσιν ὄντα, those things which Nature requireth, to an higher Rate in the Market. Captâ ab Augusto Alexandria, (saith Orosius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit, ut dupla majora quàm antehac rerum venalium pretia statuerentur. As for that Question, Whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which supplieth it self with Money by Traffick and the works of Art, or that which is supplied by Mines growing as the gift of Nature; I find it by this Tale in part resolved. Two Merchants, departing from Spain to get Gold, touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buying Moors to dig and delve with, the other fraughteth his Vessel with Sheep; and being come to the Indies, the one finding Mines, let his Slaves to work; and the other happening in grassy Ground, put his Sheep to grazing. The Slaves grown cold and hungry, call for Food and Cloathing; which the Sheep-master by the increase of his stock had in great abundance: so that what the one got in Gold with toil, charges and hazard both of life and wealth, he gladly gave unto the other in Exchange or Bartery, for the continual supply of Victuals, Cloaths, and other Necessaries for himself and his Servants. In the end the Mines being exhausted, and all the money thence arising exchanged with the Shepherd, for such Necessaries as his Wants required; home comes the Shepherd, in great Triumph, with abundance of Wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his Travels. But I dare not take upon me to determine this point. Only I add, that the English and Hollanders, by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick, did in conclusion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the Second, and outvied him (as it were) in wealth and Treasure; notwithstanding his many Mines of Gold and Silver in Barbary, India, Mexicana, Guinea, some in Spain and Italy, and these of Peruana which now we handle, and which have given occasion unto this Discourse, or Digression rather. Before the Spaniards reduced it, this Kingdom was Civilized by the Inca's, who had reduced them from their barbarous Rites and Customs, to a more regular form of Government. They had no Humane Sacrifices like the Mexicans, and detested their Custom of eating Mans Flesh. They were all clothed with Garments made of Cotton or Hair, and had the Art of Spinning and Weaving, which was managed, for the most part, by the Men within doors, whilst their Women took care of their Agriculture, and all their outward business.

It is now time to take a view of the People also, affirmed to be (for the most part) of great simplicity, yet some of them (those especially which lie near the Aequator) to be great dissemblers, and never to discover their conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in Wars, well skilled in managing such Weapons as they had been used to, and fearless of Death: the rather prompted to this last, by an old opinion held amongst them, that in the other world they shall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great person, who was attended on in his life, they use to kill and bury with him one or more of his Servants, to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living, much like the Jews, but not in Habit; conforming therein to the other Savages, but that those cover their upper parts with some decent Garment, and leave the other Members bare. But this is only near the Aequator; both Sexes elsewhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one fashion over all the Country, except the dressing of their Heads, wherein scarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his Fashion to himself. The Women less esteemed here than in other places, treated as Slaves, and sometimes cruelly beaten upon slight occasions: the men (as S. Paul saith of the ancient Gentiles) leaving the natural use of the Woman, and burning in their lust towards one another. For which, if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompence which was meet. Those on the Sea Coast lived mostly in the open Air, under Shady Trees, or houses covered with a Mat and a little Earth, because it never Rains. The Mountaineers lived in houses covered with Turfs, and were more Industrious, Ingenious, Valiant and Active: their Women were White, of better Education, and very useful to the Men, in assisting them in the Tillage of the Earth; their worship was mostly paid to the Sun, as to the Minister of the great God, and they thought the Moon was his Wife, but they did not worship her. They had one Temple dedicated to God, but many very magnificent Piles to the Sun; and they had an Imperfect Notion of Heaven and Hell, and the Immortality of the Soul, and of the Rewards and Punishments in another Life.

Lact. lib. 10. c. 1.

Rivers of most note, 1. St. Jago, on the borders towards Popayana; a River of a violent course, and so great a depth, that it is 180 Fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2. Tombez, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over against the Isle of Puna, on the further side of the Aequator; an Island of twelve Leagues in compass, and exceeding fruitful. 3. Guagaquil, of a longer course than any of the other two, and falling into Mare del Zur, on the South of Tombez, over against the Isle of Lobos. No Island after this of note upon all this Coast. If any come in our way which runneth towards the East, we shall meet with them in view of the several Provinces; and so we shall with the Hills or Mountains which are most considerable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaca, in which twelve Rivers are reported to lose themselves; in Compass 80 Leagues, and usually Navigable with Ships and Barks. The Waters of it not so salt as those of the Sea, but so thick, that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many Habitations as good as any in Peru. By a fair Water-course or River it passeth into a less Lake, which they call Aulaga; and thence most probably findeth a way into the Sea, or else is swallowed in the bowels of that thirsty earth: but the first more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Juridical Reforts; viz. of 1. Quito. 2. Lima: and 3. Charchos; each having under it many several and subordinate Provinces, too many and of too small note to be here considered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greatest reckoning: 1. Quito. 2. Los Quixos. 3. Lima. 4. Cusco. 5. Charchos: and 6. Collao; three on the Sea, and the other three in the mid-lands; to which the Islands of it shall be joyned in the close of all.

1. QUITO, is bounded on the North with Popayan; on the West, with Mare del Zur, or the Pacifick Ocean; on the South, with the Province of Lima; and on the East, with that of Los Quixos. So named from Quito the chief Town and Province of the first Division. It had at first Kings of its own, but before the arrival of the Spaniards, was conquered by the King of Peru, and together with it fell under the Dominion of Spain.

The Soil is as fertile, and as fit for the Fruit of Europe as any other in Peru: well stored with Cattle, especially the Paco's or Peruvian Sheep; and plentifully furnished both with Fish and Fowl. In many parts great store of Nitre, of which they make most approved good Gunpowder; and in some Rivers, especially that of S. Barbara, many veins of Gold. The People generally industrious, especially in making of Cloath of Cotton, equal almost to silks for fineness: of constitution strong, and healthy, but given to lying, drinking, and such other Vices; with which they are so much in love, that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Christian Faith, not willingly reclaimed from their ancient Barbarism. Extremely punished with the Pox, an hereditary Disease amongst them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins so infected with it, that neither Tobacco, Guaiacum, nor Sarsaparilla, all which this Country doth afford, in a great abundance, is able to preserve them from it.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Caranguet, a large and sumptuous Palace of the ancient Kings, so named, because situate in the Territory of the Caranguet, a barbarous, bloody, and a man-eating People; subdued by Guayanacapa, one of the mightiest of the Kings of Peru; from whom revolting, and withal killing many of his Ministers and Garrison Soldiers, they were upon a second Conquest brought to the Banks of a great Lake, into which 20000 of them being killed were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Yaguarcocha, or the lake of blood. 2. Otavallu, another Palace of the Kings, but far inferior to the other; yet giving name unto the Cantred in which it standeth. 3. Quito, the chief of this Refort, and once the Regal Seat of its proper Kings, (till made Subject by Guayanacapa before mentioned) the Ruines of whose

Palace

Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Francisco, built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30 minutes from the Equinoctial; well fortified, and as well furnished with Ammunition: inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, besides the Natives. The Streets thereof strait and broad; the Buildings decent: the principal of which, the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Justice, and two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a flaming Mountain, or Volcano; which in the year 1560. cast out such abundance of Cinders, that if Rain had not happened beyond expectation, had made great spoil upon the place. Its See is under the Arch-Bishop of Limas, and stands in the fruitful Valley, at the foot of a Mountain called Volcano Pinta, near Machangara and Machangavilla, two Rivers almost under the Line, 250 Spanish Leagues from Lima to the North, and six from the Pacifick Ocean to the East. In 1586. there was an University opened here. The Soil seems barren, yet yields Corn, Fruits, and Cattle plentifully. The Position is pleasant, the Temperature of the Air like that of Spain. The natural Inhabitants are more Civil and Industrious than those of the greater part of Peru. In my Author's time it was inhabited by 500 Spanish Families, some Portugals, and some other European Nations. Lact. p. 512.

4. Tacunga, fifteen Leagues from Quito; and 5. Rbio-bamba, in the Territory of the Purwasu, 40 Leagues from that: each of them honoured with another of those ancient Palaces. 6. Thomebamba, neighboured by another of the King's Palaces, but more magnificent than the former, situate in the Country of the Canaries, amongst whom anciently the Women tilled the Land, and did all without doors, whilst the men staid at home and spun, and attended Housewifery. 7. Cuenca, 64 Leagues from Quito, on another Road, situate in a Country full of Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, and Veins of Sulphur. 8. Loxa, sometimes called Zarza, sixteen Leagues Southward of Cuenca, situate in the fifth degree of Southern Latitude, and in a sweet and pleasant Valley called Guxibamba, between two fine Rivulets. The Citizens well furnished with Horse and Armour, but not otherwise wealthy. This place is free from Serpents and all troublesome Insects. The Air is healthful, but rather hot than cool, subject to Rains from March to August, but never saw any Snow. It has plenty of Oak and Cedar Timbers, and fine Springs of Water, Maize and Wheat, Cattle, Fish and Fowl. The Natives of it encrease much, and willingly embrace the Christian Religion, Lact. p. 418. 9. Zamora, twenty Leagues on the East of Loxa: and 10. Jaen, 35 from that, both situate in the Province of Quichimayo, and both so called in reference to two Cities of those names in Spain. Then on the Sea-coasts there are, 11. Portus Vetus, (Puerto Viejo, as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea-side, but in so ill an Air, that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the first Towns of this Country possessed by the Spaniards, who digged up hereabouts the bones of a monstrous Giant, whose Cheek-teeth were four fingers broad. 12. Mantu, the Port-Town to Porto Viejo, from whence the Trade is driven betwixt Panama and Peru; the Town itself situate in a rich Vein of Emeralds. 13. Guayaquil, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called also Gulata; seated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, near the influx of the River Guayaquil, a noted and much frequented Empory. 14. Castro a Colony of Spaniards, planted Anno 1568. in that part of this Country which they call Provincia de los Esmeraldos, bordering on Popayan. 15. S. Michael, by the old Natives called Piura, the first Colony which the Spaniards planted in Peru, but otherwise of no estimation. 16. Payta, a small Town, but neighboured by the safest and most frequented Haven of all this Country, as guarded from the Wind by the Cape of S. Hellens: on the North, and Punta Piurina on the South, two eminent Promontories. The Town burnt, Anno 1587. by Captain Cavendish; who at the same time also pillaged the Isle of Puna, the most noted Island of this Tract, situate in the Bay of Tombez, as was said before. Fruitful of all things necessary to the life of man; Parrots for pleasure; Sarsaparilla for his health. The people in preceding times so stout and warlike, that they Maintained a long War with those of Tombez, till in the end, composed by the mediation of the King of Peru, to whom the King hereof (for a King it had) became an Homager, as since their embracing of the Gospel, to the Kings of Spain.

2. LOS QUIXOS lieth on the East of Quito, and the West of El Dorado (one of the Cantreds or Guiana, so called from its abundance of Gold:) little different in the nature of the Soil and People from the Province of Quito; but that this is somewhat the more barren, and less stored with those rich Metals which the Spaniards come for. This was first discovered in the year 1557. The Spaniards have only four Colonies in it. The people have also a distinct Tongue of their own, though they both understand and speak the Peruvian Language.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Baeza, built in the year 1559. (which was within two years of the first Discovery of this Region) by Giles Ramirez de Avila; 18 Leagues from Quito towards the East, now the Seat of the Governour. 2. Archidona, 20 Leagues on the South-East of Baeza. 3. Avila, on the North of Archidona; so called with reference to Ramirez de Avila before mentioned, or to a Town of that name in Spain. 4. Sevilla del Oro, a Colony of Spaniards, as the others are.

On the East of this Province both the Cantred of Canelam, inhabited by a blockish and ignorant people, and destitute of all things necessary for the comforts of Life. Most mercilessly tormented, and cast to Dogs, to be devoured, by Pizarro, because they could not shew him the readiest way to some richer Country than their own; this being the most barren Region of that part of Peru which they call La Sierra, or the Hill-Countries. More Eastward yet in that part which they call the Andes, lie the Cantreds of the Bracomori, commonly called Judan de Salinis, by the name of the first Discoverer of it. A Country not inferiour unto many for the quantity of Gold; superiour to any for the pureness of it. Chief Towns of which, 1. Valladolid. 2. Loiola, by the Natives called Combinama. 3. S. Jago de las Montanas, (or S. James of the Mountains:) all Spanish Colonies; and all of the foundation of John de Salinis a Loiola, once the Pro-Prefect of the Province, by whom first thoroughly subdued to the Crown of Spain.

3. LIMA, called also LOS REYES, is bounded on the North with Quito; on the South, with Charcas; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Colloa, and the Province of Cusco. So named from Lima, or Los Reyes, the chief City of it. Extended from the sixth to the sixteenth degree of Southern Latitude: or measuring from the Promontory del Aguja North, to Arequipa on the South, it reacheth to 250 Leagues. The Soil is of the same nature with that of Quito, but more distributed into Valleys, and better peopled.

Places of most observations, 1. Miraflores, in the Valley of Zana, 110 leagues on the North of Lima, and about 5 leagues distant from the Sea; on which it had an Haven belonging to it called Chencepen. The Town is well seated, and inhabited by a wealthy People, made such by the abundance of Sugar-canes in the neighbouring Valley. 2. Truxillo, in the rich and flourishing Valley of Chimo, on the banks of a small but pleasant River, and about two Leagues from the Sea, where it hath a large but unsafe Haven, which they call El Azzeise de Trigillo. The Town itself situate in the seventh degree and 30 minutes of Southern Latitude; well built and rich, one of the principal of Peru; inhabited by 1500 Spaniards, besides the Natives, and beautified with four Convents of several Orders. The Spaniards have planted here Vines, Fig-trees, Oranges, Wheat, and all other Spanish Fruits; so that they

they have a Plenty of Provisions ; its Lat is 7. 30. to the South 80 Leagues from Lima to the North. It was then one of the principall Cities of Peru, containing 500 houses, four Monasteries, and having in the Neighbourhood 50000 Indians that paid Tribute to the Citizens. This Tribute is more properly a rent ; with in two Leagues of the City, it has a Port upon the South Sea, which is not safe, yet much frequented about the year 1630. Laet p. 428. 3. La Parilla, in the Valley of the Santa, in which it standeth, and by which it is furnished with a safe and convenient Road for Shipping: 20 Leagues Southwards of Truxillo, and neighboured by rich Mines of Silver, not long since discovered. 4. Ayacucho, seated amongst Vineyards in the Valley of Chancay, ten Leagues North of Lima. 5. Lima, by the Spaniards called Ciudad de Los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Valley of Lima, the most fruitful part of all Peru, in the Latitude of Twelve Degrees and an Half. Built with much Art, for all the chief streets answer to the Market-place ; scarce any private House which hath not water conveyed into it from the River ; environed round about with sweet Fields and most pleasant Gardens. The Founder of it Francisco Pizarro, who laid the first stone on Twelfth-day, (which the Spaniards call the Feast of Kings) whence it had the name, Anno 1553. A Town of greater Wealth than Bigness, the Riches of Peru passing yearly through it, well housed, whether we respect the private or publick Edifices : the Cathedral Church made after the Model of that of Sevil ; the Convents of Religious Orders, the Courts of Justice, and the Palaces of the Archbishop and Vice-Roy, being all fair and goodly Buildings ; the Cathedral Church so well endow'd that the Revenues of the Archbishop do amount yearly to 30000 Ducats, besides what belongeth to the Canons and other Ministers. The Air is so temperate, that there is no Need of Fire, and yet the heats are not troublesome, which are greatest in December, January, February, and March, their Vintage is in Aprill : From May to September is their Winter, which is very cloudy, yet it never Rains ; but a small dew falls, that makes the Earth very fruitful. This is their most pleasant season, and that which yeilds them all sorts of Fruit. The Valley of Lima is watered by three Rivers, and beautified by a Vast number of Farms, yeilding plenty of Sugar, Figs, Vines, and Flesh ; the Ocean affords it equal plenty of Fish. The City is seat on the South side of a Vast River, covered by a stone Bridge. It has six Parish Churches, fifteen Monasteries, four Hospitals ; each House has an Aqueduct, a Court, and most of them have Gardens, but low and ill built. The City is without doubt very rich, the Viceroy enjoying a Revenue of 400000 Ducats. The Prebends 5 or 6000. It is also the General Mart of south America, and almost the only Port on the South Sea ; hither is first brought all the Gold and Silver of Peru and Chile, and all the European Merchandize from Panama with those of New Spain ; from hence many millions of Gold and Silver is sent every year to Panama for Europe. The City is altogether open without any Wall, Garrison, or Watch, by Day or Night, only the Gardens about it are Secured by a Bank of Earth. The Spaniards of both Sexes were thought (about 1630.) to be 5000, the Negroes 40000. The Viceroy had two Troops of Horse, and eight Companies of foot, who were paid by the King of Spain, but the foot were not, but the Citizens were Armed for their Security, Laet. p. 432. The 20th of October, 1687. this City was intirely Ruined by an Earthquake, not one house escaping and 1000. of the Inhabitants perished by the Sea, and falls of Houses. 6. Collao, the Haven Town to Lima, from which two Leagues distant ; a Town of 600 Families, for the most part Seamen : every House having some Cellar in it for the stowage of Wine, Tobacco, Cables, Pitch, &c. for the use of Mariners ; besides those publick Ware houses for the several Commodities which pass from Lima hither, or from hence to Lima. Unfortified till the year 1579. when lacked and spoiled of infinite Treasures by sin Francisco Drake ; since that time strengthened by two Belworks and a Wall of Earth, with 30 peices of Brass Ordnance planted on the Works. In 1624. the Dutch took the Island over against the Port, and fortified it ; but they could never take Callao. Yet of 50 Ships they found there, they burnt 30. The goevell Year a great Fleet from hence to America in March, 1624. the Spanish Fleet from Potosi, which with the rest of the Treasures of the Kingdom in May is sent to Panama. In the last quarter of 1687. this suffered as much as Lima, the Queen calling the Ship a League on Land, and Dutch from a finite number of the Inhabitants on the shore, Panama, in the Valley so called, but four Leagues on the South of Lima : memorable for a Temple, in which Pizarro found above 900000 Ducats of Gold and Silver, not reckoning those infinite Treasures when the Soldiers had laid hands on before his coming. 8. Guarco, a Colony of 300 Spaniards, sixteen Leagues on the South of Pachacama, environed with the best Fields for Wheat in all Peru. 9. Valverde in a Valley of the same name, so called from the perpetual Greenness of it ; best furnished with Vines, and those affording the best Wines of all this Country. A large Town, consisting of 500 Spaniards, besides Women and Children, and other Inhabitants of the Country, well Traded, considering its distance from the Sea, (Puerto Quemado, the Haven to it being Six Leagues off) and beautified with a fair Church, and Hospital, three Frieries, and the handsomest Women of these parts, distant from Lima 35 leagues. The Air is pure and healthful, the Women the most beautiful in Peru ; The Governour was nominated by the King of Spain. It stands 35 Leagues from Lima to the South, Laet. p. 436. 10. Cajaro Verreyna, in the Valley of Chocolococha, 60 leagues from Lima, enriched with Mines of the purest Silver, digged out of a dry and barren Hill, always covered with snow ; and standing in so sharp an Air, that the Spanish Women will not be delivered in it, but are carried farther off to be brought to bed. From hence, as I conjecture, comes that Vein of Tobacco, which our Good fellows celebrate by the name of the right Varreinas. 11. Arequipa, in the Valley of Quilca, 120 Leagues from Lima, a pleasing and delightful Town ; which situate at the Foot of a flaming Mountain, (from which in the year 1600 it received much harm) enjoyeth a fresh and temperate Air, and a Soil always flourishing. The Silver of Plata and Potosi passeth through this Town, and is Shipped for Panama, as an Haven belonging to it, situate at the Mouth of the River Chile, (upon which Arequipa standeth) but distant from the Town about 14 Leagues. This City lieth 150 Leagues from Potosi, a long and a difficult Passage, and yet for a great while the Silver was brought hither that was to be shipped for Spain ; but it is now carried to Arica, which is much nearer. In the Year 1572. this City was almost wholly ruined by an Earthquake, and in 1600. a Volcano near it raged so horribly, that the Noise was heard to Lima, and the Ashes of it spoiled all the Fruit in Peru that year. If this One Mountain had that dreadful Effect, what will follow when all the combustible Matter in the Bowels of the Earth, shall at once be fired at the Command of the great Former of it ? This is a Bishops See, under the Archbishop of Cusco, and it is Governed by a Corregidore. The Indians of these parts are much destroyed by the Spaniards, Laet. p. 439. 12. Caxamalca, more within the Land, but more towards the North, heretofore beautified with a Royal Palace of the Kings of Peru ; memorable for the imprisonment and murder of Attilaba, or Atinabpa, the last King of this Country, vanquished not far off by Francisco Pizarro. 13. Cachapoyaro, in the Cantred so called ; the best inhabited of any one Cantred of those parts, supposed to contain in it 20000 of the natural inhabitants, which pay Duties to the King of Spain ; and is esteemed for beautiful Women, that from hence the Kings were anciently furnished with their Concubines. 14. Leon de Guanaco, (the addition given it from the Province in which it standeth) a Colony of Spaniards, rich sweet and very pleasantly seated: beautified heretofore with a most magnificent Palace of the Kings; as now with some Religious Houses, a College of Jesuites, and the dwellings of many of the Nobility. Many other midland Towns there are, but of no great note, and therefore purposely passed over.

4. CUSCO, comprehendeth, as the chief of all those several Provinces of the Hill-Countries, and the Andes which lie Southwards of the Province or Cantred of Guanaco. Blest with a sweet and temperate Air, not over scalded with the Sun, nor chilled with the distempers of the Evening Mists: the Country full of fresh Rivers, notable good Pasturage, and great Herds of Cattle; well stored with Coco, which is gathered here in some abundance, and most excellent Venison.

Places of most repute in it, 1. Bombon, in the same Latitude with Lima, neighboured by a Lake called Laguna de Chíncha cocha, ten Leagues in compass, begirt about with pleasant Hills, and built upon with many rich and as pleasant Villages: out of which runneth the River Marranon, one of the greatest of these parts, supposed by the Inhabitants to end his course in Mare del Noort. 2. Parcos, once beautified with a regal Palace, seated on the top of a little hill, and begirt about with craggy Mountains. 3. Guamanga, by the Spaniards called S. Juan de la Victoria, situate under the 13. degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of a fresh and pleasing Stream, well built, the Houses being all of Stone, and tiled or slated; three Churches one of them a Cathedral, besides divers Convents. 4. Bicar, supposed to be built in the very Centre of Peru; where still remain the ruins of a sumptuous Palace. 5. Guanacablica, a new Town, or but newly raised into esteem, supposed to contain at the present 2000 Spaniards, and double that number of the Natives. Increased, since the year 1566, from a beggarly Village to this greatness, by the Mines of Quick-silver then discovered: Mines of such Riches, that the Kings part out of them amounted yearly to above 40000 Pezoes, which is about 130000 l. of our English money. And yet this is not all the benefit he receives from them neither; that Mineral being found so necessary for the purifying and speedy extraction of their Gold, that it is not said without cause by the Chymists, that Quick-silver gives the matter to Gold, and Sulphur the form. 6. Cusco, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees and 30 minutes, about 130 Leagues on the East of Lima, and situate in a rugged and unequal Soil, begirt with Mountains, but on both sides of a pleasant and commodious River. Once the Seat-Royal of the Ingas or Peruvian Kings; who the more to beautifie this City, commanded every one of the Nobility to build here a Palace for their continual abode. Still of most credit in this Country, both for beauty and bigness, and the multitude of Inhabitants; here being thought to dwell 3000 Spaniards, and 10000 of the Natives, besides Women and Children. The Palace of the King, advanced on a lofty Mountain, was held to be a work of so great a magnificence, built of such huge and massie Stones, that the Spaniards thought it to have been the work rather of Devils than of Men. Now miserably defaced, most of the Stones being tumbled down to build private Houses in the City: some of the Churches raised also by the ruins of it, and amongst them perhaps both the Bishop's Palace and Cathedral, whose annual Rents are estimated at 20000 Ducats. Yet did not this vast Building yield more lustre to the City of Cusco, than a spacious Market-place, the Centre in which those Highways did meet together, which the Ingas had caused to be made cross the Kingdom, both for length and breadth, with most incredible charge and pains for the use of their Subjects. Of which more hereafter. The principal Temple was Dedicated to the Sun, and was a rich and magnificent Pile on the Acra, of which the Monastery of St. Dominick is now built, which is of great Fame and extent. When the Spaniards came into America, they found never a Town but Cusco, that had the form of a City, nor is it any wonder that it was the Richest City in Peru, since it was the Royal City, to which the Treasure of so many and so distant Provinces were brought, which the Spaniards found lodged in many Vaults, amounting to an Immense Sum in Silver and Gold. It has now four Monasteries, four Churches, and many Hospitals: The Air is cold but very Healthful, and the City has all things necessary in great abundance. In the midst of the City is a Fountain that yields the purest white Salt, though 140 Leagues from the Sea, Lact. p. 450. Cusco was built by Inca Manco Capac, the first King of Peru, 400 years before the Arrival of the Spaniards in America, ibid 469. 7. S. Francisco de la Victoria, at the foot of the Andes, a Spanish Colony, and about 20 Leagues from Cusco. 8. S. Juan del Oro, in the Valley of Caravayan, neighboured with rich Mines of the purest Gold, whence it had the name; a Colony of Spaniards also. Beyond the Andes lie some Countrys, much famed for Wealth; the Discovery whereof hath often been attempted by the Spaniards, sometimes with loss, not seldom with some hopes of a better fortune, but hitherto without success. It seems a mighty wonder that the Spaniards should not follow the course of the Rivers that in this Kingdom cut the Andes, and fall certainly into the Atlantick Ocean, for though they may possibly meet with Cataracts, or great falls, yet supposing their Boats are small, they may there drag them over the Land, and with greater facility Travel down a stream 1000 Miles, than up the stream 500, or on the dry Land 200; and besides their Boats will carry their Provisions as well as men, which are most likely to be wanting in such long Journeys, amongst Barbarous Nations. We are told two Priests by Boat came down from Peru, to the mouth of the River of Amazons; and that a Spanish General went up the same River to Peru; which shews, this is not a meer Speculation; but the Mulato or American Spaniards are much less Courageous and Active than their Ancestors, and having vast spaces of Rich unpeopled Lands, have no Temptation for the present to seek for new Conquests. These are in part also the Reasons why the English have not searched the Rivers on the West side of the Apalatean Hills, dividing Carolina, Virginia, and New England, from Canada: though the discovery of the falls of these Rivers, especially if any of them pass into the Bay of Mexico, would be of equal Advantage to the English, that these would be to the Spaniards.

5. COLLAO lieth on the South of those Provinces, which we have comprehended under the name of Cusco; having on the West the rest of Lima; on the South, Los Charcos; on the East, those unknown Countrys beyond the Andes. Shut up on the East and West by two Mountainous Ridges, which keeping in one main body till they come beyond the City of Cusco, do there divide themselves, and grow wider and wider, not to meet again.

The Country is plain and full of Rivers, well stored with rich Pastures, and those Pastures with great Herds of Cattle, barren of Corn, and not well furnished with Maize; instead whereof they make their bread of a Root called Papa, dried in the Sun and bruised to powder: of which the Spaniards make great gain at the Mines of Potosi. Yet notwithstanding this great want, it is thought to be the most Populous part of all Peru: the soundness and temperature of the Air (which is here very much commended) as much conducing to the populousity of a Country, as the richness and plenty of the Soil. The People are also of a clearer and more solid Judgment than the rest of Peru, and so well skilled in the observation of the Course of the Moon, that the Spaniards at their coming hither, found the Year distinguished into Months, Weeks, Days, for each of which which they had a proper and significant name. The famous Lake of Titicaca is within this Province.

Places of greatest note in it, 1. Cbuinga, naturally strong and almost inaccessible, environed either with unfordable Waters, or impassable Mountains; one Causeway only leading to it, which for the space of three Leagues, is said to be capable but of one at once. 2. Ayavire, ennobled with many fair and costly Buildings; especially with Monuments of the dead, which exceed the rest both in cost and number: for that cause by the Spaniards called Las Sepulturas: The Inhabitants of this Tract were much wasted by the Civil Wars which the Spaniards had among themselves. 3. Hatuncolla, the Metropolis or chief Town of this Province, as the name doth signifie: not far from which the famous River Carabaya, famous for the abundance of Gold in the sands thereof, hath its first original. 4. Cbiquita, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the Banks of the Lake of Titicaca: a Town of so great Trade and Riches, that the Governour hereof is named immediately by the King; his place being estimated at the worth of 50000 Ducats yearly. 5. Tiaguanaco, at the mouth or out-let of that Lake; supposed to be the most ancient Burrough of Peru: now most remarkable for the Ruines of certain great and stupendious Buildings, some of the stones whereof are said to be 20 foot long, fifteen foot in breadth, and six in thickness; not to be brought thither without the help of Iron Engines (which this people had not till of late) but by some strange Arts. 6. De la Paz, or Nuestra Señora de la Paz, by the Spaniards called also Pueblo Nuevo, and by the Natives Cbiquiabo, according to the name of the Cantred in which it standeth, is situate at the foot of a little Mountain, by which defended from the injuries of Wind and Weather, but over-looking a large Plain of great fertility, well watered, and well wooded both for Fruits and Fuel. 7. Chilane, 8. Acos, 9. Pomata, 10. Cepita: and some others of as little note.

6. LOS CHARCAS on the North is bounded with Lima and Collao; on the South, with Chile; on the West, with Mare del Zur, on the East, with some Countreys not well discovered, interposed betwixt it and the Province of Kio de la Plata. This is also called by the name of Plata, according to the name of the chief City of it.

The Country extendeth in length from North to South but 300 Leagues, but measuring by the Sea-shores, above 400. Not very rich in Corn or Cattle, though in many places furnished with good Pasture-grounds; but for the inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, not to be equalled in Peru. Of these the principal are those of Porco and Potosi, but these last the chief: out of which comes that Mass of Silver which yieldeth the King so much profit yearly, as before was mentioned. The Mine 200 Fathoms deep, to which they do descend by Ladders made of raw Hides, 800 steps, some of the workmen see not the Sun for many months together; many fall down with their loads of Silver on their backs, pulling others after them. and many die in the works for want of Air. For the refining of this Silver there are 52 Engines of Silver Mills, upon a River near unto it; 22 more in the Valley of Tarapia not far off, besides many which they turn with Horses. The Poets words never more literally verified then in these deep Mines, where speaking of the Iron Age, he describes it thus.

Poscebatur humus, sed itum est in viscera terræ;
Quasque reconcliderat Stygiisque admoberat Umbris, Effodiantur opes, irritamenta malorum,*

Which I find thus rendred by George Sandys:

* Nor with rich Earth's just nourishments content,
For Treasures they her secret Entrails rent.
That powerful evil, which all power invades,
By her well hid and wrapt in Stygian Shades.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Plata, so called from the rich Mines of Silver found in Mount Porco near

adjoyning; well emptied by the ancient Incas, and replenished into again by Francisco Pizarro, who (as is thought) might have raised hence 200000 Ducats of yearly incomes, if hopes of greater at Potosi had not took him off. The Town is commodiously seated in a fruitful soil in the 19. degree of Latitude, and 18 Leagues distant from the City of Cusco, honoured with the seat of the Governour and the Courts of Justice, and beautified (besides many Religious Houses) with a fair Cathedral, the See of the best endowed Bishoprick in all Peru; the Revenues being estimated at 8000 Ducats of yearly Rents. By the Natives it is called Cbiquisaca. This was built by the Spaniards in the Valley of Cbiquisaca, 165. Spanish Leagues from Cusco to the South, some say, and 18 from Potosi, and 110 from the Pacifick Ocean. The Country about it yields Wheat, Barly, Grapes, and Fruit in plenty. The Air Temperate, but inclining to Cold. Potosi lyes in the same Latitude, 18 Leagues from it to the West, and much colder and barren also. It is very Populous, and besides the Cathedral, several Monasteries. The old Kings of Peru, employed many People in their digging and refining Silver in a Mountain called Porco, or Porco, from which was fetched that vast Treasure the Spaniards found in Peru when they Conquered it. And Pizarro began to work these Mines again, but the discovery of the Richer Veins of Potosi put a stop to these. The Spaniards are estimated at 800, the Indians at 6000, but to be understood of the Diocess and not of the City, Laet. p. 161. 2. Oropesa, twenty Leagues from Plata, built by Don Francis de Toledo, when Viceroy here, in the rich and pleasant Valley called Cochabamba, Anno 1565. 3. Potosi, neighbored by these wealthy Mines already mentioned. Discovered first in the year 1545, before which time this Town was but a sorry Village; now the best peopled and frequented in all the Province: said to be constantly inhabited by four or five thousand Spaniards, many more of the Natives: not so few as 30000 workmen appertaining to it, but lodged in the Villages adjoyning: besides the infinite resort of Merchants in pursuit of Profit, and idle Gallants, who come hither for their lulls and pleasures. Situate in the 21. Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, in a cold and very barren Soil, yet plentifully furnished with all commodities both for Necessity and delight. For as the money is, so is the Market always. The Spaniards call it the Imperial City of Potosi. Its Lat. is 20. 40. to the South. About the year 1630. it had between four and 6000 Spanish Inhabitants. It was then governed by a Spanish Corrigidore, sent away every third year from Spain by the King, who had 10000 Ducats allowed him, and immense Emoluments or Perquisites which he carved to himself besides. The Monasteries are Numerous and very rich, the Fields about it are cold, barren, and bare, nothing but Oats, which scarce ever ripen, but are cut and given for Forrage in the Blade; yet after all, there is nothing wanting here, that can serve the Needs and Pleasures of the Inhabitants. The City is two Leagues in compass, and far the greatest City in Peru. 4. Misque, a small Town, but one which furnisheth Potosi with good plenty of Wine: as 5. Lagunilla, and 6. Tarixa, do with Wheat, Maize, Sugar, and choice of Fruits. 7. Arica, is a small Town, but the most noted Haven of this Country, in the Latitude of 19 degrees, and 80 Leagues, or thereabouts from the Mines of Potosi, and as much from La Plata to the South East; the wealth whereof brought hither on the backs of their Sheep, is here shipped for Lima. The truth hereof was experienced by Sir Francis Drake, who seized here on three Spanish Ships, in one of which was 57 Bars of Silver, each of them twenty pound apiece. Mr. Tho. Cavendish our Country man, who visited it in the year 1587. saith, it lies in 18. Deg 31. Lat. and he having but a few Men, he durst not attempt it, but he took two Ships in the Port. The Dutch in 1599. failed failed to this Port, and found it to be rather a safe Road, than a Haven. It being well defended from the North, East and South winds, but not from the West, nor of easy and safe Approach. The Gold and Silver is brought hither from Potosi by Peru Sheep, guarded by a few Indians and Spaniards, who came hither in March or April; and here they Ship the Plate, which in May goes to Lima. In the beginning of this Century, the Spaniards first Fortified this place, being driven to it by the Depredations of the English and Dutch. The Town is Governed by a Corrigidore; Nominated once in six Years by the King of Spain. When Sir Francis Drake was here, the Town consisted but of 20 Houses; afterwards it arose to 100, Laet. p. 465, 66. This Town stands as Accofta faith, 70 Leagues from Potosi, or as others 80. Oliver Vander Noordt placeth it Lat. 18. 40. Drake and most others 18. 30. or 31. Few other Towns, if any, upon all this coast, which is altogether Rocky, barren, and unfit for Habitation, accordingly but little peopled, or not at all.

Come we now to the Peruvian Story, which we shall sum up with as much brevity as we can. The people were generally governed by the chief of their Tribes, as in all Countrys else, where neither the Arms of Foreigners,

* This is found from Pole to Pole round the Globe in all unconquered Countrys, and sprung from an Ancient Custom of Fathers of Families, governing their own Families whilst they Lived; and dividing them at their Deaths as they thought fit, till some found the mischief of it, and kept the Government to one Son intirely.

nor the Ambition of some few of the Natives had diminished any thing of their natural Rights. * Not subject to any one Supreme till these latter times; the Igas or Monarchs of Peru growing unto their greatness but a little before their fall. Their Territory at the first so small, that it was not above five or six Leagues in compass, situate in that part of the Country where the City of Cusco now standeth. Opposed at their first Encroachments by the Cannares, a valiant Nation, and likely to have had the better, if the Igas had not helped themselves by a piece of Wit; giving it out, that their Family had not only been the Seminary from which Mankind came, but the Authors of that Religion also which was then in use; particularly that the whole World had been destroyed by a Flood, except only seven, (so far they hit upon the truth) which seven had hid themselves in a Cave, called Paticambo where having lived in safety till the fury of the Water had been asswaged, they came abroad at last and re-peopled the Country; that Viracocha, the Creature and great God of Nature, had appeared to one of them, and taught him how and with what Rites he would be worshipped, and which Rites were afterwards received over all Peru; and finally, that the same Viracocha had appeared lately to the chief of their Family, assuring him, that he would aid him with invisible Forces against all their Enemies. This Tale soon gained belief amongst those Barbarians, and that belief drew many to take part with the Igas who by that Aid became victorious. This is supposed to have happen'd 400 years before the Spaniards put an end to this flourishing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Country, which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoining Provinces, under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Igas, as the Egyptians Pharaoh, the Tartars Cham; the word Inga, signifying and Emperor, as Capa Inga (by which they sometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much revered by their Subjects, and so faithfully served, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treason: Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to endear their Subjects, and keep them out of leisure to foment new Factions. The way of indearment, by the fair and satisfactory distribution of the spoils gotten in the Wars, whether Lands or Goods; all which they divided into three parts: allotting the first unto the service of the Gods; the second for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A distribution far more equal than that of Licurgus, or the Lex Agraria of the Romans. But when there was no cause of War, they kept the people busied in the works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the conquered Provinces, which served not only as Forts to assure the Conquest, but were employed as Store-houses to lay up Provisions, distributed amongst the People in times of dearth. But that which was the work as of greater trouble, so of chiefest use, was the Crofs ways they made over all the Country, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 Leagues in length, a work to be preferred before any both of Rome and Egypt. For they were forced to raise the ground in many places to the height of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flattest Plains; to cut through some Rocks, and underprop others, that were ruinous; to make even such ways as were uneasy, and support the Precipices; and in the Plains to vanquish so many difficulties, as the uncertain foundation of a Sandy Country must needs carry with it. Kept to these Tasks, the people had no leisure to think of Practices; yet well content to undergo them, in regard they saw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques, (so they called the Nobility) the Inga did not only command them to reside in Cusco, to be assured of their persons; but caused them to send their Children to be brought up there, that they might serve as Hostages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered also, that all such as repaired to Cusco, the Imperial City; should be attired according to his own Country fashion; so to prevent those Leagues and Association which otherwise, without any note or observation, might be made amongst them. Many such Politick Institutions were by them devised, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and clearly shewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads besides those of China. What else concerns the Story of them, offereth it self in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of PERU.

1. Mango Capac, descended of the chief of the first seven Families, the first who laid the foundation of this puissant Monarchy: he subdued the Cannares, and built the City of Cusco.

2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldest Son of Mango, subdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chancara.

3. Longue-Yupanqui, the Son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Ayavire, the Canus, and the Inhabitants about Titicaca: the first Advancer of the service of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many Visits.

4. Moyta-Capac, the Son of Yupanqui, subdued all the rest of Collao, the Provinces of Chibquiapa, and a great part of the Charcas.

5. Capac-Yupanqui, or Yapanque II. the Son of Moyta, enlarged his Kingdom Westward unto Mare del Zur.

6. Rocca II. of Yncha Rocha, eldest Son of Yupanqui the second enlarged his Kingdom towards the North, by the Conquest of the great Province of Antabuyallam, and many others.

7. Jabuar-Huacac, Son of Rocca the second, added to his Estates (by the Valour of his Brother Moyta) all the Southern parts from Arequipa to Tucaman. Distinguished by the practice of his Son.

8. Viracocha, the Son of Huacac, having settled and enlarged his Empire, raised many great and stately Works, and amongst others many Aqueducts of great use, but charge. For fear of him, Hancobuala, King of the Chuncas, with many thousands of his people, forsook their Country.

9. Pachacutec-Incha, son of Viracocha, improved his Kingdom by the Conquest of many Provinces lying towards the Andes and South-sea; with that of Caxamalca Northwards.

10. Tu-

10. Yupanqui III. or Yncha-Yupanqui, son of Pachacutec, subdued the Chonches and Moxes with some part of Chile.

11. Yupanqui IV. or Tapac Yncha Yupanqui, Son of Yupanqui the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.

12. Huayna-Capac, or Guaynacapac, son of Yupanqui the fourth, the most mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito, and is supposed to be the Founder of those two great Roads spoken of before.

13. Huascar, or Guaſcar-Yncha, the eldest Son of Guaynacapac, after a Reign of five years deposed and slain by his Brother.

14. Athualpa or Atubaliba, the third Son of Guaynacapa, by the Daughter and Heir of the King of Quito; into which Kingdom he succeeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his Brother to do Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with such power, that he overcame him, and so gained the Kingdom. Vanquished afterwards by Pizarro at the battle of Caxamalca he was taken Prisoner. And though he gave him a ransom for his Life and Liberty, an House Piled up on all sides with Gold and Silver, valued (as some say) at ten Millions of Crowns, yet they perfidiously slew him.

15. Mingo Capac II. the second son of Guaynacapac, substituted by Pizarro in his Brothers Throne, after many vicissitudes of Fortune, was at last slain in the City of Cusco; and so the Kingdom of the Ingas began and ended in a Prince of the same name, as it happened formerly to some other Estates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who subdued this most potent and flourishing Kingdom, and made it a Member of the Spanish Empire. And we shall find that he was born at Trusiglio a Village of Navar, and by the poor Whore his Mother laid in the Church-Porch, and so left to God's Providence; by whose direction (there being none found that would give him the Breast) he was nourished for certain days by sucking a Sow. At last one Gonsales a Souldier, acknowledged him for his Son, put him to Nurse, and when he was somewhat grown, set him to keep his Swine: some of which being strayed, the Boy durst not for fear return home, but betook himself to his heels, ran unto Sevil and there shipped himself for America; where he attended Alfonso de Ojeda, in the discovery of the Countries beyond the Gulf of Uraba; Balboa in his Voyage to the South-sea; and Pedro de Avila in the Conquest of Panamá. Grown rich by these Adventures, he associated himself with Diego de Almagro and Ferdinando Loques a rich Priest; who betwixt them raised 220 Soldiers, and in the year 1525. went to seek their Fortunes on those Southern Seas, which Balboa had before discovered. After divers Repulses at his landing, and some hardships which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took some of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the Wealth of the Country; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the Kings Commission for the Conquest of it; excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furnished and landed in Peru again, at such time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two Brethren for the Kingdom, and taking part with the Faction of Guaſcar, marched against Atubaliba; whom he met with in the Plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a Parley, than to fight a Battle. Pizarro taking this Advantage, picked a Quarrel with him, and suddenly charged upon him with his Horse and Ordnance, slaying his Guard without resistance; and coming near the Kings person, (who was then carried on mens shoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him Prisoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 8000 Castellans, and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his Household Plate; and in the Spoil of Caxamalca, almost infinite Riches. This, with the Kings ransom, came to so great a sum, that besides the fifth part which Pizarro sent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his Brethren kept unto themselves, every Footman had 7000 Ducats, and every Horseman twice as much, for their part of the Spoil; besides what they had got in the way of plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miserable King, their Prisoner, hath been shewn already. Upon which Act, though they put many fair pretences, yet God declared that he was not pleased with their proceedings; few of the greatest undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro, in reward of so great a Service, was made the first Vice-Roy of Peru, and created Marquis of Anatilla; yet having put to death Almagro, his chief Companion, who had raised a strong Faction in that State, he was after slain at Lima by some of that Faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befel all the rest: his Brother John slain by the Peruvians; Martin in Lima with himself; Ferdinando secretly made away in prison; and finally Conſales the fourth Brother, with the Son of Almagro, severally executed for their Treasons and Insurrections, which they had acted in this Country against their King. So little Joy doth Wealth ill gotten bring along with it to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whose strange birth, fortunes and misfortunes in the course of his Life, are to be paralleled only with the like of Sinan, a great Bassa in the Court of Selimus the first; who being born of a base Parentage, as he (being a Child) was sleeping in the Shade, had his Genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkish Officers which usually provided young Boys for the Service of the Grand Signiour, being in Epirus, (for that was Sinan's Country) and hearing of this so extraordinary an Eunuch, took him among others along with them to the Court: where under Mahomet the great, Bajazet the second, and his Son Selimus, he so exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Bassa of the Court; and so well deserved it, that he was accounted Selimus's right hand; and was indeed the man to whose Valour especially the Turks owe their Kingdom of Egypt: in which Kingdom then not tully settled he was also slain.

But to return to Peru. No question but the Forces and Revenues of it were exceeding great. For, though we find no particular musters which they made of their men, or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field, yet by their great Successes and many Victories we may conclude them to be Masters of great Bands of men, and skilful in the Arts of Conduct. Nor can we otherwise conjecture at the greatness of their yearly income, but by the greatness of their Treasure; so infinite and almost incredible, that all the Vessels of the Kings House, his Table and Kitchen, were of Gold and Silver: Statues of Giants in his Wardrobe, together with the resemblances in proportion and bigness of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, Plants, and Fishes, which were found in that Kingdom of the purest Gold: Ropes, Budgets, Throughs, Chests, all of Gold or Silver; Billers of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billers of Wood cut out for the fire; three Houses full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, besides infinite other Treasures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew so wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an Horse, 60 Crowns for a small Vessel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shoes; consuming all upon their lusts, and sacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

O F C H I L E.

CHILE is bounded on the North with the Defart of Alacama, 90 Leagues in Length, interposing betwixt it and Peru; on the West with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the streights of Magellan; and on the East, as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantick; the Countries lying on the East betwixt it and Paraguay not well discovered. When the Spaniards entred the New World, it was first discovered by them in 1535. This Province reacheth from the Valley of Copiapo in 26 Degrees of South Lat. to the Mouth of the Streights of Magellan 500 Leagues, but it is no where broader from East to West, than 40. 50. or at most 90 Leagues; so that it has vast Provinces that no Spaniards ever entred into; but Chile properly so called, is nevertheless but a small part of this, and in Length from North to South, but 300 Leagues, in breadth but 25.

This Country lieth wholly beyond the Tropick of Cancer, by consequence in the temperate Zone, extended in length, from the borders of Peru to the mouth of the Streights, 500 Leagues, but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile from the word Chil, (which in more Tongues then ours doth signifie as much as Cold) from the extreame coldness of the Air and Clime; so vehement here in our Summer Solstice, that many times both the Horses and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardened like a piece of Marble.

The Soil hereof in the Midland parts Mountainous and unfruitful; towards the sea-side level, fertile, and watered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: Productive of Maize, Wheat, and most excellent Pasturage: Plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, store of Cattle, and Wines enough for the use of the People; the Vines brought hither out of Spain prospering here exceedingly; as do also all the Fruits and Plants, which are sent from thence into this Country. The People very tall and warlike, some of them of a Gigantick stature, affirmed (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high, yet well conditioned with his greatness, where not much provoked. Their Garments of the Skins of Beasts, their Arms, Bow and Arrows: white of Complexion, but as hirsute and shaggy-haired as the rest of the Savages. They are white, but have low foreheads, they went naked also heretofore, but now have learned to Spin and Weave Cloaths for their use; by reason of the perpetual Wars with the Spaniards; the Country is not very well Peopled. It was first entred by the Andes in 1534. from Charca, but they found the Passages by Land over the Andes, and through the Defart of Atacama which parts it from Peru, and is a 100 Leagues over, so dangerous, that the Spaniards have since gone ever by the South Sea. This Province is subject to the Vice-Roy of Peru, and has one Governour, two Bishops, and 11 Towns Inhabited by Spaniards. The People of Chili in 1552. slew Valdivia the conqueror of this Country, and have since so improved in the Art of War, that they equal the Spaniards, and have forced them to desert most of the Towns they had built amongst them. They have learned to fight in order, fortified their Camps, form Weapons both of Defence and Offence, and fear not to fight their Enemies in the Field, and yet upon occasion can lay their Ambuscades with Great Art and good success, Laet. In the Year 1599. they took and destroyed Valdivia, Imperiale, Angol, and Santa crux, Chile and Concepcion.

Rivers of Note there are not any, but what will fall within the view of its several Provinces. Divided Commonly into 1. Chile, especially so called, and 2. Magellanica.

1. CHILE specially so called, is bounded on the North with the Defart of Alacama; on the South, with Magellanica; on the West, with Mare del Zur; and on the East, with some unknown Countreys, lying betwixt it and Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata: not above 20 Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reason of the name, together with the nature of the soil and people, we have seen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Rio de Copayapo, giving name unto a Promontory near the influx of it, in the Northern borders of this Province. 2. Rio de Coquimbo. 3. La Ligua. 4. Topocalma, 5. Cacapoel, 6. Canten, all falling into Mare del Zur. And besides these, a nameless, but more famous River, which in the day-time runneth with a violent Current, and in the night hath no Water at all. The reason of it is, because this River, having no constant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains, which in the heat of the day, melted into water, is precipitately carried into the Sea: but congealed in the coldness of the night, yields no Water at all, whereby the Channel becometh empty.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Copayabo, giving name to a fertile Valley in the most Northern Tract hereof, and neighboured by a small, but commodious Haven. 2. Serena, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the Sea side; not far from the influx of Rio de Coquimbo, on whose banks it is seated, there built by Baldivia, the Conquerour and first Governour of this Province, Anno 1544. The Territory round about it is rich in Mines of Gold: The Town it self of 200 Houses, but so well Peopled, that at the landing of some of the English, under Captain Drake, they presently sent out 300 Horse and 200 Foot to compel them back unto their Ships, which they did accordingly. The Fields about it are watered by a small River, which makes it exceeding Fruitful, tho it seldom rains above three or four times in a year. 3. S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80 Houses in it) because the Residence of the Governour and the Courts of Justice; adorned with a Cathedral Church; and some Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars; situate in the 34. degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of the River Topocalma, at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val Paraisa, the best and most noted of this Country; out of which the English under Drake took a Spanish Ship, and therein 25000 Pezoes of the Purest Gold, besides other Commodities. The Country about it is very fruitful, and full of Inhabitants, there being as it is said 80000 Indians in this Diocess. 4. Concepcion, 70 Leagues on the South of S. Jago, situate on the Shores of the large and capacious Bay, (by the Natives called Penco) by it and the Mountains on all sides so strongly fenced, that the Governour, when distressed by the Savages, (as sometimes they are) retireth hither for safety. Well fortified in such places as are accessible, and garrisoned with 500 Soldiers, besides the Townsmen. Opposite hereunto lieth the Isle of S. Mary, so near the Shore, that it seems to have been rent from from it by the force of the Sea; fruitful and very well provided of Swine and Poultry; but the people so in fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Concepcion, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5. Auracoa, (so I think they call it) a strong Fort in the Country of the Auracans, the most Perverse Nation of these parts; who weary of the Spanish Yoke, revolted against Baldivia, overcame him in a battle, and at last killed him: this Place being thereupon taken, and of no more use. 6. De las Confesiones, built by Baldivia in the borders of the Country of those Auracans, to serve for a defence to the Mines of Orogos near adjoining: distant from the Sea shore about 13 Leagues, situated by Garcias de Mendoza, and by him called Tierra Nueva de los Infantes. 7. Imperiale in the 38 degrees and 41 Minutes of Southern Latitude, situate on the banks of the River Cauten; a Bishop's See, and the best Fort of the Spaniards in all this Province. Fortified and made a Colony of Spaniards in the year 1551, and by Baldivia called At Imperial, because they found an Eagle with two heads made in Wood on the doors of their houses; a Monument perhaps of some Germans who had here been shipwrecked. The Indians the next year after the conquest of this Town, slew Baldivia, and reduced the Town to such straits, that it has not been able to grow to any greatness. A Town of great Wealth and Power, before known to the Spaniards, that in a War betwixt them and the Auracans, spoken of before, they are said to have brought into the field 20000 men. The Soil about it is fruitful in corn, and Wine, and Pasture; the River bears boats, the Bishop of it is the second in Chile, and has about 80000 Indians in it under his Care. It has good Mines of Gold, but for want of Slaves, and by reason of the Wars, they are not wrought, Laet p. 492. In the Year 1600. It was taken by the Indians, after a Years Siege by Famine, when the most part of the Inhabitants were destroyed by Hunger and other Miseries, they burnt the Town, and desolated the Country about it, and then went to the Siege of Soforna. They took in this War Valdivia, Angol, &c. before mentioned, after which they became so confident of their Strength, that they fight the Spaniards without fear, and after their own method, and with their own Weapons, revenging in some sort the wrongs done to the other Indians their Country Men, whom the Spaniards had most Inhumanely Murdered without Cause or Measure, Laet p. 500. S. Villa Rica another Colony of Spaniards, 16 Leagues on the South East of Imperiale, and 25 Leagues from the Shore of Mare del Zur. 9. Baldivia, the most noted Town of all these parts, situate in the Valley of Guadallanguen, in the Latitude of 40 Degrees, or thereabouts: adorned with a safe and capacious Haven, and neighbored by Mines of Gold of such infinite Riches, that Baldivia (by whom built for defence of those Mines) received thence daily by the labour of each single Workman 25000 Crowns a man, and sometimes more. Sacked by the Savages Anno 1599; since repaired by the Spaniards. 10. Oforno, on the Banks of the Bay of Chiloe, (or Ancud, as the Savages call it) situate in a barren soil, but well stored with Gold, and thought to be more populous than Baldivia itself. This City lies 70 Leagues South of Concepcion, seven from the Ocean, 42 D. from the Line South. It has about it 200000 Indian Subjects, who are Employed in Weaving Linen and Wollen, Laet p. 494. In the Year 1600. the Indians besieged this Place, and had certainly taken it, had it not been relieved by a supply under Francis de Campo, who was sent from Peru, for they had then taken Valdivia, Imperiale, and la Concepcion, and three other Towns, p. 499. 11. Castro, the most Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44: built in a large and fruitful Island of the Bay of Ancud, said to be 50 Leagues in length, but the breadth unequal: in some parts nine, in others not above two Leagues. 12. S. Juan de la Frontera on the farther side of the Andes towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong also certain Islands ly ing on the coasts and shores hereof, 1. S. Maria, spoken of before. 2. Mocha, upon the South of that, five Leagues from the Continent, fruitful of Grain, and very good Pasturage, sufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the descendents of those Americans who fled hither to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, chose to have made good their Liberty against that Nation: of which they are so jealous, that they would not suffer the English under Drake and Cook to land amongst them, for fear they had been Spaniards, or some Friends of theirs. 4. Castro, which we have spoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA Island situate at the Mouth with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata on the South, with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Straights of Magellan; on the West, with Mare del Zur: on the East, with Mare del Nord, or the Mina del Zur. So called from Magellanus, by whom first discovered: of whom we shall speak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Straights 300 Leagues; in breadth, from one Sea to the other, where broadest, about 400 Leagues, in some but 90 only, and in others less, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyrenees. The Inland parts of the Country not yet discovered: those on the Sea side observed to be rocky and unfruitful, exposed for the most part of the year to such bitter colds, that the Snow lyes always on the Mountains. The People said to be tall of Stature, and some of them of a Gigantick bigness, reported to be ten or eleven foot high: and by the Spaniards for that reason are called Patagons. Both great and less sufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurnished of any Houses, notwithstanding the rigour of the Cold.

No Houses doth imply no Towns, and therefore we must look for none in so rude a Country, as hath not hitherto conversed with more civil Nations. So that the most that we can do is to coast the Shores, and see what names of Ports or Promontories we can find therein. And first upon the Sea coasts towards Mare del Zur, they place (beginning at the North, and so descending) 1. the Promontory called Cabo de las Islas. 2. The Port or Haven of S. Stephen. 3. The Valley of Nuestra Señora, or our Ladies Valley. 4. The Promontory called Punta Delgado. 5. Porto de los Reyes. 6. Sanben Simfudada, on the Banks of a semi-circular Bay, the mouth of many Rivers, and not a few Islands. 7. Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victory, situate betwixt that Bay and the mouth of the Straights; so called from the name of the Ship, in which some of Magellan's Soldiers did first compass the World. For Ferdinand Magellan, a noble Portugal, and well skilled in Navigation, at the Persuasion or command of Charles the fifth, to whom (upon some discontents received in the Court of Emmanuel King of Portugal) he had made offer of his Service, undertook the finding out (if possible) a shorter cut to the Moluccas then discovered formerly. In the year 1520. he began his Voyage, his Fleet consisting but of five ships, whereof that called S. Antonio forsook him in some great displeasure, and returned to Spain; another of them being lost not long after in a storm. Keeping along the Coast to the South of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October, he fell upon the Cape of Vergins, at the very entrance of the Strait, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon; and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of these Narrow Seas, since called Fretum Magellanicum, and entered into Mare del Zur. Having refreshed himself in a little Island called Juvaganawa, he passed unto that also but not far from the Philippines: the Prince whereof, called Humabar, he perswaded to become a Christian, baptizing him by the name of Charles: and finally engaging in a Quarrel of his against the King of Matan, or Matan, an adjoining Island, he was there unfortunately slain, Anno 1521. After his death Serran chief Pilot of the Navy, together with 70 of his men, being treacherously slain by Humabar, the other three ships departed with no more

then 115 men aboard them; which put them to a necessity of burning one of their ships, that they might have men enough to make good the others. With these two Ships they came at last to the Molucca's, where being kindly entertained by the King of Tidore, they divided themselves, that called the Trinity, under Captain Spinosa, designed for Panama in New Spain, but from thence driven back by contrary Winds to the Isle of Tidore, was seized on and spoiled by Antonio Brito, a Captain commanding there a small Navy of the King of Portugal. The other ship, which by a happy Omen was called Victoria, having in her but 47 Spaniards, under the command of Sebastian del Cano, after a very long and dangerous Voyage, wherein it was thought that he had sailed at the least 14000 Leagues, returned to Spain in safety, and brought the welcome news of their good Success.

We use to say that Sir Francis Drake was the first that sailed round about the World: which may be true in a qualified sense, viz. that he was the first Captain or man of note that achieved this enterprize, Magallanus perishing in the midst of it: and therefore he is reported to have given for his Device a Globe, with this Motto, Tu primus circumdedisti me. This Navigation was begun Anno 1577. and in two years and a half, with great vicissitude of fortune finished. Concerning which his famous Voyage, a Poet then living directed to him this Epigram,

Quemque simul mundi vidit uterque Polus,
Si tacant homines, facient te Sydera notum,
Sol nescit comitis non memor esse sui.*

Drake, whom th' encompass'd Earth so fully knew,
And whom at once both Poles of Heaven did view;
Should men forget thee, Sol could not forbear
To Chronicle his fellow Traveller.

This Fretum Magellanicum, these Magellan Streights, are in the 52. degree, and are by Mr. John Davis, who professeth to know every Creek in them, thus described. "For 14 Leagues within the Cape of S. Mary lieth the first Streight, where it ebberh and floweth with a violent swiftness, the Streight not being fully half a mile broad, and the first fall into it very dangerous and doubtful. "Three Leagues this Streight continueth, when it openeth into a Sea eight miles long, and as much broad; beyond which lieth the second Streight, right West-South-West from the first, a perilous and unpleasant Passage, three Leagues long, and a mile in breadth. "This Streight openeth it self into another Sea, which is extended even to the Cape of Victory; where is the Streight properly called the Streight of Magellan; a place of that nature, that which may soever a man bend his course, he shall be sure to have the Wind against him. The length hereof is 40 Leagues; the breadth in some places two Leagues over, in others not fully half a mile. The Channel in depth 200 Fathoms, so no hope of Anchorage; the course of the Water full of turnings and changing, withal so violent, that when a Ship is once entred, there is no returning. On both sides of it are high Mountains continually covered with snow, from which proceed those Counter-winds which beat with equal fury on all parts thereof. A place assuredly not pleasing to view, and very hazardous to pass. So far, and to this purpose Mr. Davis.

But to proceed: the way thus opened was travelled not long after, Anno 1525, by Garcias de Loyasa: next in the year 1534, by Simon de Alcazaro, and four years after by three ships of the Bishop of Placensa in Spain: but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure thro', till undertaken and Performed by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1577. or as others August 20th. 1578. and he found the same full of Islands, shut in with high Mountains, and the Havens cold and Snowy, Camden; after which it grew more familiar amongst the Sea-men. In the year 1587 on the seventh of January, Thomas Cavendish arrived here, and found the entrance in 52 Degrees of South Latitude. The Spaniards had then built upon it a City called King Philips City, with four Forts, and he sent 400 men to secure the Passage, but they never thrived, and in two years time were reduced to twenty three, the Town left desolate: The English call it Port Famine, Hacklitt, part. 3. p. 806. Howsoever we are so much Debtors to the Attempts of others, as that we owe to them the most part of the names of those Bays and Promontories which they discovered in the search: though many of them be since new named by the English and Hollanders. Those of most note, Proceeding from Cabo de la Victoria, are 1. Cabo de Quaila, 2. Cape Gallant, 3. Cordes Bay, 4. Cape Froward, being the very point or Conus of this great Pyramis. 5. Porto Famine, 6. A little Isle called Elizabeths Island, and at the exit of the Streight in Mare del Noordt, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending northwards towards the great River of Plata, we find upon the Main Ocean, 1. Ria de la Cruz, neighboured by a Promontory called Cabo de las Barreras, where Magallan staid all September, and the greatest part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to discover farther, 2. The Bay of S. Julian, out of which he set sail for this Adventure about the latter end of August, leaving there two of his Companions Condemned of Mutiny. 3. The Port of Disire 4. A large Promontory, called the Cape of S. George. 5. The outlets of a fair River named Rio de los Camerones. 6. A goodly Haven, entituled Puerto de los Leones. 7. The Cape called Punta de terra plana. 8. The Bay of Amagada. 9. The Promontory called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10. the River of S. Anne, beyond which lieth the Province of the River of Plata. This is the most that I can say touching Magallanica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points, and Promontories; and this is nothing (as we see) but a Nomenclator; it must be better peopled and more discovered before it can afford Discourse of more variety. All we can add is, that the passage back again from Mare del Zur, to the Atlantick, hath not been found so safe and easie, as from the main Atlantick unto Mare del Zur. Attempted first by Ladrillero a Spaniard, at the command of Gracia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile, and attempted only: performed not long after the Voyage of Sir Francis Drake by D. Pedro Sarmienta, employed therein by Francis de Toledo, Viceroy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no less danger; so much, that few have since endeavoured to return that way.

As for the Fortunes and affairs of the Province of Chile, to which we have made this an Appendix, we are to understand that it was first discovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief Friends and Associates. But he having other designs in his head about Peru, which he intended for himself, and to out Pizarro, did discover it only; the Conquest of it being reserved for Baldivia, whom Pizarro, on the settling of his Affairs by the death of Almagro had employed in that action. He going Soldier-like to work, not only did subdue the People; but, as he gained ground, built some Fortresses, or planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. This done, about the year 1544. his ill luck was to meet with a more stubborn and untractable people than either Cortez or Pizarro had done before him; who, quickly weary of the Yoke, besieged one of his Forts, encountred Baldivia himself, coming with too small a power to relieve his people, vanquished and slew him in the Field. Some add, that they poured Gold into his Throat: (as the Parthians are reported to have done Crassus) bidding him satisfie himself with that which he so much thirsted after. After this blow given in the year 1551. the Savages recovered the rich Valleys of Auranco Tucapel, and Purene, which they keep from them to this day. The Towns of Los Confines and Villa Rica, both on the borders of those Valleys, were deserted also. Nor staid they there, though they took time to breath a little. For in the year 1599, (having provided themselves of 200 Corslers and seventy Mulquets) they break out again, surprised and sacked the Town of Baldivia forced imperiale, after a whole years Siege to surrender without any Conditions, and in the year 1604. took Osono by Famine. Of thirteen Cities which the Spaniards had possessed amongst them, they had taken nine: some of them since recovered, but the most demolished. As ill it thrived with them in Magallanica, where Pedro de Sarmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies to command those Streights, Anno 1584. The one he settled near the mouth of the Streight, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jesus, and left therein 150 of his men: the other he intended on the narrowest place of the Streight, to be called Ciudad del Rey Philip, which he resolved to fortifie and Plant with Ordnance. But winter coming on, he left there other of his men, promising to relieve them shortly with all things necessary. But such was his unhappy fate, that after many shipwrecks and disappointments which befel unto him in the pursuit of his Design, he was at last taken by the English under the command of Sir Walter Raleigh, who was there in person; and his two Colonies, for want of timely Succors, either starved at home, or eaten by the Savages, as they ranged the Country.

And so much for CHILE.

O F

PARAGUAY.

PARAGUAY is bounded on the South with Magallanica; on the East, with the main Atlantick; on the North with Brasil; on the West, with some unknown Countrys betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River of Paraguay, which signifieth the River of Feathers (one of the greatest of the World) which runneth through it; the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great store of Silver they expected from it. It is divided into seven Counties, which yet has not many Spanish Colonies settled in it, yet it has one Bishop.

The Country (for so much as hath been discovered) is said to be of a fruitful soil, capable of Wheat, and other of the Fruits of Europe, which thrive here exceedingly: nor do the Cattle encrease less which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horses multiplying in a wonderful manner. Well stored with Sugar-Canes, and not unfurnished of Mines both of Brass and Iron, some Veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethysts. Of Staggs great plenty, and of Monkeys almost infinite numbers; not to say any thing of Lyons, Tigers and such hurtful Creatures, of which a few would be thought too many. Of the people there is nothing said but what hath been observed of other Savages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. De la Plata, whose course we have described already. 2. Rio de Buenos Ayres, so called from the chief Town, by which it runneth. 3. Zarcaramana, which riseth in the Country of the Diagnitas, and falling into a Lake at the end of his course, doth from thence pass into the body of De la Plata. 4. Estero, which rising in the Valley of Chalcaqui, and passing through two great Lakes, meets with 5. the Bermeio, and both together fall into De la Plata near the Town of S. Foy. 6. Pilcomayo, which hath its Fountain near the Mines of Potosi, in the Province of Charcos, but his fall in the same River with those before. Then on the North side of that River there is, 7. that of S. Saviour, or S. Salvador; as the Spaniards call it. 8. Rio Negro, or the Black River, of a longer course, but buried in the end, as the other is, in the deeps of La Plata. 9. Yguazu, and 10. several others, whose united Streams make the great River Parana, the second River of esteem in all this Country, but swallowed in that of Plata. Besides these, 11. Rio de S. Martin, and 12. Rio Grande, falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of, 1. Rio de la Plata, 2. Tucuman, and 3. S. Cruz de Sierra. The rest not conquered by the Spaniards, or not well discovered cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA PLATA, or the Province of

De la Plata, lieth upon both sides of that River, ascending many Leagues up the Water, but not extended much upon either side. The reason of the name, the quality of the Soil and People, we have seen before.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Buenos Ayres, or Nuestra Señora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Ciudad de la Trinidad, seated on the Southern Bank of the River of Plata, there built by Pedro de Mendoza, Anno 1535. Deserted by the Inhabitants, and again new-peopled by Cabeço de Vacca, Anno 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned; and finally, in the year 1582, re-edified and planted with a new Colony; after which last settlement it has ever been Inhabited. Situate on the rising of a little Hill, in the 34 degree and 45 minutes of the Southern Latitude, and about 64 Leagues from the mouth of the River, having La Plata to the North, and another River to the South, on an advanced Ground. Fortified with a Mud-wall and a little Castle, with some pieces of Ordnance: yet neither large nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. To this place the King of Spain was perswaded to bring his Silver from Potosi, but found it not convenient, by reason of the Vicinity of the Portugals in Brasil. Potosi is 400 Leagues from this City to the West, but good easy Passage, by the perpetual fall of the Rivers this way. 2. S. Fe, or S. Fides, 50 Leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the same side of the Water, near the confluence of it with the River Estero: of the same bigness as the other, but somewhat richer; the people here being given to Cloathing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Brasilians for Sugar, Rice, and other necessary commodities. 3. Nuestra Señora del Assumption, but commonly Assumption only, higher up the River, from the mouth thereof 300 Leagues distant: situate in the Latitude of 25, and almost in the midst betwixt Peru and Brasil, well built, and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Country. This is a Bishops See, under the Arch Bishop of La Plata. The Country about it is very pleasant and fruitful, and the Air so temperate, that the Trees are ever green, Laet. p. 529. Inhabited by three sorts of men: first, natural Spaniards, of which here are accounted 400 Families. 2. the Mestizo's begotten by the Spaniards upon the Natives, and 3. Mulatto's, born of the Spaniards and Negroes; of which two last here are thought to be many thousands. Not far off is a great Lake called Yrupuam, in the midst whereof is an huge Rock above 100 Fathom high above the Water. 4. Ciudad Real, by the Spaniards called also Ontiveros, by the Natives Guayra, 80 Leagues North from the Town of Assumption, situate on the banks of the River Parana, in a fruitful Soil but a sickly Air ; for which cause, and the frequent Insurrection of the Savages, but meanly peopled. 5. S. Anne, on the banks of the same River Parana, 6. S. Salvador, on a River of the same name. Besides these, there are up the River above Assumption three noted Ports. 7. Puerto de Guaybiamo, 8. Puerto de la Candalaria, and 9. Puerto de los Reyes ; but whether Towns, or only Havens on that River for dispersing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to say. The last save one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas, and the death of 80 of his men by the hands of the Savages.

2. TUCUMAN lyeth on the West of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the confines of Chile, through which they made their way unto Mare del Zur, as through the Province of Rio de la Plata unto Mare del Noordt ; the exact bounds hereof to the North and South not yet resolved on. This Province is 300 Leagues broad, and 200 long, and has eight small Spanish Cities in it.

The Country, for so much hereof as lieth towards Chile, is well manured and fruitful, that towards Magallanica barren, untilld, and not well discovered. No Veins of Gold or Silver in it, though situate in a temperate and agreeable air. Watered by the two Rivers of 1. Salado, so called from the brackishness and Saltiness of it; and 2. Del Estero, spoken of before, so named, because sometimes it breaketh out of his Banks. The Inhabitants now civilized both in manners and habit, in both which they conform to the Garb of the Spaniards. It is inhabited by three Indian Tribes, the Tucumans, Juries, and Diagnits. The Spaniards possess St. Jago del Estero, St. Micbeal, Talarvera, Corduba, and Sala, the first of these was by the Indians called Varco.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Jago del Estero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Varco, the principal of that small Province, honoured with a Bishop's See and the Seat of the Governour, and distant about 180 Leagues from Buenos Ayres. This place saith a Flandrian that saw it, stands 80 Leagues from Corduba, the Fields about it are covered with Woods, and not very fruitful, since the River hath failed to overflow them as before; so that the City has not so great a number of Inhabitants for want of Provisions; the Indians too are much diminished in number, and do daily decrease by reason of the cruel usage of the Spaniards, who execute their Authority over them with Rigour, and waste them with immoderate labour, in gathering, beating, and spinning Cotton; beating them till they dye very often under their hands, for not performing the Task enjoyned them, Laet. p. 535. 2. S. Michael de Tucuman, seated at the foot of a Rocky Mountain, but near a very fruitful soil both for Corn and Pasturage, distant 28 Leagues from S. Jago. 3. Talarvera or Nuestra Señora de Talarvera, but by the Natives called Esteco; situate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitful soil, and inhabited by an industrious People, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton wools, which grow hereabout in great abundance, with which they drive a great Trade, at the Mines of Potosi, from hence distant but 140 Leagues. 4. Corduba, in a convenient place for Trade, as being equally distant from S. Juan de la Frontera, in the Prefecture of Chile, and S. Poy, in Rio de la Plata. 50 Leagues from each, and seated in a Road from Peru unto Buenos Ayres, much travelled consequently by these who go from Peru to Brasil or Spain. 5. New London, and 6. New Corduba; built at such time as Garcias de Mendoza, Son of the Marquess of Cannete, and Vice roy of Peru, was Governour of this Province: but both abandoned not long after. Besides these, 7. Moata, 8. Chocinoca, 9. Socochoa, and 10. Calabinnia; Townships belonging to the Natives.

3. S. CRUX DE SIERRA, is the name of a little Territory lying towards Peru, on the North of the River Guapay, and in the Country of the Chiquites and Cheriguanes, two Tribes of the Savages. By some accounted to Peru, because under the Juridical Resort of Charcos, but so far distant from the nearest bounds of that Province, (100 Spanish Leagues at least) that I think fitter to account it to the Province of Paraguay, betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guapay it is wholly seated.

The Soil is abundantly productive of Maize and Wines, plenty of most sorts of American Fruits, which I can give no English name to; a kind of Palm, of whose Trunk they make great store of Meal, of good taste and nourishment. But neither Soil nor Air agreeable to the Fruits of Europe, which ripen slowly, and soon die. So destitute of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make use of Rain-water preserved in pits: the cause of no small Wants, and of many great Murthers; the people either dying for thirst; or killing one another for some water to quench it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Santa Cruz, situate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but situate in an open Field, enlarging it self into many Plains and thirsty Valleys, neighboured by a Brook or Torrent, breaking from the Rocks, which four Leagues from the Town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth supply the Town with fish. 2. Baranca, 60 Leagues from the Mines of Potosi. 3. Tornina, 4. Lagunilla, and 5. Tarixa, three Forts erected for defence of this Province against the Incursions and Alarms of the Cherignanaes. 6. Neyva Rioja, once a Colony of the Spaniards, but sacked and dispeopled by the Cherignanaes, when the Count of Neyva was Vice-roy of Peru: at what time Nuefio de charves, who in the year 1548. first discovered those parts, was treacherously slain by one of the Savages.

The principal Nations of this Country, when first known to the Spaniards, were the Querandies, Timbues, and Carcates, the Chunes, Chiminei, Guaranyes, the Guayacurvis, Cacoves, Guaxarapi, &c. on both sides of the River of Plata; the Tucumanes, Juries, and Diagnites, in the Cantred of Tucuman: more Northward, where the Spaniards have as yet no hold, the Chuneses, Xaqueffes, Xacoes, and the Xarayes, great and powerful Nations, hitherto unconquered. The first Discovery of this Country is ascribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spanish Adventurer; who in the year 1515. passing up the River to the Latitude of 34 Degrees and 40 minutes, and unadvisedly landing with too small a power, was there unfortunately slain. The Design was after prosecuted by Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1526. who sailed against the stream as high as the River Parana; at the reception of which, the great River, called till then by the name of Paraguay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Fortress called Fort Cabot, and 30 Leagues more up the River that called S. Anne, (both long since ruined) where Diego Garcias, a Portugal, found him in the year next following. In the year 1535, the business was resumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres, and sent John de Ayolas to discover Northwards; of whose unhappy end we have heard before. Not fully settled till the year 1540, when Alvarez Nonnez, commonly called Cabeza de Vacca, made a more full discovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing since done for the farther planting of the Country, though some places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and consequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the work.

BRASIL.

BRASIL is bounden on the East with Mare del Noordt, or the main Atlantick; on the West, with some undiscovered Countries lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North, with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragnon; and on the South, with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reason of the name I find not, except it came from the abundance of that Wood called Brasil-wood, which was found amongst them; as the famous Isle of Cyprus, from its plenty of Cypresses.

It reacheth from the 29 to the 39 Degree of Southern Latitude; or measuring it by miles, it is said to be 1500 miles from North to South, and 500 miles in breadth from the Sea to the Andes: which must be understood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwise all that which is possessed by the Portugals under the name of Brasil is so short of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they possess nothing but the sea-coasts, and some few Leagues (comparatively) within the Land; the greatest part of it being so far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been discovered. This part came under the Dominion of the Portugesse in the Year 1503. though the Spaniards claim it. Ferrera pretends this Country was first discovered by the Spaniards, by one Jean Pinzone, and after that by Didaco de Lepe, in the Year 1500; about the same time Catabus a Portugesse sailing to the East Indies, and running too much to the West by accident, fell upon this opposite Shore, and called it Santa Cruz, but the World have since new named it, from the Plenty of Brasil Wood here found. It is much hotter and moister than Peru, subject to great Rains, Snow, Clouds, and the Earth is covered with great Woods, so that it is unhealthful, full of Serpents, and troublesome Insects; others say on the contrary, it is a pleasant healthful Country, and cooled by the Brises from the Ocean, which they call here the Tropick winds. The Soil is strangely fertile, and yields Sugar canes in great plenty. It yields nothing fit for cloathing but Cotton, and is much of it marshy, and in Winter, (i. e. from March to August) very wet and troublesome to travel. Yet some of the Inhabitants have lived to 90 or 100 Years of Age. The Rayes of the Moon in this Country are observed to be hurtful. Both the Males and Females of the barbarous Nations go stark naked, without any shame.

The Country is full of Mountains, Rivers, and Forests, diversified into Hills and Plains always pleasant and green. The Air for the most part sound and wholesome, by reason of the fresh Winds which do reign amongst them; there being all along the Coasts certain quick Winds rising from the South about two hours before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants; yet in regard it is somewhat moist, it is held to be more agreeable to old men than to young. The soil is in most parts very fruitful, were it not too much cloyed with Rain; but howsoever liberally provided of Sugar canes, (no one Country more) for the refining of which they have their Ingenios, (as they call them) or Sugar-houses, in most parts of the Country, in which they entertain many thousand slaves, brought hither yearly from Guinea and Congo, and other Maritime parts of Africk. A Trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years, in each of which they bring not out of Brasil to Portugal 150000 Arrobes of Sugar; every Arrobe containing 25 Bushels of our English measure. Here is also infinite quantities of that red Wood used in dying cloth, which we commonly call Brasil-wood; (but whether the Wood took that name from the Country, or the Country rather from the Wood, I determine not;) the Trees whereof are of that incredible greatness, that whole Families live on an arm of one of them, every Tree being as populous as the most of our Villages. In other Commodities, common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular instance.

This vast Trade of Sugars is since our Authors time in a great degree abated, for that during the War between the Hollanders and Portugesse in Brasil, about the time of our Wars in England, most of the Sugar Plantations were destroyed, and the Portugesse being also engaged in a War with Spain, which lasted till 1669. or thereabouts, and so could not attend to the Improving and peopling this Country: In the mean time the English in Barbado's and Jamaica so well imployed their times, that they not only supplied England with Sugars, which before we bought of the Portugesse; but we became able to supply Holland, which in effect is all this Northern part of the World. So that our Sugar Trade is one of the best Trades we have belonging to us, and ought most diligently to be cultivated. Lisbon having thus lost the advantage of the Spice Trade before to the Hollanders, and of the Sugar Trade to the English, shrunk in its riches and Splendor, and with it Brasil also, which now languisheth, and is the unenvied Possession of the Portugesse, and serves to little other use, than to exhaust that Kingdoms People, and to fit it for a Conquest, when it and Spain shall be a little more weakned.

Amongst the Rarities hereof are reckoned, 1. the Plant called Copiba, the Bark of which being cut doth send out a Balm, the sovereign virtue whereof is so well known to the very Beasts, that being bit by venomous Serpents, they resort unto it for their Cure. 2. The Herb called Sentida or Viva, which roughly touched will close their Leaves, and not open them again till the man that had offended it be gone out of sight. 3. A kind of Wheat in the Valley near unto S. Sebastian, which is continually growing, and always ripe; or never wholly ripe, because always growing, for when one ear doth grain, another doth Bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4. The Ox-fish, with Eyes, and Eye lids, two Arms a Cubit long, and at each an hand with five fingers and Nails, as in a Man; under the Arms two Teats, inwards like a Cow, in every Female. 5. A Creature found of late about the Bay of All-Saints which had the Face of an Ape, the Foot of a Lion, and all the rest of a Man; of such a terrible Aspect, that the Soldier who shot him fell down dead. But this I rather look on as an Aberration of Nature, than a Rarity in her. 6. Beasts of such strange shapes, and such several kinds, that it may be said of Brasil as once of Africk, Semper aliquid appertat novi, every day some new object of Admiration.

The People here are endowed with a pretty understanding; as may seem by him who tartly blamed the Covetousness of the Spaniards, for coming from the other end of the World to dig for Gold, and holding up a Wedge of Gold, cried out, Behold the God of the Christians. But in most places they are barbarous, the Men and Women go stark stark naked, and on high Festivals days hang Jewels in their Lips. These Festival days are when a company of good neighbours come together to be merry over the roasted body of a fat Man, whom they cut in Collops called Boucon, and eat with great greediness and much delectation. They have two vile qualities, as being mindful of Injuries, and forgetful of benefits. The Men Cruel without measure, and the Women infinitely lascivious. They cannot pronounce the Letters L. F. R. The reason of which one being demanded, made answer, because they had amongst them neither Law, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able Swimmers, as well Women as Men; and will stay under Water an hour together. Women in Travel are here delivered without any great Pain, and presently go about their business belonging to good Housewives: the good man (according to the fashion of our kinder sorts of Husbands in England, who are said to breed their Wives Children) being sick in their stead, and keeping their Bed; so far that he hath Broath made him, is visited by his Gossips, or Neighbours, and hath Junckets sent to comfort him. And amongst these there are some Rarities, if not monstrosities in nature: it being said of those which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like Beasts, such as Orjon is feigned to have been in the old Romance, and probably so ingendred; also that the Guaymares disbowel women with Child, and roast the Children; and finally, that the Savage Nation of Camucuiara have their Paps almost down unto their Knees, which they tie about their waste when they run, or go faster then ordinary.

Rivers of note I find not any till I come to Maragnon, though that be a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, then proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way as we cross the Country, we shall not pass them over without some remembrance. And so proceed we to the Division of the Country, not into Provinces or Nations, as in other places, but into Prefectures, or Captainships, as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13 in all, which we shall severally touch on as we trace the Coast, from the Province of Rio de la Plata unto that of Guiana; that is to say,

1. The Captainship of St. VINCENT, bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the most civil people of all Brasil; Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Santos, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, capable of good Ships of burden, but distant from the Main three Leagues. A Town of no more then 120 Houses, yet the best of this Prefecture; beautified with a Parish Church, and two Convents of Friars. Taken and held two months by Sir Tho. Cavendish, Anno 1591; since that environed with a Wall and fortified with two Castles. 2. S. Vincents, better built, but not so well fitted with an Haven, of about 70 Houses, and 100 Inhabitants. This is the most Southern Town in all Brasil, inhabited by the Portuguese. It lyes in the Southern Latitude of 23. 50. or as my Author saith, in another place, 24. It is an elegant fine Town, but little, and is seated upon a Bay that will not admit a great Ship. They had great commerce with the Carrigi, a civil Indian Nation, but in 1596. they surprized a part of them, since which time this Prefecture never thrived. This shews the time of this Plantation, Laet. p. 578. 3. Itange, and 4. Cananea, two open Burroughs, but capable of lesser Vessels. 5. S. Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleasant Rivers, which fall not far off into the River Iniambis, a Town of about a 100 houses, one Church, two Convents, and a Colledge of Jesuites; neighboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains called Pernabiacaba. 6. S. Philips, a small Town on the banks of Iniambis, which there begins to enlarge it self, and passing thence falleth at last into the River Parana, one of the greatest Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. Of RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of January, so called, because entered into that month by John Diaz de Solis. Anno 1515, neglected by the Portugals, it was seized on by the French, under the conduct of Villigagnone, employed herein by Admiral Castillon, a great friend of the Hugonots, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge, (as New England afterwards for the like) but within three years after their first coming hither (An. 1558) regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the sword. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Collignia, the Fort and Colony of the French, so named in honour of Gaspar Colligni, (commonly called Castillon) by whose encouragement it was founded. Situate on a Bay of the River Janeiro, which the French called Ganabara. 2. S. Sebastian, built at the mouth of the same Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French and fortified it with four strong Bulwarks. This is now a Bishop See, under the Archbishop of St. Salvador, and built on the South shore of the River Janeiro, Latitude. 23. 15. two miles from the Ocean, between the years 1558. and 1618. upon a circular Bay, upon a level ground, but surrounded by rising Hills, and not having above 10 or 12 houses a breast. [At the time of the last date, it had no Paved Streets, no Gates, no Walls, but it had then four Forts.] It took this name from Sebastian, then King of Portugal, the Founder of it. In 1580. the French who had first planted here in 1555. returned, and endeavoured to take it but in vain, Laet. p. 583. 3. Angra des Reyes, distant 12 Leagues Westward from the mouth of the Bay; not long since made a Portugal Colony. Besides these, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Brasilians, in which are said to be above 2000 Inhabitants.

3. Of the HOLY GHOST, (del Spiritu Santo) one of the most fertile Provinces of all Brasil; well stored with Cotton-wool, and watered with the River Parayba, large and full of Fish. The only Town of note in it is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200 Portugals. The chief building of it, a Church Dedicated to S. Francis, a Monastery of Benedictines, and a Colledge of Jesuites: the chief conveniency, a safe and commodious Haven, capable of the greatest Vessels. This stands 60 Spanish Leagues from the River Januario, to the North, and 50 from Porto Seguro to the South, 20 Degrees from the Line to the South; Brasilwood and Cotton is very plenty, but not much Sugar. The Prefecture belonging to it, is thought the most fruitful Country in Brasil. The Indians of it are called the Margajates, at first bitter Enemies to the Portuguese, but now are good Friends and Allies. It stands on the Right hand of the River, three Leagues from the Main Ocean, and had three Monasteries, Laet. p. 585.

4. Of PORTO SEGURO, The secure Haven, so called by Capralis, who first discovered it, when being tossed at sea by a terrible Tempest, he had here refreshed himself. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven; of more Antiquity then Fame, of more fame then bigness, as not containing fully 200 Families. It lyes 50 Leagues from Spiritu Santo to the North. 16. 30. from the Line to the South; It stands upon a high white Rock. Before our Authors time, the Indians had ruined this Town, so that but few lived here, and with great difficulty, Laet. p. 585. This shewed the weakness of the Portuguese in these parts, which was owing in great part to their Vassalage under the Crown of Spain, which as it afforded them an entrance into Spanish Indies, where Gold and Silver was more plentifully, so it deprived Brasil of its necessary supplies in the Infancy of its Plantations. 2. Santa Cruz, three Leagues from the other, a poor Town, with as poor an Harbour: the Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Averia in the Realm of Portugal. 3. Santo Amaro, or S. Omers, once of great note for making Sugars, for which use here were five Ingenias or Sugar Engines: deserted by the Portugals for fear of the Savages, against whom they'd not power enough to make good the place, and the Sugars destroyed of purpose, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous people.

5. Of DES ILHEOS, or of the Isles so named, from certain Islands lying against the Bay, on which the principal Town is seated, called also Ilheos, or the Island, (with like Analogy as a Town of good note in Flanders hath hath the name of Insula or Isle:) the Town consisting of about 150 or 200 Families, situate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12 Leagues in compass, (out of which that River doth arise) full of a great, but wholesome Fish, which they call Monates, some of which are affirmed to weigh 28 pounds. This Colony was much endangered by the Guymuri, a Race of Savages, more savage then any of their Fellows, who being driven out of their own Country, fell into this Prefecture, which they had utterly destroyed, if some of S. George's Reliques, as the Jesuites tell us (but I bind no man to believe it) sent by their General from Rome, Anno 1581, had not stayed their fury, and given the Portugals the better.

6. Of TO DOS L O S S A N T O S, or All Saints, so called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lieth, in breadth two Leagues and an half, 18 Fathoms deep, and full of many little Islands; but flourishing and pleasant, and well stored with Cotton-wool. A Bay in which are many safe stations, and Roads for shipping, and therefore of great use and consequence in those furious Seas. Memorable for the hardy enterprize of Peter Hyens, a Dutch man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces, who in the year 1627, seized on a Fleet of Spaniards, consisting of 26 sail of ships, (four of them being Men of War) all lying under the Protection of the Forts and Castles, built for the safety of that Bay. For thrusting in amongst them with his one Ship only (the rest not being able to follow) he so bid about him, that having sunk the Vice Admiral, he took all the rest, conditioning only for their lives, notwithstanding all the shot which was made against him from the ships and Castles, and 42 pieces of Ordnance planted on the shore. This seems to have been the first attempt the Hollanders made upon Brasil, which was carried on with great success, till the Crown of Portugal fell on the head of John Diake of Braganza in 1640. After which they began by degrees to recover this Country from the Hollanders, but with great difficulty. Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Salvador, built on a little Hill on the Northside of the Bay by Thomas de Sousa, adorned with many Churches and Religious Houses, and fortified (besides the Wall) with three strong Castles; the one called S. Anthony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tapefipe. Yet not so strong by reason of some Hills adjoining which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders, Anno 1624. recovered by the Spaniards the next year after, and since lost again. This in 1635 was the most populous City in Brasil. In 1676 it was made an Archbishops See, by the Pope Innocent XI. It had once 40 Sugar Mills, and a very rich Trade; when the Hollanders were finally Beaten out, I cannot now expressly assign. 2. Parripe, more within the Land, four Leagues from S. Saviours, 3. Seregippe del Rey, a small Town, and seated on as small a River, but amongst many rich pastures, and some Veins of Silver.

7. Of FERNAMBUCK one of the richest Prefectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Brasil wood which is brought hence yearly for the Diers, in all this Country; but destitute of Corn and most other necessaries, with which supplied from the Canaries, and sometimes from Portugal. Portugal is not able without the assistance of France to supply it self with Corn in our days, and this Tobacco Trade is lost to England. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Olanda, the largest and best peopled of all Brasil, containing above 2000 persons; not reckoning in the Church men, nor taking the great number of slaves which they keep for their Sugar-works into the account: for whose use they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious Houses, and some Hospitals. Situate near the Sea side, but on so uneven a piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a regular fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance by a well built Castle, and that well planted with Bras-pieces. Which notwithstanding, in the year 1595, the Castle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they use to flow all their chief Commodities) were taken by Captain James Lancaster and some few of the English, who having tarried in the Haven above a Month, brought home with him eight of his own Ships, four French men, and three Hollanders which came in by chance, all laden with the choicest Marchandise of Brasil and India. 2. Amatta de Brasil, ten Miles from Olanda, the inhabitants whereof live by selling the Brasil-wood. It was taken by the Hollanders in 1629, but afterwards restored. 3. S. Lameira, a well frequented Village, but as yet unwalled, 4. Pineur, upon a River so named, 5. Antonio de Cax, near the Cape of S. Vincent; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugar which are made in each. 6. Ganah, about five Leagues from Olanda, inhabited for the most part by poor and Mechanical persons, till the year 1632, when taken by the Hollanders, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Prefecture, belonging formerly to the Earls of Albuquerque, (a great House in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces United, the Town of Olanda being taken by them in the year 1629, the Port and all the Avenues unto it so strongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it. The Dutch have not now one foot of Land in Brasil, which said once for all.

8. Of T A M A R A C A, so called from an Island of that name, distant about five miles from Olanda, of no great note but for the Haven, and an impregnable Castle on the top of an Hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a strong Bulwark at the mouth of the Port, and so blocked it up, that it hath since been of no use to the Spaniards. This is the least Prefecture in Brasil, but withal the richest; extended three Leagues only in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earls of Mansanto in Portugal, who received hence yearly when entire, thirty thousand Ducats. But his Rents are much diminished, if not quite inverted, since the loss of the Haven.

9. Of P A R A I B A, so called from a River of that name (but by the Spaniard called Domingo) of most note herein, on the Banks whereof standeth Paraiiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the sea, about three Leagues from the Main, but capable of pretty good Ships to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long since by 500 Portugals, besides Slaves and Negroes. Not walled, till they began to stand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loss of Olanda; but more secured by a strong Castle on the Promontory called Cabo D. Jo, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, then by any works within the Land. A Castle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were possessed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoining Haven, called Port Francois, but ousted by the Portugal, Anno 1585, who have since held their footing in it, but are in fear of the Hollanders; especially since their taking of a little Island lying over against them, called the Isle of Noronba.

10. Of R I O G R A N D E, so called from the River Potengi, (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River; not made a Prefecture till of late. For lying open, as it were, to the next Pretender, some of the French began to fix here, Anno 1597, but the King of Spain, not willing to have any such Neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiiba to drive them thence; which was done accordingly. But then the Savages beginning to rise up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiiba was fain to seek aid from him of Frenambuck; by whose help having slain five thousand, and took three thousand of them, the rest became Vassals to the Portugals, who built here an impregnable Castle, (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned, and furnished with Ammunition and all other Necessaries; very few Portugals, except those of the Garrison, being yet come over.

11. Of S I A R A, a late Prefecture also, in which the Portugals have no more then a Castle, with a dozen Houses Houles, or thereabouts, besides that of the Governour adjoining to it. So named from an Haven called Sara but of no great note, and capable but of little Vessels. Of some Trade in regard of the Chrystal, Cotton-wool, and some precious stones found in the Country hereabouts: and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and pursue their conquest, here being great plenty of Sugar Canes, but no Works to make it.

12. Of MADRAGNON, an Island lying in the mouth of the great River so called, in the farthest parts of Brasil Northwards, and many Leagues distant from Sara, the last of their Prefectures; the Country intervening not yet discovered, or otherwise made known unto us, then by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coast. An Island of a fruitful soil; if pains and Husbandry were not wanting; affording naturally Maize, and a Root called Maniot, both which the Savages use for Bread; good store of Cotton-wool, Saffron, Brasil-wood, and the best Tobacco; and in some places Balm and Amber. Watered with many fresh Rivers and pleasant Springs; well wooded both for Timber and Fuel; and, in a word, blest with so temperate an Air, (though so near the Equator) that no place can be more commodious for the Life of Man. The people strong of body, healthy and long lived, without any baldness, industrious in their Feather works and Manufactures of Cotton; the Women curious in ordering their Hair, fruitful in Child-bearing, and that till 80 years old, and sometimes more Both Sexes naked till their Marriage, and then apparelled only from their Waist to their Knees.

The Villages hereof possessed by their Natives, consisted but of four great Houses; each of them two or three hundred foot in length, and twenty or thirty foot in breadth, so placed as they resembled a quadrangular Cloyster; and in each House so many Households, that commonly each of their Villages, or Taves, (for so they called them) contained three hundred persons, and some twice that number. Of these were twenty seven in all, whose names I hold impertinent to be mustered here, the total estimate of the people when the French came thither amounting to 12000 Souls. For the French trading in this Island, and carrying themselves courteously amongst the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colony of that Nation, if sent over to them, by whose Aid they might free themselves from all other Pretenders; and being instructed in the Gospel, accordingly a Colony and four Capuchin Friars are sent over to them, Anno 1612. Some Savages gained unto the Faith, and a strong Castle, called S. Lewis, commodiously built, and planted with 22 pieces of Ordnance, the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not rested there, when dispossessed by the Portugals, sent thither under the conduct of Hierome de Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Castle of S. Lewis, which the French had built, added those of S. Mary, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Island by the names of S. Andrew, and S. Jago, and ever since have held it without molestation.

13. Of PARA, the most Northern Prefecture of Brasil towards Gutana; so called from the River of Para, (supposed to be a branch of the River of Amazons) which runneth through it. The River at the mouth of it is two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Channel fifteen fathom deep: on the Banks, whereof (but on an higher ground then the rest) the Portugals have built the Castle of Para, in form quadrangular, and well-walled, except towards the River. This River is vast, but very much incumbered with Shoals; Nauclerus Eusitanus, placeth it in the Southern Latitude 02, 30. The Portuguese built a Town called St. James, I suppose this is that which is called Para, from the River, Lact. p. 606. This River is nothing but the South Branch or outlet of the great River of Amazons, as is averred by this Author, p. 630. and 634. The Indians in these parts call all Rivers Lakes, the Sea and Ocean by the Name of Para, ib. 16. 630. The Country thereabouts being inhabited by 300 Portuguese, besides the Garrison.

Now for the Fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supreme. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe Governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countries. These Tribes so many, and the Muster of their names so useless, that I now forbear it. In this estate they lived when discovered first; but by whom first discovered will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get some colour of a Title for the Crown of Castile, ascribe to John Pinhone and Diego de Lope, two of their own Country, who, as they say, had landed on it in the year 1500 before the coming of Capralis, though the same year also. The Portugals attribute the Discovery of it to Pedro Alvarez de Capralis, sent by their King Emanuel to the East-Indies; who being driven over hither from the Coast of Gutana, took possession of it, and as a Monument thereof, advanced a Cross giving the name of S. Elae Crucis, or the Holy Cross, to this new discovery. That name changed afterwards to Brasil, from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongst them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Vespusius, a noble Florentine, Anno 1501. and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation, in the year 1503, were by Emanuel employed in a farther Discovery. Who speeding fortunately in it, the Portugals, did accordingly send over some Plantations thither. But a great controverſie growing betwixt them and the Spaniard, to whether of the two it of right belonged; the Spaniard was content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull or Edict of Pope Alexander the sixth (by whom the whole undiscovered World was divided betwixt those two Kings) it seemed to fall within the Grant made to the Crown of Castile. Enjoyed by this Emanuel, and the Kings succeeding, till the death of Sebastian, (which Sebastian the Jesuites look on as the Founder of all the Colledges in this Country) and by the Spaniards since the death of Henry, (whose Reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal; that Nation being so prudently jealous of their Interest in it, that they would not suffer any of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongst them. By them possessed entirely without any Rivals, (I mean for so much of the Country as they had subdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part, and got the Prefectures of Fernambuck and Todos los Santos (or the Bay) by the right of War. The rest with all the other members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, submitting unto John the fourth, of the House of Braganza, whom the Portuguese had made their King, Anno 1639.

The Portuguese having thus freed themselves from the Yoke of Spain, their next care was to recover Brasil from the Intrusion of the Hollanders, which they in part effected, during the time of our Civil War, and perfected it in or about the time of our first Dutch War; which hindered the Hollanders from sending the supplies that were necessary to support their conquest. But the War going on between Portugal and Spain till 1669. the Portuguese were not in a capacity to make the best Advantage of their good success, so that the English in the mean time gat the main of the Sugar and Tobacco Trade, and supplied the North parts of the World, besides these with Cotton, Indigo, Wool, and many other Commodities we had before from hence. This was the greatest Blow that Portugal has received, and never to be retrieved, till by our Imprudence we destroy our own Trade, and discourage our Plantations from going on with them, or force them to something which is worse. The Crown of Portugal seems to me to have committed two great Errors in relation to this Planting this Country; the first was the Planting by the way of Force or Conquest: Their Kingdom being small and exhausted by their East-Indian Garrisons and Settlements in Africa, was not able to spare any considerable quantity of Men, for the reducing and keeping so long a Coast as this is, against such numerous and valiant Men, as the Brasilians are; And which made it worse, was, that it was not the Crown

Crown of Portugal that was immediately concerned, but certain private Adventurers of the Nobility of that Kingdom, who were not able to do it so effectually, as the Crown might have done it, but spent the Subjects of that small Kingdom to no very great and good effect! The second Error was the Grasping at so much, and making the Settlement so far distant from each other, that they were not able to Succour each other. Had all the Portuguese in Brazil been settled together, in a smaller compass of ground, they might have despised the Natives, and any forainer that could have attacked them at that distance; but being so dispersed, and so few in Number, they fell a prey to both. If the War with England had not diverted the Dutch Supplies, it is more than probable, they would have driven the Portuguese at length out of Brazil. So before that, if the the French civil Wars had not hindered Castilion, the Admiral of France, from sending Reinforcements in due time, and proposition to them, he had sent thither, they would have fixed here in the despite of the Portuguese.

Portugal also by this means lost her own liberty, and was reduced under the Vassalage of Spain, for want of Men to defend the Country; and had not Spain, been more exhausted by the Plantations in America, Banishment of the Mores, and the tedious Netherland War, Portugal had never been able to recover out of this Vassalage; So that whilst they conquered in America, they were Conquered in Europe: this will also in fine be the Fate of Spain too, tho being a Greater Kingdom, it may subsist for some time.

And so much for B R A S I L.

O F

G U I A N A.

GUIANA is bound on the East with the main Atlantick; on the West, with the Mountains of Peru, or rather some undiscovered Countries interposed betwixt them; on the North, with the River Orenoque, and on the South, with that of the Amazons. The reason of the name I find not, unless it be so called from the River Wia, of which more anon. It is yet said to have had this name given it, because it lieth in the same Latitude with Guiana in Africa, and is not much unlike it in other Circumstances; but we may be sure of this, it had its name from the other.

It is situate on both sides of the Line, extended from the fourth degree of Southern to the eighth of Northern Latitude. The Air notwithstanding this situation under the Aequator, is affirm'd to be temperate, the Eastern winds (which they call the Briezes) constantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extream heats thereof by their cooler blasts. The Country towards the Sea-side flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and swelled with Hills: in all places so adorned with Natures Tapestry, the boughs and branches of the Trees never unclothed or left naked, (Fruits either ripe or green growing still upon them) that no Country in the World could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we shall see anon, when the particular parts hereof come into discourse.

Of the People it is said in general, that they have amongst them no settled Government, and though they acknowledge some Superiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they please. Adultery and murder which are only punishable, are not otherwise expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer sort have two or three Wives, and sometimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her: they that have more, and they who have but one, alike jealous of them; and if they take them in Adultery, without any farther Ceremony or Formalities of Law, they beat out their Brains. Their Wives, especially the elder, they use for Servants, and he which hath most such is the greatest man. Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not so far on wards on the way to the worship of the true God as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatry be mistaken in the proper Object, it supposeth a Deity; and they who have this principal that there is a God, have learned one and not the least, of the points of their Catechism. Their Accounts amongst themselves they keep with a bundle of sticks, which they diminish or increase according to the times of their Contract. Their Funerals they solemnize with a Feast, but with such diversity in the deportment of both Sexes, that while the Women houl extreamly, the men perform the Obsequies with singing and excessive drinking; the one as improper for a Feast, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of most note in it, besides 1. Orenoque, and 2. the River of Amazons, and those rather Boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, then proper unto this alone. 3. Arrawary. 4. Conawene. 5. Caspurough, or Cassipure; all falling into the same main Atlantick, betwixt the River of Amazons and Wiapoco: the last rising out of the Lake of the Arachosi, half a mile broad at the mouth or influx into the Sea, and but five spans deep. 6. Wiapoco, of which more hereafter. 7. Wia, This River is 4. 40. from the Line to the North, beautiful and of a long Course, of a Fruitful Soil, and very broad at its fall. L. Keymis found a large safe Haven, made by some Islands at the mouth of it, Laet. p. 639. 8. Cajane. 9. Marwine, this is a vast River, and is 5. 45. from the Line to the North, and one German mile at the mouth over, and very deep. Harcourt, in 1608. sailed up this River, and was kindly treated by the Indian Ryoletts; about 20 Leagues from the mouth he found Cataracts very difficult in passing. The Soil about this River is low, and of a Red Colour, and not so fruitful towards the Sea. Nigher up seven or eight Miles, it riseth higher into Hills, but else like the former, Laet. p. 646. 10. Essequabe, a River of twenty days journey long, betwixt Wiapoco and the River of Orenoque, or Raliana.

The whole divided commonly into these four parts:

1. Rio de las Amazonas or the River of Amazones. 2. Wiapoco, or Guiana specially so called. 3. Orenoque. And 4. The Isles of Guiana.

1. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazons, containeth that part of this Country which lieth along the Tract of that famous River. The Soil is in some places dry and barren, in others fertile and Productive of the choicest Fruits, full of large Woods, and in those Woods most sort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongst others of most note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana) which they call the

Torako

Totocke, a Tree of great Bulk, and as great a Fruit; this last as big as a mans head, and so hard withal, that when the Fruit grows ripe and Ready to fall, the people dare not go into the Woods without an Helmet, or some such shelter over their heads, for fear of beating out their Brains. The kernels of it, for the most part ten or twelve in number, have the taste of Almonds, and are said to be provocative in point of Venerie. Of which the Savages have this By-word, Pigue secke in Saccowe pingean Totocke; that is to say, Eat Totocke if thou wouldst be potent in the acts of Venus. Here are also Sugar-Canes in some places; and the Plant called Pita, the taste whereof is said to be like Strawberries, Claret Wine, and Sugar.

The Principal Inhabitants of this part of the Country, the Taoes, Cuckettuay, Pattecu, Tockianes, Tomoos, and Wackebanes, dwelling on the Continent; the Maraons and Arowians, possessed of the Islands. Towns of note I have met with none amongst them, though every house (most of them 140 foot in length, 20 in breadth, and entertaining at the least an hundred persons) might pass sufficiently for a Village. Yet they are safer housed then so, for otherwise their Houses would afford them but little comfort in the overflowings of the River which drown all the Country: and therefore they betake themselves to the tops of Trees, and there remain like Birds, with their several Families, till the Waters be drawn in again, and the Earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find some of these their dwellings called by proper Names: as, 1. Matarem. 2. Roakery. 3. Anorcaprock. 4. Haaman. 5. Womians: and 6. Cogemymne. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The first Discoverer of this River and the parts adjoining was Orellana, the Lieutenant of Gonzales Pizarro, whom his Brother Francisco Pizarro, then Vice-roy of Peru, had made the Governour of Quito. Moved with the noise of some rich Countrys beyond the Andes, he raised sufficient Forces, and passed over those Mountains, where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a Boat, and sent this Orellana to bring in Provisions. But the River which he chanced into was so swift of course, that he was not able to go back; and was therefore of necessity to obey his fortune in following the course of that strong water. Passing along by divers desolate and unpeopled places, he came at last into a Country planted and inhabited; where he first heard of the Amazons, (by whose Savages called Comapuyaras) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people. And in the end, having spent his time in passing down this River from the beginning of January, to the end of August 1540. he came at last into the Sea, and getting into the Isle of Gubagna, sailed into Spain. The course of this Voyage down the Water, he estimated at 1800 Leagues, (or 5400. English miles) but found no Amazons in his passage, as himself affirmed; only some masculine Women shewed themselves intermixt with the Men, to oppose his landing; and in some places he found Men with long Hair like Women: either of which might make these parts believed to be held by Amazons. But to proceed, arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commission for the Conquest of the Countries by him discovered; and in the year 1549. he betook himself unto the service. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at least, he could never hit upon the Channel which brought him down, though he attempted often. Which ill success, with the consideration of his loss both in Fame and Fortunes, brought him to his Grave; having got nothing but the honour of the first Discovery, and the leave of his name to that famous River, since called Orellana. The Enterprize was pursued, but with like success, by one Pedro de Orsua, Anno 1560, after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the English and the Hollanders have endeavoured an exact Discovery, and several begun some Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the other; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Por- tugals, before they were sufficiently fortified to make any resistance.

2. WIAPOCO, or G U I A N A specially so called, taketh up the middle of this Country, on both sides of the River of Wiapoco, whence it hath its name. A River of long Course, but not passible up the Stream above 16 miles, by reason of the Cataract or great fall from the higher Ground: in breadth betwixt that Cataract and the Estuarium, about the tenth part of a mile; at the Estuarium, or Influx, a whole mile at least, and there about two Fathoms deep. This great River is four Degrees 30. Minutes from the Line to the North, it falls into a Bay three miles over, but within it is both deeper and narrower. In the year 1608. Harcourt an English man, left 10 English men, and one German, with the Indians that live upon this River, and lived there three years, and but six of them died in that time, and that by Misfortunes rather than Diseases. Laet. p. 637.

The Country on both sides of this River very rich and fertile; so natural for Tobacco, that it groweth to nine handfuls long. Sugar-canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the Shrubs great store of Cotton, and the Dye by some called Orellana. Plenty of Venison in their Woods, and of Fish in their Rivers: their Fields well stored with Beasts, which themselves call Moyres; in shape and use resembling Kine, but without any Horns. The people generally of a modest and ingenuous countenance, naked, but would wear cloaths if they had them, or knew how to make them, (one would think this might be said of all the naked nations, but it cannot, many of them being hardly, and with great difficulty to be brought to Change this Custom, and that not suddenly neither) Their Bread is made of a Plant called Cassavi, of which also being dried and chewed, and then strained through a Wicker Vessel, they make a kind of Drink, in colour like new Ale, but not so well tasted, and of less continuance. The greatest part of their Food is Fish, which they intoxicate with a strong scented Wood, and so take them up as they lie floating on the top of the Water. Much troubled with a Worm like a Flea, (by the Spaniards called Niguas) which get under the nails of their Toes, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no less torture to the Patient, without speedy prevention. No better Remedy found out, then to pour Wax melted hot on the place affected; which being pulled off when its cold, draws the Vermin with it, sometimes 800 at a pull. The women have such easie child birth, that they are delivered without help, and presently bring the Child to his Father, (for they have so much natural Modesty, as to withdraw from company upon that occasion) who washeth it with water, and painteth it with several colours, and so returneth it to the Mother.

Rivers of note here are very many; no Country under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleasant and goodly Streams. The names of some of them on both sides of the Wiapoco we have had before; the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long course, a goodly River all the way, and at the Mouth thereof to be large and broad, which passing through the heart of the Country, in the fourth degree and 49 minutes of Northern Latitude, may possibly occasion both the whole and this part more especially to be called Wiana, and by the Dutch, who cannot pronounce the W. Guiana. Certain I am, that by the name of Wigna, I have found it written in approved Authors. But what need farther search be made after lesser Rivers, (which will offer themselves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to pass over like a Sea for bigness, (Magnum, famosum, & vastum, in scar maris, as my Author hath it) by the Taos or Taos called Rapanowinin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Country) Parimin; situate about a days journey from the River Essequibo, and neighboured by the great and famous City Manoa, which the Spaniards call El Dorado, (or the Golden City) from the abundance of Gold, in Coin, Plate, Armour, and other Furniture, which was said to be in it. The greatest City, as some say, not only of America, but of all the World. For Diego de Ordaz, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican Wars, and by him condemned for a Mutiny, put into a boat alone without any Victual and so cast off to seek his Fortune, affirmed at his return; that being taken by some of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King, then residing at Minoa, he entered the City at high-noon, travelled all the rest of that day, and the next also until night, before he came to the Kings Palace; but then he saith that he was led blind fold all the way: And therefore possibly enough this City might be no such Miracle as the story makes it; Don Diego being either abused by the Reports of the Savages, or willing to abuse the World with such empty Fictions. For though the Spaniards and the English have severally sought, and that with incredible diligence, to find out this City; yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be said in the Poets Language,

Esse putas nunquam———i. e.

That which is no where to be found,

Think not to be above the Ground.

Nor is there much more credit to be given unto his Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Ingas; who being, forsooth, one of the younger Brethren of Atabaliba, the last King of Peru, at the Conquest of that Kingdom, with many thousands of his Followers, came into this Country, and subduing the Caribes, erected here a second Peruvian Monarchy. For besides that Atabaliba had no Brethren but Guaspar and Mango, who both died in Peru, how improbable must it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing so well the thirst of the Spaniards after Gold, would either suffer him to return and disclose the Secrets of his State, or send him away loaded with Gold, as tis' said he did? Who sheweth his Treasure to a Thief, doth deserve to lose it. And therefore letting pass these dreams of an El Dorado, let us descend to places of less Magnificence, but of greater Reality. Amongst which I reckon, 1. Caripo, most memorable for a Colony of English planted by Captain Robert Harcourt, Anno. 1608. situate on the banks of the Wapoco, near the Mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock so difficult of access, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Air so sound and answerable to the constitution of an English body, that of 30, which were left there for three years together, there died but six, and those six rather by misfortune, and some Cross accident, than by any Diseases. 2. Gomeribo, on the top of an Hill, near the mouth of the Bay of Wapoco; possessed a while by some Hollanders, but soon deserted. 3. Moyemon, a Village of the Paragoti, on the banks of the River Merwinen. 4. Crewinay, on the other side of the same River, possessed by the Caribes. The King of the first (for each Tribe had its several Princes) being named Maperitaka, affirmed to be a virtuous man, and kind to Strangers; of the latter, Minapa. 5. Tamparamunen, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River; and 6. Moreshego, four days journey from the other: both possessed by the Caribes. The King or Cacique of those last, at Captain Harcourt's being there, (of which time we speak) was named Areminta; affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Buff.

The principal Families of this part, besides the Yaos or Jaos, and the Maraons, (spoken of before, who possess almost all the Sea Coasts of this Country, are said to be the Arwacca, the Sopayoy, the Mayos, and the Aracours; of different Languages and Customs, though near neighbours unto one another. Originally Inhabitants of the Island of Trinidad, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants, whom they call by the common name of Caribes, higher into the Country, possessed themselves of the Sea shores and the parts adjoining:

each Tribe or Family being Governed by its several Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlanders for a time had some footing in it, but they quickly left it; endeavouring nothing more in the time of their short stay amongst them, than to make the people disaffected to the English, of whose pretensions to these parts and designs to plant them, they had good intelligence. And to me it was confessed by some of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance how much the English were abused in those ill-reports. Afterwards in the year 1604, Captain Charles Leigh sailed from Hoolwich on the Thames, and in May fell upon the River of Wapoco, where he was kindly entertained, furnished with an House and Garden, and his Aid craved against the Caribes and their other Enemies. He took possession of the Country in the name of King James, and the Crown of England, and called the River of Wapoco to be called (by his own name) Caraleigh; but that name ended with his Life, and that shortly after, he dying in his return on ship board. The design went forwards notwithstanding, and in the year 1608, an English Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new possession taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before mentioned, the Country farther searched into by that noble Gentleman, then ever formerly by any or by many since. After three years, the Colony, wanting fit Supplies returned home again; the Plantation never since pursued though by some projected. Yet so far are these Savages beholden to the English Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there against the Caribes, so at their going off they taught them the use of Arms, and put them into a posture of defence, enabling them thereby to preserve themselves against all their enemies.

3. ORE NO QUE, or the Province of the River Orenoque, comprehendeth the North parts of Guiana, lying upon and towards the banks of that famous River, of which we have already spoken. The Country is very rich and pleasant, consisting of large Plains many miles in compals, adorned with the Embroidery of Flowers and unknown Plants, exceeding pleasant to the Eye; and sometimes interlaced with Hills reported to be furnished with rich Mines of Gold and Silver. The Country is daily stored with Fish, and the Forrests abound with Beasts and Fowls. No Country in America, nor Peru it is said, can be comparable to it for abundance of Treasure. Some will add a whole Mountain of Crystal to be seen afar off from Winecaporo; and tell us (but in general terms) of more goodly Cities then elsewhere in all Peruana; but neither the Spaniards nor the English could never see them, though they diligently searched into most parts of the Country.

The People, as of several Nations, so of several Natures. The Capury and Macureos, for the most part Carpenters, live by making Caanos or Boats, which they sell into Guiana for Gold, and to Trinidad for Tobacco, in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dieth, they make great lamentation; and after the Flesh is putrid and fallen from the Bones, they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the House where he dwelt, decking his skull with feathers of all colours, and hanging Gold Plates about the bones of his Arms and Thighs. Of the Tritivas, dwelling upon some of the Northern Branches, it is affirmed by Sir Walter Raleigh, that they are a goodly and valiant people, and to have the most manly and most deliberate speech of any Nation in the World. A people which eat of nothing that is let or sown; the Children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholden for their livelihood unto Art or Industry; using the tops of the Palmist Tree for Bread; Fish, Deer, and Swines flesh for the rest of their sustenance. The Affway, Sayme, Wickers, and Aroras, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with smoother Hair; and to use Arrows dipt in so strange a poison, as doth not only bring death, but death with most unspeakable torments, especially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Arwacca, of this Tract I find nothing singular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their Wives and nearest of the Kindred beat their Bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink, like Spice.

Places of most importance in it (for to speak any thing particularly of those many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque were an endless labour) are, 1. Comolaba, on the South of Orenoque, but somewhat distant, in which they keep some annual Fairs for the sale of Women. One of our English men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595, affirmeth that he bought eight of them (the eldest not above eighteen) for a half-peny red haisted Knife, which he brought from England. But withal tells us, for his credit, that he gave them to some Savages of his acquaintance. 2. Moriquito, a known Port upon some branch of the Orenoque; of much use to the English in their first Discovery of these parts. 3. Winecaporo, so called from whence was shewed an high Hill, said to be of Cristal, but so far off, that it was thought better to believe them there to go and see. Others report of this Mountain, that above it there is a mighty River, which, falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noise, as if a thousand Bells were knocked one against another. And possible enough it is, that this great fall of Water discerned far off may (with the help of Sun-shine) carry some resemblance of a Crystalline Mountain. 4. S. Thome, situate on the main Channel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 Houses, stretched out in length for half a mile, but slightly built; a Parish Church in the midst of it, and at the West end a Convent of Franciscan Friars. The only Town of all Guiana possessed by the Spaniards; not fortified till against the last coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617. but taken by him at that time, and since that by the Hollanders, Anno 1629; though by both quitted, not long after it returned to the Spaniards.

The several Nations of this Tract have been named before; discovered first by Diego de Ordaz, Anno 1531. furnished with a Patent for the Conquest of it by Charles the Fifth. But not hitting on the right Channel, or otherwise not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain, effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hierom de Ortal, Anno 1533, and after by Herrera, who proceeded farther then the others Anno 1536. and finally by Gonsalvo Ximenes de Quesada, and Antonio Berreo with far better fortune: who beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the search of Guiana, fell casually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazons. But yet not perfectly discovered till the year 1595, in which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Prisoner this Antonio Berreo; and learning of him the success of his Expedition, resolved upon the Undertaking; and searched so far into the Country by the course of this River that some have since called it Raliana. The business was followed the next year (after his return) by Captain Laurence Krymis, employed by Raleigh in that Service, who at his coming found the Country possessed by the Spaniards, by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable houses of the Savages had been laid together like a Town, and all the Natives, who wished well to the English, dispersed and scattered. So that without any other affect of his journey, then the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he first discovered) he set sail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of English should be planted there, and some proportionable force sent over to make good the Action, but the motion was upon good advice rejected, first in regard of the distance of it from the main body of our strength; and secondly, because the Spaniards, bordering near upon it, might easily destroy a small force, and make the enterprise dishonourable to the English Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of honourable Achievement. It was permitted notwithstanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State: whereupon followed the Voyages of Leigh and Harcourt, before spoken of. But they, not being able to go through with so great a business, let it fall again. And so it rested till the last unfortunate Voyages of Sir Walter Raleigh, licensed by Commission under the Great Seal to search into some Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Country. A design followed with great hopes by the Undertakers, most of them being persons of Honour, and well attended: but so unfortunate in the issue (the Spaniards being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking of S. Thome he lost his own son, and a great part of his Forces, and after his return (not able with the residue to make good his ground against the enemy) was executed on a former Attender in the old Palace of Westminster, Octob. 29. Anno 1618. Of whom I cannot chuse but note what is said by Camden Clarencieux in his Annals: Vir erat nunquam satis laudato studio & Regionem remotas detegendi, & Navalium Angliæ gloriam promovendi. And so I leave him to his rest in the Bed of Peace.

4. The ISLANDS which properly are accounted of as parts of Guiana, lie either scattered on the shore, or in the mouths or bodies of the greater Rivers; some of them not inhabited, others of no name, and none at all of any reckoning. Only the Isle of 1. Trinidad, and 2. Tabago, are of some esteem: which though somewhat farther off from the shores of this Country, yet being that of Trinidad lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana pass but for one Prefecture, or Provincial Government, we shall describe them in this place.

1. TRINIDAD, or Insula S. Trinitatis, lieth at the mouth of the River Orenoque, over against Paria, from which separated by a Frith, or Streight, by Columbus, who first discovered it, called Boca del Drago, or the Dragons mouth, because of the dangerousnels of the passage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth degree of Northern Latitude; the most Southern Angle of it called Punta del Gallo, as that on the North East, Punta de Galera. The Frith, or Streight but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the Interposition of four or five little Islands, which the Sea breaketh through with great violence, leaving only two entrances for shipping into the Gulf called the Gulf of Paria. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth 18. Of a Cloudy and unhealthy Air, but a fertile soil, abundantly well stored with such Commodities, as are of the Natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-canes, Cotton-wool, and the best kind of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidad. Here is also a sufficiency of Fruits and Cattle for the use of the Natives; and here and there some Veins of Gold, and other Metals: such store of Pitch, that innumerable Ships might be laden with it, but that it is conceived to be unfit for the calking of ships, because it softneth in the Sun. The place in which it groweth is by the Spaniards called Terra de Braa, by the Natives Pichen.

The People of the same nature and disposition with the other Americans, distinguished into several Tribes, but most of them reduced under the power of two petit Princes. But the greatest part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, forsook their Country, and ferried over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Josephs, situate on the South-side of the Island, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Caroue, the ordinary Residence of the Governour, who hath under him besides this Island the Provinces of Guiana, and El Dorado, (for so goes his Titles) yet a small Town, consisting but of 40 Houses when it was taken, Anno 1597. by Sir Walter Raleigh; or as others 1595. He observed the North part was barren and Mountainous. The rest was very fruitful in Maize, Sugar Canes, and such other things as are common in this Climate. I suppose, saith my Author, it is not much encreased, since the Spaniards minding here nothing but the Planting of Tobacco. It has much mineral ral pitch, but of no use, because it melts with the heat of the Sun, Laet. p. 661. Antonio Berreo the Governour of it being then made Prisoner, who furnished his taker with many Notions (and some meerly fabulous) towards the Discovery of Guiana.

This Island, first discovered by Christopher Columbus, in his third Voyage, Anno 1497. was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with some reference to the form hereof, shooting into the Sea with three points or Promontories. Nothing else memorable in the fortunes and story of it, but what is touched upon before. Oviedo a Spaniard saith, the South Cape of it lyes in nine Degrees of Latitude, and the North in 10, the Dutch say 10. 30. and the South 9. 30. It lyes from Hispaniola 200 Leagues South, from Domingo, Margarita, and Cubagua 40. In length it is 50 Leagues, in breadth 30. in form it is Triangular.

2. TABAGO lieth on the North east of La Trinidad, from which it is eight miles distant: full of safe Harbours for the bigness, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well stored with Woods: amongst which some Palmito Trees, some like that of the Brasil-wood, others not else where to be found. Of Fowl and Fish sufficient to maintain it self. Now called New Walcheren, with reference to an Island of that name in Zealand, by some of the Low Country men, who begin to plant there. As the Hollanders observe it lyes in the North Latitude of 11 16. The East side of it lyes very high and has two smaller Islands, and some Rocks lie near the Creeks in it are ve-ny fit for the riding of ships. Its length is from North to South. The Soil is fruitful, and the Air very Pleasant. The best Harbours are on the West side of the Island. Laet. saith, the Dutch were in possession of the Island some years before he wrote, and from them he had an exact account, p. 666. His Description of America was finished in 1633. This Island in the year 1673. was plundered by the English under Sir Tobias Bridges, and they carried away 400 Prisoners, and as many Negrees. In 1677. the French being desirous to expel the Dutch, sent the Count D'Estree, with ten Ships which entered Klips Bay, and for several days engaged a Fleet of eight Dutch Ships lying under the Command of James Binkins, a Dutch Man, who so well defended the Island, that though the French pretended they destroyed the Fort the Dutch had built, yet the French were forced to draw off and leave the Dutch Masters of the Island. It is in length 32 miles, and in breadth about 11. This Island was Granted by Charles the second to James Duke of Courland, his Heirs and Successors only, to be peopled with English and Courlanders, who employed one Master John Poincz in that affair, but with what effect I know not, but it being in the hands of the Hollanders in 1677. it is probable they retook the Island, or that it was returned to them by the Treaty of Peace, the Articles of which I have not now by me.

And so much for GUIANA.

O F

P A R I A.

P A R I A is bounded on the East with Guiana, and the Islands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the West, with the Gulf or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada, on the North, with the main Atlantick Ocean, or Mare del Noort; the Countrys lying on the South not discovered hitherto.

It took this name from a mistake of the Spaniards, (as Peru and Jucatan on the like) who asking, as all men do the names of those new Regions which they discovered, and pointing to the Hills afar off, were answered Paria, that is to say, high Hills or Mountains, (for here begins the ridge of Mountains, which are thence continued for the Space of 3600 miles, to the streights of Magellan; and so hath it ever since held the name of Paria. By some writers it is called Nova Andalusia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the Soil and People being very different, will be more properly considered in the several parts. The whole divided into the Continent and the Islands, which, with their sub-divisions may be branched into these particulars, viz. 1. Cumana, 2. Venezuela, 3. S. Margarita. 4. Cubagua; and fifthly the lesser Islands.

1. CUMANA hath on the East the Gulf of Paria, and the River Orenoque; on the West, Venezuela; on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it on the banks whereof some Dominican Friars (who first set footing in this Country) built themselves a Monastery; that name being communicated afterwards unto all the rest of this Tract.

It is extended East and West to the breadth of 110 Leagues; the length thereof, from North to South, said to be 400. But there is little of it known, and less of it planted by the Europeans; except some places near the sea: there being no part of all America, the description whereof hath come so imperfectly to our hands as it hath of this. For except it be the names of some Bays or Promontories, and of two or three most noted Rivers, there is not much that doth require our considerations.

The Country, for so much as hath been discovered, neither rich nor pleasant; and consequently the less looked after: covered with shrubs, and overgrown with unprofitable Briets and Bushes. Heretofore famed for Pearl fishing all along the Coast: from the Gulf of Paria to that of Venezuela, called therefore Costa de las Perlas; but that gainful Trade hath long since failed. Now only of esteem for a Vein of most excellent Salt, found near the Promontory of Araya, and the Bay of Cariaco, gathered and digged up thereabouts in great abundance, and never diminishing. The parts adjoyning take from hence the name of Salina; the Promontory bordering on the Frith called Bocco del Drago, the Title or Appellation of Cape Salinas. Of some strange Creatures in this Country, as the Beast called Capa, the soles of whose Feet are like a Shooe, a kind of Hog, which lives altogether upon Ants or Pismires, Parrots and Bats of more then ordinary greatness, I forbear to speak.

Of the people I find nothing singular, except it be, that having plenty of good Fruit, and of Fish and Flesh, they use themselves to a far worse diet, feeding on Horleeches, Bats, Spiders, Grasshoppers, Worms, Lice, and such other Vermin; In other things they seem to have a mixture of an ill Custom used amongst the Savages of Asia, Africa and America; as multitudes of wives, prostituting these Wives for the first Nights Lodging to the Pisacos or Priests, and for any after, to their Guests; taking great pains to black their Teeth, and putting strange colours lours on their Bodies instead of Garments ; high-minded, treacherous, and revengeful ; accustomed to the use of poisoned Arrows, which they envenom with Snakes Blood and other mixtures. In one thing only differing from the rest of their neighbours, which is, the fencing of their Grounds or Orchards with a Cotton thred, as high as ones Girdle, and an opinion which they have, that whosoever breaketh it, or goes over or under it, shall die immediately ; more safe in that perswasion than by brazen Walls. The Women tilled the Earth, and planned all their Provisions, whilst the Men were employed in War and hunting. The Women went naked, and exposed themselves to all Men till they were married ; but after this wear some slight thing to cover their Nakedness, and were more reserved, Laet. p. 672. The Spaniards were so cruel to this People, that in 1513. the Monks of St. Dominick interceded with the King of Spain, to have the civilizing of them, which was granted by Charles the fifth.

River of most note, though of little, 1. Rio de Canoas, 2. Rio de Neveri, 3. Cumana de Bardoneir. The chief Havens or Roads for shipping, 1. Moximo, 2. S. Foy, and 3. that called Commenagot. The places of most consideration, 1. Cumana, a Colony of Spaniards on the Bank of the river of that name, but distant about two miles from the sea, on which it hath a safe and convenient Harbour : the Town is hedged about with Woods, that nothing can be seen of it till one come into it, except it be the Governour's House, seated upon the top of a lofty Mountain. 2. S. Fago, a strong Fortrel built by the Spaniard for defence of the salt Lake, by Salinas, in the year 1622, on some intelligence that the Hollanders had a purpose to rake them from him ; fortified to the Rules of Art, and planted with 30 pieces of Ordnance, the one half of Brals. 3. S. Michael de Neveri, on the River so called, a Fort of the Spaniards, 4. Guaniba, a Village of the Natives.

The Country first was discovered in the third Voyage of Christopher Columbus, but the possession of it was first taken by two Dominicans, who out of a Religious zeal to plant the Gospel in these parts, founded themselves a little Cell in the place where the Burrough of Cumana was after built, Anno 1513. and doubtless had sped very well in their holy purpose, if some covetous Spaniards had not treacherously seized upon one of the Chiefs of their Tribes ; and carried him with his Wife and Train into Spanish bondage. For this the poor Monks suffered death, I may call it martyrdom, which was revenged by Alonso de Oieda, Anno 1520. and he not long after slain by the Savages, who also at the same time destroy'd two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Fryers, which had been founded in the year 1518. A Second force sent higher under Gonsalvo de Ocampo, wasted a great part of the Country, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs some of his people. But that strength being withdrawn or defeated also, Diego de Castellon is sent over by the Council resident in Hispaniola, to secure the possession of the Country ; by whom the Castle first, and after the Burrough of Cumana was built and planted. Some other attempts there were for a farther Conquest ; but they proved nothing but attempts ; except the building of the Castle of S. Michael de Newers, by Hierom of Orta, and the Discovery of some of the inland Provinces, 150 Leagues from the sea-side, by Antonio Sedenno. Anno 1537. of which nothing followed, but the Registring of that tedious March.

2. VENEZUELA is bounden on the East with Cumana ; on the West, with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the new Realm of Granada. So called by Alonso de Oieda, one of the first Discoverers of it, Anno 1599. because he found a Burrough of some of the Savages situate in the midst of the waters, to which was no passage but by Boat : the word importune as much as Little Venice. It was first attempted to be conquered in 1528. by the Germani. On the East it is bound by the Maracapana, and to the West by Cape de la Veba, in Length 200 Leagues. There was scarce a year alter this to that of 1553. but there was an expedition made by the Germani or Spaniards for the Conquest or discovery of this large Province, as is related by Laet. lib. 18. cap. 8, 9, 10. to the North it has the Bay of Mexico, and to the South Orenoque and the Provinces upon it.

It is in length from East to West 130 Leagues ; in breadth where broadest about 80. The Soil so plentiful of all sorts both of Fruit and Grain, the Country so replenished with all kind of Cattle, and excellent Pastures to maintain them, that the Neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granary. Such store there goeth from hence of Wheaten Meal, Bisket, Cheefe, Hogs flesh, Ox-hides, and Cloth of Cotton ready made, as very well deserves that Title. Here is also very great plenty of Fish, wild Beasts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other Metals ; beside an infinite deal of Sarsaparilla sent to Europe yearly. The people are of the same Nature and Disposition with those of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The Women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and swim, as well as the men to Till the Land ; and look to the business of the house, whilst the men hunt or fish to bring in Provision. They count it a great part of Beauty to have very thick Thighs ; which they effect by binding their Legs hard below the Knee from their very Childhood. Shameless enough till married, after more reserved ; tho' rather for fear of a Divorce, than for love of Modesty.

Rivers of note I meet with none, instead of which are many convenient Harbours and capacious Bays. The chief that called Golfo triste, from some Shipwracks, or the like misfortune happened to the Namer of it. 2. The Bay of Coro or Venezuela, large and capacious, which by the Frith or Streight of half a League over, receiveth the Tributé of 3. The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lago de Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladies Lake, in compass about eighty Leagues ; on the Banks whereof dwell many Nations of the Savages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain Commerce with one another.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Meracapana, the farthest Port upon the East, and one of the best on all this Coast, in which the Spaniards of Cubagna had once a Garrison, under colour of defending the Country against the Savages, but in plain truth to use it for an opportunity to seize upon their persons, and carry them away for Slaves. Those parts are hereby unpeopled, or but meanly populous. 2. Venezuela, the most Western Town of all the Province, commonly called Coro, situate in the Latitude of 11 Degrees, built on the Sea ; where it hath an Haven on each side ; the one capacious, but not safe, the other safe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a sweet and healthy Air, and neighboured by the richest soil of all the Country, it had been long the ordinary seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop, (Suffragan to the Archbishop of Domingo in Hispaniola.) Once suddenly surprized by the English, Anno 1595. and burnt to ashes, but as suddenly repaired again, 3. Caravalleda, or Nuestra Sennora de Caravalleda, 80 Leagues from Coro towards the East, seated upon the sea near an unsafe Haven, and defended from assault by the Castle of Caracas, so called from the name of the Tribe in which it standeth. Near unto which the Hills arise to so great an height, that they seem to equal the Pike of Tinariff, so much talked of. 4. S. Fago de Leon, in the same Tribe of Caracas, taken by the English in the same year. This lies seven Leagues from the Bay of Mexico, seventy from Coro to the East, and four from Caravalleda. It is seated in a fruitful plain, having a Ridge of high Mountains between it and the Sea, Laet. p. 682. 5. Nova Valentia, 25 Leagues from S. Fago de Leon, and from Coro 60. 6. New Xeres lately built, fifteen leagues on the South of New Valentia. 7. Nova Segovia, one league only from New Xeres ; situate on the Banks of Baraquicemiti, the most noted River of this Tract. This City was built by the Germans, about the year 1552. near Mount St. Pedro, and afterwards for the unhealthful sight of it, removed to the aforementioned River, which falls into the Orenoque. It stands 80 Leagues from Coro, to the South East Latitude 7. 40. About it live many Indian Nations, of different Languages. The Soil is barren, but feeds vast quantities of wild Beasts, and the River equally plenty of Fish; The Mountains near it have plenty of Gold, which occasioned the building this City, but they want Servants to work the Mines. The Cattle the Spaniards brought hither have encreased wonderfully, but the Indians that were Numerous then, are since waited to nothing, Laet p. 683. 8. Tucayo in the Valley so called; not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich sugar canes, for which some sugar-works or Ingenios are here lately built. 9. Truxillo, or Muestra Sennara de la Paz, 18 leagues on the South of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants hereof have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factory for the Sale of their Wares. 10. Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake it self; not else observable but for the Multitude of Tigers which do haunt about it.

This Country, discovered by Columbus, and named by Alonso de Ojeda, as before is said, was first pretended to, for Neighbourhood sake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagna. Afterwards John de Ampuez, by order from the Council resident at Domingo in Hispaniola, was employed in the Discovery of it, Anno 1527. But Charles the Fifth, having taken up great sums of money of the Vesperi, a wealthy Family of Augsburg, pawned this Country to them, by whom Ambrosius Alfinger was sent with 400 Foot, and 80 Horse to take possession. But he and his successors in that Employment not minding so much the Conquest as the spoil of the Country, the Council of Domingo undertook the business once again; and in the year 1545 sent over one John de Caravayal, who treading in the steps of the Germans, or rather out-going them in all sorts of rapine, was outed on a second Order by one John Perez de Tolosa, by whom the Province was reduced into some good order. In the year 1550. the Negroes, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africa, began to mutiny; but their design was discovered, and themselves all slain, Peace and contentment following after all these Troubles, the Country was in little time so thoroughly Planted, and the Natives so encouraged in their several Tribes, that notwithstanding the destructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, here were reckoned not long since above 100000 of the Savages; not numbring those above 50, or under 18 years of age; who, by an order of the Council of Spain for these parts of America, are exempt from Taxes.

3. MARGARITA is an Island situate over against the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana, from the main Land, whereof it is distant above seven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the first discovery, which the Latinists call Margaritas, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it signifie no other than the vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were also store of those of the greater estimate, such as the Romans by the figure of Antiphrasis called Uniones, because they always grew in couples. Nulli duo reperiuntur indistricti, saith Pliny; unde nomen Unionum scilicet Romanæ imposuere delicæ.

The Isle is affirmed to be 16 Leagues in length, and six in breadth, situate under the 11 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Well stored with Pearls upon the Shores, when first discovered; but even then, when most plentifully stored with that Commodity, she had not water of her own to quench her thirst, compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwise plentiful enough both of Maize and Fruits. The people obsequiously servile to their Lords the Spaniards, so long accustomed unto Bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of most importance in it, 1. Monpater, in the East Corner of the Island; a Fort of the Spaniards, built for securing their rich Trade of Pearl-fishing, and to defend their Ships, which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Burrough, and the House of the Governour. 2. El valle de Santa Lucia, two leagues from the Sea, a Spanish Colony. 3. Makamar, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Island, first discovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, Anno 1498. grew suddenly into great esteem, by reason of the rich Pearl-fishing which they found on the Shores thereof. And in regard the Natives were so ready to betray their Treasures, (of which themselves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more Liberties from the King, than the rest of the Savages. Inasmuch that the Spaniards either could not, or would not compel them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negro Slaves from Guiana and the Coast of Africa, whom they enforced with great Torments to dive into the bottom of the Sea, many times seven or eight fathom deep, to bring up the shells in which that Treasure was included: where many of them were drowned, and some maimed with Sharks and other Fishes. But that rich Trade is much diminished of late, it is said not quite. The cause thereof to be imputed to the insatiable Avarice of the Spaniards so greedy upon Pearl, that they destroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatsoever they could meet with, for a little present profit, lost the hopes of the future. The Island is since less famous, and not much frequented. Visited to its cost in the year 1601. by the English under Captain Parker, who received here 500 l. in Pearls for the ransom of Prisoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coast of Angola, laden with 370 Negroes to be sold for Slaves. Mr. Gage saith, it wants Corn, Grass, Trees, and Water; but the great abundance of Pearl and other Jewels, make amends for all these wants; there is also many rich Merchants, who have 30, 40, or 50 Negro Slaves to fish for Pearls; but then he says, that he has known at sometimes a Tun of Wine given for a Tun of Water, which shews either that they have no River, or sometimes died p. 174. This Gentleman was at Carthage in 1637. and might easily inform himself of the state of this Island. This Island saith Laet (p. 667) lies in length fifteen Leagues, in breadth six and seven from the Continent of America, is from Trinidad 20 to the West. The middle of the Island is eleven Degrees from the Line. It has no Potable Waters, but what is brought from the Continent, but very fruitful in Maize, Pasturage, and Fruit Trees. The Hollanders however report it to be unfruitful. The Pearl fishery also began to fail then, it being a very difficult and a dangerous Work for the Negroes to go down into five or six Fathom into the Water, to force the Oysters from the Rocks. In 1626. the Holland Admiral took the Principal Fort in this Island. The Natives are more numerous, and better used in this Island than in the other Spanish Conquest, because they willingly submitted to the Spaniards.

4. CUBAGNA is an Island lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Aroya upon the Continent; from the first distant but one League, from the other six; it fell in compass about three. Rich on the Shores by the abundance of Pearls which were found about them, but very beggerly on the land. Destitute both of Grass and Water, by consequence of Cattle also, except only Cornies, and but few of those. So that like many a Gallant, who spend all upon the Back, and nothing upon the Belly, she had her out side laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their bread and Water brought them out of other Countrys, and their Fruits too, if they desired to have any; here being very few Trees, and those most of Guaiacum. But so abundant in this treasure, that the Kings Filths for many years amounted to 15000 Ducats yearly out of this poor Island.

In this respect it was presently resorted to and possessed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony, which they call New Cadix, and grew in short time unto so great power, that they made themselves Masters of the Port

Port of Maracapana in Venezuela, one of the best upon those Seas. But in the year 1521. hearing that the Savages of Cumana had destroyed the Convents of Franciscans on the opposite shore, they cowardly forlook the Islands, and fled to Hispaniola. Sent back again by the Council there, under the Conduct of James de Castellon, by whom the Town was made more beautiful and strong then ever formerly. In greatest esteem as long as the Pearl-fishing did continue; now, with that decayed. Yet still the Island doth deserve some consideration, for a Fountain on the East part of it near unto the Sea continuing, though the Pearls be gone; which yieldeth a Bituminous substance like Oil, medicinable for Diseases, and is found two or three Leagues off floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of mankind, and more easily found, then the Pearls which sunk unto the bottom, and maintained our Pride. The Spaniards in 1521. built in it Norvo Cadiz; the Indians destroyed it, but it was rebuilt and flourished more after it than before, Laet. p. 669.

Four miles from hence, but appendent to it, lieth a little Island called Coche, 3 miles in compass, but so abundantly stored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one commodity, for some Months together, above a thousand pounds a month of our English money. First peopled upon that occasion, Anno 1529. but the occasion failing, the Plantation ended, the Isle being now unpeopled as not worth the looking after.

5. The LESSER ISLANDS of this Prefecture, or Provincial Government lie all along upon the Coast of Venezuela, from East to West. The Principal of which, 1. Tortuga, 12 or 14 miles on the West of Margarita: four miles in length, hardly one in breadth; but yielding such good store of Salt, that three or four Ships are laden with it every year. Well furnished with Goats and Guaicum, but not else considerable; except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks, and yielding a convenient Harbour for the use of Mariners. It is so seated, that in a clear day, both Margarita and the Continent of America may be seen; the greatest part especially to the East is Rocky and barren, by the Shore it has some Woods, but the Shores are Marshy and useles, Laet. p. 686. 2. Catelina, by the English called The Isle of Providence, as the former is by the name of Association; both which, being void of all Inhabitants and tame Beasts, were possessed by them about the year 1629, at such time as there was open War between England and Spain. After which, not being claimed by the Spaniards in making up the Peace ensuing, they were granted by King Charles, by his Letters Patent under the Great Seal of England, to certain Noblemen and Gentlemen, and their Successors, who for the space of 20 years, or thereabouts, have enjoyed them quietly; the Islands being planted by them with their several Colonies, and all things necessary to maintain and enrich the same. This Island is seated on the South of Jamaica, 130 Leagues South West of Cape Falcon, 60 from Panama to the North. It is not now reckoned amongst our Plantations, the Inhabitants being probably removed to Jamaica for more safety. The Buccaniers hereupon took possession of it, and built a very large Town, peopled with a lawless sort of Men, of all gatherings, who grew in a short time very rich, but none of them taking any care to fortify the Place, or furnish it with Arms or Ammunition; The Spanish Fleet surprizing the Town, put all the Inhabitants to the Sword, and burnt it to the Ground, the Crown of England not regarding it. The Town was however rebuilt and in a thriving condition, when in 1692. the French the second time destroyed it. This sheweth a necessity of Government, for the Preservation of Mankind, which how rich soever, would soon perish for want of some to take care of the Publick defence and safety, which private men are neither able nor willing to do. The Right of it having been so long in the Crown of England, it seems worthy of more regard by reason of its situation; And might easily be made a staple or Port, for the furnishing the Spaniards with Negroes. 3. Bonaire, opposite to the Bay of Golfo triste, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; well furnished with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattle brought out of Spain, and peopled with some Savages out of Hispaniola, whom the Spaniards Christened, and sent thither some Spaniards with their Governour intermixt amongst them. The Island 16 miles in compass; not fruitful naturally, but in Trees, which are great and numerous. The Shores of this Island are rugged, and the Land high, and the Sea to the South West so deep, that they tie the Ships to the Trees for want of Anchorage. It was taken from the Dutch by the Buccaniers in 1686, it lyes on the Eastern Shore of America, in 12 degrees of Latitude. 4. Curacaos, nine miles on the West of Bonaire, and as many in compass; of a more fertile soil by far, and of very rich Pastures. The people are given to Grazing, make good store of Cheese, transporting it thence to other places; the Island having toward the North a convenient Harbour. 5. Aruba, on the North-East of Curacaos, from which nine miles distant, in compass not above five miles, for the most part level. One Hill it hath (amongst some others) fashioned like a Sugar-loaf, Inhabited by few Savages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Islands on this Coast, as 1. the Tostigos, lying Eastward of Margarita, 2. Blanca, which lyes twelve Degrees from the Line to the North as others say, 48. 40. Leagues from Granada to the South-West. In compass six German miles, the West side Campagne, the East Woody and full of sweet shrubs, under the greater Trees. The Soil is barren and Rocky, and destitute of Water, excepting Rain. The Woods filled with Thorny plants, yet the Plains are covered with a Grass Knee deep, on which the Goats thrive so well, that they are encreased to thousands. There live neither Spaniards nor Indians upon it, but the former go to hunt the Goats, and the Hollanders for that and Salt, Laet. p. 686. 3. Orquilla, This Island lyes in the Gulf of Mexico, 15 Leagues from Tortuga to the North-West, and 19 from La Blanca to the South-west Latitude 11. 15. others 11 30. and some 11. 50. The middle the truest; it is divided by the Waves of the Sea into several parts the most of it is plain. But it has some Mountains to the North-east Angle of it. The Sea so deep on the South, that a great Ship may lay her sides to the Shores, but on the North and East are the most Trees. It has Fountains of fresh Water, but no Birds, Beasts, or Men to inhabit it, Laet. p. 687. 4. Rocca, This Island lyes six Leagues from Orquilla to the Southwest, 12. 04 Latitude. The name imports rather a knot of Rocks than an Island, yet clothed with Trees five Leagues from East to West, in breadth three. The Continent of America is not easily seen from it, to the North it has a small Island, which is a very high Mountain, so white, that it is seen at a great distance. The south side of it has so deep a Sea, that no bottom can be found. It has neither Birds nor Beasts, the soil being rocky, and for the most part level with the Sea, Laet. p. 687. and 5. the Isle des Aves, or of Birds, interposed betwixt Tortuga and Bonaire, some of them rather Rocks than Islands, few stored with any living Creature for the use of Men, and none of them at all with men to manure and dress them. I pass over here, and so proceed from these Islands of the Province of Paria, to those which are subordinate to the Council of St. Domingo, and make a Province of themselves. But first we must go back, and bring up some of the Islands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And so much of P A R I A

Of the American Islands:

And first of those which are in

MARE del ZUR.

THE AMERICAN ISLANDS scattered up and down the Shores of this New World, are commonly divided into those of Mare del Zur, or the Pacifick Ocean, and those of the Atlantick, or Mare del Noort. The first so called by Magellanus, the first Discoverer, who passing through those troublesome and tempestuous Streights, which now bear his name, found such a change upon his coming into the main that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur, (quod à tranquillitate vocavit Mare del Sur, saith the Author of the Atlas Minor) from the calm and peaceable temper of it; by the Latines called Mare Pacificum, in the same regard: Called also the Southern Ocean, because of its situation on the South-side of America, in reference to some part of the Gulf of Mexico, and the Streights of Anian.

Not known unto the Spaniards till discovered by Nonnus Vajquez de Balboa, conducted hither by one of the Caciques or petty Kings of the Country about Nombre de Dios; who seeing the Spaniards so greedy after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirst should be satisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the opposite shore; this Balboa being the chief man in that Adventure: who discovering farther on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the rest that followed, to the Golden Treasure of Peru. He was executed notwithstanding this good service, by D. n Pedro de Arila, within a short time after. But the more full discovery of it is to be ascribed unto Magellanus, and some latter Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly, as long as the Southern Sea was unknown to any but themselves, they conveyed their Gold and Treasures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without loss or charge, and thought their Ports upon that Shore to be unaccessible: But after the way unto this sea was found out by Magellanus, Drake, Cavendish, and the rest of our English Adventurers, did so scour these Coasts, that they left them neither Port nor ship which they did not ransack; as hath been evidenced before in some particulars.

As for the Islands of this sea, they lie most of them so near the Shores, as if placed there by Nature, to serve as Outworks to defend the Continent. Many in tale, but few of consideration; and of those few, some of the chief have been described already in their proper places, as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The residue, which lie too far off to come under such consideration, must be mentioned here; and those reduced to these two Heads, 1. Los Ladrones, 2. The Islands of John Fernandes.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Islands situate betwixt the main land of America and the Philippine Islands, in the Longitude of 185. and the 4. Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus, who first discovered them, because of the Thievishness of the Inhabitants, (Insulae Latronum is their name in Latine) who had stolen his Cock-boat, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue still both their name and nature. Found first by Cavendish and Noort in their several Voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron (a commodity which they highly prize) but either closely or openly stealing whatsoever they met with. The People tall of stature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulency; extremely active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the Water, as if alike fitted to both Elements; inasmuch that the Hollanders then with Noort, to make trial of it, cast five pieces of Iron into the sea, all fetched out by one of them. The Women as good at it as the Men. Both Sexes given to filthy and promiscuous Lusts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their Incontinency, the Pox having eating up both their Lips and their Noles.

Their Religion is worshipping the Devil, whose Images they have in Wood on the head of their Boats; the Chapple and the Saints fit for such Devotions. But for the nature of these Islands, and what subjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to seek. But like enough they yield as little as some others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authors to be parts of America.

2. The Islands of John Fernandes are two in number. So called from John Fernandes, the first Discoverer, Anno 1574; each of five or six miles in compass, and about 300 miles distant from the shores of Chile. Situate in the 33 Degree of Southern Latitude; rocky and barren, but well wooded, and those woods replenished with Goats, but their flesh not savoury as in other places. Some store of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms no scarcity. Plenty of Fish upon the shores, for which cause visited sometimes by the Spaniards lying in Peru; and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for shipping, which makes them not neglected by other Nations as they pass this way. None else of note in all this sea, but such as lie upon the Shores of their several Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore passing through the Streights, and coming up unto the Islands of Paria, where before we left, we will now look on those of Mare del Noort, or that part of the Atlantick which washeth the Shores of this New World (the reason of which Names we have seen before) subordinate to the Council or Government of S. Domingo. viz. 1. the Caribes, 2. Porto Rico, 3. Hispaniola, 4. Cuba. and 5. Jamaica. The rest are already spoken of in their proper places.

1. The CARIBES.

THE CARIBES, or Cannibal Islands, are in number many; 27 of them known by their proper names, the rest of less note, (tho some of these of little enough) not yet so distinguished. Called thus in general, because inhabited by Cannibals, and man-eating people (at their discovery) as the word Caribes imports. They lie extended like a Bow from the Coast of Paria unto the Isle of Rico Porto: of different temper, as must needs be in such variety, and therefore not within the compass of a general Character. Some of the principal we shall consider more distinctly; and for the rest, it is enough to name them, or else we will pass them by.

1. GRANADA, the nearest of this crew to the Main Land

O o o o o

Land of Cumana, is situate in the Latitude of 12 Degrees and 11 Minutes, in form like a Crescent or a half Moon, the two horns not a mile asunder, the whole length but six, shaded all over with thick woods, but notwithstanding of a rich and fruitful soil. A Haven in it of good use, but no Town of note. The people of the same ill condition with the other Savages, but more wit to hide it; most mischievously intended when they seem most kind, and then most to be avoided.

2. S. VINCENT, 18 miles on the North of Granada, is of so blessed a soil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugar-canes, without charge to the Husbandman; watered with many pleasant Rivers, and full of safe and convenient Bays for the use of Mariners. In figure Circular: the Diameter being six miles over; the circle by consequence 18. the people but of mean stature, slothful, and studious only for the Belly: their love to which, makes them adventure in their small boats, hewn out of the body of a tree, to pass into the Continent, and return again without the help of a Compass, tho distant from it, at the nearest, above 30 miles. Its Latitude 16. 00. 24 miles long, 18 broad. It has many Mountains with fruitful Valleys between them, well watered with Rivers, and blessed with several convenient Harbours and Bays for Ships. The English have some Settlement upon it, but the Caribbeans are the more powerful, who have in it fair pleasant Villages, in which they dwell without the least Disturbance; and though they are jealous of our Ships, yet they Trade freely with them for Iron Wares. the English employ themselves in making Sugars.

3. BARBADOS, on the North-east of St. Vincent, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees and 20 Minutes, of an Oval form, 18 miles in compass. The soil in the like that of England, but far more fruitful. On the East thrusting out it self with Points and Angles, which yields some Bays, but full of Quick sands, and unsafe for shipping; on the South furnished with a large and commodious Harbour. Not very well provided of Fruits or Cattle, till made a Colony of the English, who brought hither from their own Country Swine and Kine, Oranges and the like from others. The chief Commodity hitherto made of this Plantation comes by the planting of Tobacco, and by a kind of coarse Sugar called Barbados Sugar, which must be quickly spent, or it will melt to nothing. Were they in stock and not forced to make a quick return of their commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation is said to be worth all the rest which are made by the English, who (as I take it) are the sole Colony in the Island; but at the courtesie of the Spaniards, without whole leave and liking not of force to hold it. This might be the state of it in 1648. but is not so now. The English said to inhabit here are above 50000, besides the Negroes. The first discovery of this Island to the English was by Sir William Curteen, in the Reign of James the first, but it was then wholly Desolate. In 1627. the English planted it, but driven at first to great extremities, because Ships came very rarely and slowly thither from England; afterwards its Reputation and Wealth encreased, by raising Tobacco, Indico, Cotton Wool, Tuftick-Wood, and Sugar Trade. And this Colony which for a long time subsisted by the Courtesie or negligence of the Spaniards, grew so strong and numerous, that all their after Attempts signified nothing. Their Sugars which were at first coarse, and would quickly melt, if not spent, are now improved to a great perfection. This Island is not well watered, with Rivers or fresh Springs, yet lying low, they want not that Element, being supplied by Pools, Ponds, and Cisterns. It is very fruitful, and enjoys a perpetual Summer; Hot but cooled by the Breizes of wind which rise with the Sun, and blow fresher as the Sun gets higher. The chief Town of this Island is Saint Michaels, situate at the bottom of Carlyle Bay, in the Southern part of the Island; where Ships have a very secure Harbour. In the year 1690. on the fifth of April an Earthquake happened in these Islands, which did great mischief in Nevis, Antego, Montserrat, Martinoque. The stone buildings and Brick being generally cast down and destroyed. It was felt in the Barbadoes, but no manner of hurt done to Men or Beasts. The Sloops passing at Sea between S. Lucia and Martinico felt it at Sea, the Agitation of the Water being so violent, that they thought themselves on Rocks or Shelves, their Vessels shaking as if they would fall in pieces. Others passing by an uninhabited Rock or Island, called Redunda, found the Earthquake so violent there, that a great part of that Rocky Island split and tumbled into the Sea, making a Noise like many Cannons, and a Cloud of Dust ascending into the Air at the fall. By this it appears all the Carribbe Islands are united by subterraneous Vaults to each others, and it is probable, they were at first one Chain of Mountains, drowned some Ages since by the Ocean, when only these higher parts escaped.

4. MANTININO MARTINIQUO, on the North-west of the Barbados, by the Savages called Mandanimam, with little difference. Every where swelled with Hills of which three are most eminent for height; one of them, which way soever a man looks upon it, carrying the resemblance of an Hat. Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr the Historian, with none but women; afterward with a more fierce and barbarous people than the rest of these Islands: but neither men or women to be seen of late: whether destroyed, or removed farther from the shores, for fear of their destruction, is a thing uncertain. Martiniquo has for a considerable time been a French Plantation, well inhabited and improved; but it is said the French are now driven out by the English, which time must discover.

5. DOMINICA, seated on the North of Mantinino 12 leagues in length; exceeding fruitful of Tobacco, which they sell unto the Europeans for Hatchets, Knives, and other instruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of hot water, and a commodious Haven at the West-side of it, into which falleth a River 20 paces broad. The people as barbarous as ever, Cannibals or Man eaters to this very day. At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, and to no man trusty, but where they cannot hurt, or dare not. Both Sexes wear their hair long, and colour their bodies over with Oaker. Yet bloody and barbarous, though they be, they are Ruled by a King of their own, distinguished from the rest in his dress or habit, whom they most readily obey. Dominica, This Island was discovered first by the Spaniards on a Sunday, and thence so called. It lies in Longitude 32. Latitude 14. 35. North-west of Barbados. The English lay the Latitude 15. 30 and 12 Leagues long, eight broad. It has a convenient Harbour on the West, the middle is Mountainous; the English have now planted it with Tobacco in part, but the Caribbeans being mixed with them, the Colony doth not thrive as it might do otherwise.

6. DESEADA, or the Land of Desire, on the North-east of Dominica, discovered by Columbus in his second Voyage, naked of Trees, and at the first sight afar off, not unlike a Galley. Of great use to the Spaniards, who always take it in their way to the Canaries to these parts of America, and back again at their return.

The like use do they make of 7. The Island of GUARDALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Westward: at which the Fleets which come from Spain use to take fresh water, and there disperse themselves to their several Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in most parts of the sea adjoining. North-east from hence lieth GUARDALUPE is now at least in part peopled by the French, who are better thought of, and more kindly used by the Caribbeans than the English.

8. S. Marin del Antigua, commonly called ANTIGUA only, and by some mistakingly ANTEGO. Seven leagues in length, and as many in breadth, difficult of access, and destitute of fresh water; but well replenished with Woods and and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colony of the English, who do still possess it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHERS, on the North-west of Guadalupe, in the Latitude of 17 Degrees and 20 Minutes. The length six miles, the breadth in many places four, and in some but two; much swell'd with Hills, and towards the East provided of several Salt wiches. The French and English had sometime in it several Colonies, by whom the Natives were destroyed, or otherwise compelled to forsake their dwellings; convict, as was pretended, of some manifest Treacheries. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the sole possession; ejected by Fredrick de Toledo, as he passed this way with his Navy; though suffered to return to their former dwellings, as rather profitable than dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief Employment and commodity lies in their Tobacco, by some much commended. This Island is 75 miles in Circuit, and planted by French and English, Desnambuck for the French, and Sir Thomas Warner for the English, taking possession of this Island, the same day, in the year 1625, being done by Mutual agreement of the two Nations. In 1629. Don Frederick de Toledo, had orders from the Spaniards to force the English and French out of the Island, with a Navy of 24 great Ships. The French were forced to retire for a time, the English eluded the storm, by an accommodation; and the French returning soon after resettled here. The English being constantly and plentifully supplied from London, are in the better condition, but the French were a long time too much neglected by their Country Men; and this contributed very much to the forcing them then to submit to the hard Usage of the Spaniards. The English are more in number than the French; but then the French to counterbalance this have four Forts, and the English but two, one of which commands the great Haven, and the other a descent not far from Point de Sable; and to prevent differences between the two Nations, each of 'em have a Guard upon the Frontiers of their Divisions, which is renewed every day. It is one of the most delightful Islands in the World, swelling in the midst into high Mountains, which afford upon the descents several Stages, which are planted one above the other, the higher enjoying the pleasure of the prospect of the lower, which are all made more lovely by Rows of Trees always Green, and fair Houses covered with glazed Slate. The soile is Light and landy, and is apt to produce all sorts of Fruits, as Sugar, Tobacco, Cotton, and Ginger; and wants not Springs and some hot waters fit for natural Baths. Christopher Columbus first discovered this Island, and called it by his own Christian name, to preserve the memory of it. The English have so encreased here, that they have sent Colonies from thence to Barbados, Monserat, Antego, and Barbadoes. The French have built a Town of good bigness call le Basse Terre, the Houses of it are Bricks, Freestone, and Timber, which is well Inhabited by Tradersmen and Merchants. In 1692. the French were beaten out, and the Island reduced intirely under the English. Joyning hereto, or but a league from it at the most, is,

10. The Isle of NEVIS, which is affirmed to be five leagues in compass, well wooded, and as pleasantly watered; insomuch as the Inhabitants of the Isle of Dominica used to come hither for their pleasures but for hunting chiefly. Now famed for some Baths or Hot-waters, found out by the English, who, in the year 1628. placed a Colony in it. But whether subsisting of itself, or a part of their Plantation in S. Christophers, I am yet to learn.

Nevis, this Island lies in 17. 19 North Latitude, and is 18 miles in compass, in the midst of it it has one high Mountain, but of easy Ascent, and covered with Trees to the top. In 1628. the English planted here, and in 1680. they were thought 4000 Men, and traded in Sugar, Cotton, Ginger, and Tobacco &c. It has three Churches for the Service of God, and a strong Fort for their security. The Soile is indifferent fruitful, and feedeth plenty of Deer, and Game for Hunting. In the year 1689. this Island sent out Sir Timothy Thornhill with 500 Men, who burnt the French Islands of S. Bartholemew, St. Martins, Mary Gallanta; in this Expedition they took 700 Prisoners, besides Negroes, and plundered to the value of 80000 Pounds. Then they had 1200 Men well armed, and their Fort lines and Breast Works in so good order, that they did not fear any attempt of the French. It has Barbados to the West, S. Christophers to the North, and Antego to the South-east. On Sunday the sixth of April 1690. about five in the Evening, there was for some few Minutes heard a strange hollow noise, which was thought to proceed from the great Mountain in the middle of this Island, to the admiration of all People; but immediately after, to their greater Amazement, began a mighty Earthquake with that violence, that almost all the Brick and stone Buildings in Charles Town (the principal City) were in an instant levelled with the Ground, and the Timber Houses were shook, so that every one made what halt they could to get out of them. In the Streets the Ground in several places clove a foot asunder, and hot stinking water Spouted out of the Earth a great height, the Sea left the Land about three quarters of a Mile, so that large Fish lay bare upon the Sand, but the water presently returned again. There were several lesser retreats of the Ocean followed this. The Earth in many places broke open, and some thousand of great Trees fell into it, which were seen no more. It was very fierce in St. Christophers, Antego and Monserat, and Barbados had a feeling of it. Between this and the 30th of that Month there were several Smaller Earthquakes. This shewes that there is a Communication under the Water between all the Carribbe Islands, which seem at first to be a Ridge of Mountains, surrounded since by the Ocean, and so turned into Islands, So that Earthquakes will often happen.

11. SANCTA CRUX by the Inhabitants called Ayay, on the North west of S. Christophers, and the South east of Porto Rico, from which last distant 15 Leagues Woody and Mountainous, not well provided of fresh waters; but on the west-side furnished with a safe and commodious Road, under the covert of the Mountains. Amongst their fruits are some that resemble a green Apple, which tasted, so inflames the Tongue, that for 24 hours it swellerh in so great extremity, as makes it altogether useless; but after that by little and little it abates again. The like happeneth also to the Face, if washed before Sun rising with clear Fens-waters, which are very frequent in this Island; after the rising of the Sun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colony of the English also, but of latter standing than those of S. Christophers and Barbados. This was either a misinformation, or that Colony is since cut off, or withdrawn to some other place, for there is now no Plantation of English on that Island.

Some of the principal of the rest are. 1. Anguilla 2. Barbada, 3. S. Bartholemews. 4. S. Lucies, 5. S. Martins, 6. Monserat, 7. Rotunda, 8. Saba, 9. Virgogorda, and 10. Sumbrero; of which we have little but the names: Of which Anguilla, so called from its shape, stands in the Latitude 18 21 in length 10 Leagues, in Breadth three. Inhabited by about 300 English, and live mostly by Tobacco. 2. Barbada is 15 Miles long, possessed by the English, and though very fertile, yet of no great account; being too much Exposed to the incursions of the Caribbeans of Dominica, who kill and destroy all they can Catch, and carry away the Women and the Children, together with the spoile and plunder. No nation but the English would bare this so long, when one Summer well followed with Doggs and Men, would in fair probability Destroy all the Caribbeans, in any one of these Islands. 3. Monserat is ten miles long, and 9 broad, stands in the 17 degree of Northern Latitude, mostly Mountainous, but the valleys are very fruitful, chiefly inhabited by Irish, but with a mixture of some English, in all about 700. S. Martins, S. Bartholemews, and Mary Gallanta, were all hitherto possessed by the French, but have been Plundered and ruined by the English in this War. The rest are either desolate, or possessed by the Caribbeans which is full as bad; the rest, though known by several names, are not worth the naming. Only we are to add concerning the whole Nations of Caribes, once here inhabiting, that they did usually hunt for men, as men for Beasts, roving as far as Porto Rico, to seek after their prey; and what they caught was lured to go to the pot, in the worst sense too. Columbus, when he was at the Isle of Guadalupe, found 30 Captive Children which were reserved to be eaten, and in their houses divers Vessels filled with Man's flesh, and some upon the Spit ready to be roasted. Nor had they laid aside this Diet till after the year 1564 but how long I know not: For at that time a Spanish ship coming to water at the Isle of Dominica, they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the Land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Islands have been of late times well cleared of those Monsters; some of them brought unto better order, but the most destroyed as the common enemies of Mankind; the Islands where they dwelt being either totally deserted, or taken up by Europeans, and their several Colonies.

The severe revenges the English, French and Spaniards, have taken of them for this Barbarity, have in some degree cured it, so that they pretend not to eat any of the Europeans when they have slain them, but it is to be feared they eat the Women and Children they carry away. They pretend in excuse the Devil forced them to this course, which is a good reason they should be either necessitated to leave it or be extirpated from off the face of the Earth; at least all the Men and Women to the Children of tender years, who may be better educated in Servitude. Some pretend this is not possible, by reason of the difficulty of entering their Country, but fire or Sword will pierce thro' all, and their poisoned Arrows, are small defence against our Cannon and Muskets. Their rage is so great against the English, that nothing will appease them, and therefore we ought to pursue them till they submit and yield to mercy, which might be done in a short time, if it were well followed.

2. PORTO RICO and MONICO.

PORTO RICO lieth on the North-west of Sancta Crux, from which it is distant about 15 Leagues, and near upon as many from Hispaniola; 136 Leagues from the main Land of Peria, and not much less from the Cape of Coguibocco in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Castella Aurea. It took this name from the chief Town and Haven of it, but was called by Columbus at the first Discovery S. Jobannis Insula, or the Isle of S. John, by the Natives Boriquen.

It is situate under the 18 and 19 Degrees of Northern Latitude, in form quadrangular, but of a greater length than breadth, such as the Geometricians call oblongam: the length hereof being 30 Leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Air hereof is very pleasant and temperate, not scorched with furious Heat in Summer, nor made offensive by the fall of continual Rains; exposed sometimes (chiefly in August and September) to the troublesome of sudden tempests, called Hurricanes. The soil is indifferently fruitful, though somewhat Mountainous: here being (besides other Hills of inferior note) a Ridge of high Hills which run cross the Country, from the one end unto the other. Their chief Commodities are Sugar-canes, Ginger, Cassia, and great store of Hides: the Europeans Cattle having so abundantly increased, that they kill thousands for their Skins, leaving the flesh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and Silver, but consumed long since. And so are all the Natives also; of whom, in respect, it is impertinent to give any Character.

Chief Rivers of the Island, 1. Cairobon, 2. Boyaman; of divers Fountains, and of several and divided Courses. 3. Luyfa, and 4. Toa; two Rivers growing out of one, The Spring of that one is in the Mountains of Guayamo, whence running Northwards in one Channel 16 Leagues together, it afterwards divides it self into those two streams. 5. Guiano, 6. Arezibò, 7. Guadiabo, of lesser note; but all of them, as well as all the rest before, concluding in some safe and capacious Haven.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Porto Rico, the chief Town, built in a little Island, on the North-side of the greater, but joined unto it with huge Piles at vast expences, by the command of Philip the first, Anno 1504. well built, with large Streets and convenient Houses, according to the Model of the Cities of Spain, and beautified with a fair Cathedral; the Bishop one of the Suffragans of the Archbishop of S. Domingo in Hispaniola. The Town unwall'd, but fortified with two strong Castles; the one of which secures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loss of 40 or 50 men, by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpose to have peopled it with an English Colony. The History of this Expedition is thus delivered to us, by our Great Annalist George Clifford Earl of Cumberland, who his year put out a Fleet of 11 Ships, at his own Charges, with which he prevented the sending a Fleet to the East Indies, or receiving One from the West; he took Lancerata in the Canaries, and then passing on, took this Port, though it had a Garrison of 400 Soldiers, besides Inhabitants to defend it. Observing that the Spaniards looked upon it, as one of the Keys to the Indies he resolved to keep it, and refused a good ransom which was profered him for the Town. But finding his Men dye very fast, the Air not agreeing with them, he was forced to return home. Discouraged from it by the death of 400 of his Men, by change of Air, and some intemperance of Diet, he set sail for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Island but the dismanning it of 70 pieces of Ordnance, and some part of their Treasure, which he brought home with him. Which was taken by the Hollanders in 1625. when they burnt the City, but could never take the Castle. This Island lies eight Leagues from Hispaniola to the East. 2. S. Germans, in the Western part of the Island but four Leagues from the Sea; once the chief of the Island, now both unfortified and small. 3. Arezibo, on the River so called. 4. Luyasa, the most noted Port of the Eastern parts, situate on the mouth of the River so named.

Eastward hereof, betwixt it and Hispaniola, lies the Island of Mona (might not this, think we, be so called by Modoc ap Owen Gwynedd, of whom before?) three leagues in compass; Rocky, and of a brackish Earth, but fit for the production of Limons, Oranges, and such kind of Fruit, which are here in plenty. Not far off but more towards the West, Monico, or Monetta, as our English call it; where they found such infinite store of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as Hail, and made them almost deaf with the very noise; their Eggs so thick upon the ground that they loaded two Boats with them in three hours, and could hardly pass forwards without treading on them.

But to return to Porto Rico, or the Island of S. Johns, it was touched upon by Columbus in his second Voyage, Anno 1493. but first inhabited by John Ponce of Leon, Anno 1510. who being courteously entertained by Aiguabana, the chief Prince thereof, planted a Colony of Spaniards in the North part of the Island, which he called Capparra. The Colony ten years after that removed to Guayama, and from thence to S. Germans: carrying with it the repute of the chief Town of all the Island upon every remove, till the building of Porto Rico, where it since hath fixed. The Island very populous for the bigness of it when the Spaniards came to it: but the Natives were long ago consumed by several Butcheries; and, as some write, not above 1500 Spaniards are in all the Country. What else concerns the Story of it, we have seen before.

2. HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA lieth on the West of Porto Rico, the distance we have seen already. By the Inhabitants called Haity, and by some Quiquoa; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hispaniola, or Little Spain, and of late times beginneth to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it. The

The form thereof is Triangular, extended in a sharp Angle, called Cabo del Enganno, towards Porto Rico; the Western end fashioned like a Bay or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas, the Southern Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150 Leagues, the breadth in some places 60, in some but 30, thence growing less and less, till it come unto the Eastern Angle; the whole compass estimated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18 and 20 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infested with Morning heats; but cooler in the afternoon, by the constant blowing of a Sea-Gale, which they there commonly call Virfon.

The Country is for the most part beautiful and flourishing; the Trees always in their Summer livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual spring. In many places well'd with high Craggy Mountains whence the name of Huty, that word so signifying in the natural Language of the Natives. Of such an excellent Herbage; that the Cattle brought hither out of Spain, have increased almost beyond Arithmetick; grown wild for want of proper owners, and hunted unto death like the Stags of the Forrest, though only to rob them of their skins. The soile so fertile, that in the space of 16 days, Herbs and Roots will grow ripe and fit to be eaten.

So plentifully stored with Cigge and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587 there were shipped hence 17500 pound weight of Ginger, and 900 Chells of refined Sugar: an evident argument of the richness and fertility of it. A farther proof hereof may be. 1. The rich Mines of Gold, in which they used to find Gold without mixture of dross or other Metal. 2. The great increase of Sugar, one Cane here filling 20. sometimes 30 measures. 3. The wonderful yield of Corn, amounting in some places to an hundredfold. But the Mines were long ago exhausted, inasmuch as the Inhabitants are fain to use brass money: but instead of those of Gold, they have found out others of Brass and Iron, and some few of Silver; but not much feared into use for want of Workmen.

The reason of that want is to be ascribed unto the Cruelty and cruelty of the Spanish Nation: who, out of an insatiable thirst for Gold, consumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirst for Blood, killed so many of them, that in few years they destroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably supposed, that had not Charles the Fifth restrained them by a penal Edict, from compelling the Natives against their wills to those works of servitude, there had not been one Native left in this Island, nor in any other part of their Plantations. Such as are left are said to be of a low stature, of black hair, and a Complexion somewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in Manners, Habit, or Religion, from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of most note are, 1. Ozama, on whose Banks stands Domingo the chief Town of the Islands, capable of the greatest ships to the very Wharf. 2. Nigua which passing through the rich Pastures, or making the Pastures rich by its secret virtue, runneth towards the West: as do also, 3. Yaquimo, 4. Nizao, and 5. Neyba, 6. Hayna, of a contrary course to the other three. 7. Yagu, or Jacho, which fall into the Northern seas. 8. Nicayagu, 9. Cocitemico, 10. Xanique. These three last famous heretofore for their lands of Gold. Some speak of 30000 Brooks and Rivers which are found in this Country; two parts of which vast number had their Golden sands. A thing so far beyond the charity of the strongest Faith, (though reported by a Grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-course, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The whole divided when the Spaniards first came amongst them into several Provinces or Kingdoms: as 1. Higuy, 2. Jacuagnia, Samana, in the Eastern parts; 4. Yaquimo, 5. Boaruco, and 6. Xaragua, towards the South; and 7. Guababu, and 8. Cabaya, in the West; and in the North, 9. Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold, 10. Maricu, the Landing place of Columbus, and 11. Maguana in the Centre of the Island, the King when of in the time of Columbus was named Conabo, of greatest power of any of those petit Roylets. Another division of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all rising from one Mountain in the midst of the Island into four Divisions; 1. the River Jacho, running towards the North, 2. Nubiba, halting to the South. 3. Yana, or Jamaica, towards the East, and 4. Hatibonico, to the West. But these divisions being long since grown out of use, we will survey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us.

And they are, 1. S. Domingos, first built by Bartholomew Columbus, Anno 1494, on the East Bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1504) removed by Nicholas de Obando, then Governour of the Island, to the opposite shore. Upon occasion of an Earthquake that destroyed most of the Houses, but was not to the best advantage, it now wanting water, and being exposed to the Vapours of the Rivers at the Sun rising, which makes it less healthful. This City is situate in a pleasant Country, among Rich Pastures, and neighboured with a safe and capacious Haven: the houses elegantly built, most of them of stone, and the whole well walled; beside the Castle at the West end of the Peer to defend the Haven; enriched by the Residence of the Governour, the Courts of Justice, the See of an Archbishop, and (besides many Convents and Religious Houses) an Hospital endowed with 20000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Esteemed of greatest trade and concourse of Merchants, till the taking of Mexico and the discovery of Peru; since that time sensibly decaying, and now reduced unto the number of 600 Families of Spaniards; the greatest part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negroes, Mulattoes, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586. took it by force, and held it for the space of a month, burning the greatest part of the Houses, and suffering the rest to be redeemed at a certain price. The English General arrived here the first of January; 150 Spanish Horse endeavoured to have stopped his March, but being driven away by the small shot, he entered the Town with them; the Inhabitants at the same time running out at the North Gate, they found the City too big for them to pretend to Man, and therefore they took a part out, and cut it off from the rest. The Inhabitants would not redeem the City at first, but when a great part of it was burnt, then they were forced to pay 25000 Crowns to redeem the rest from Ruine. The rest of the Prey, the Cannon, Meal, and Sugar excepted, was worth very little; They found under the King of Spain's Arms, this inscription, Non Sufficit Orbis. The Money in common use was Brass, and the Utensils most of China, and but little of Plate. Camden very narrowly escaped the vassilage of the English, once more in the year 1655. under Pen and Venables, who landed an Army of about 20000 Men on the Island. The Spaniards forsok the Town, and the English had taken it without resistance, if they had not come on shore too far from it, but in this time the Enemy recollecting themselves, got into the Town and defended it so well, that the English were forced to leave the Island, after which they took Jamaica. 2. S. Salvador, 68 Leagues to the East of Domingo. 3. Jaguana, called also Santa Maria del Porto, from a safe and beautiful Haven adjoining to it; situate in the West part of the Island: of no great bigness, consisting of no more then 150 Houses when it was at the greatest; but made much less by Captain Newport, who, in the year 1591. burnt it to the ground. 4. Cotuy, in the North of the Island, opposite to Santa Domingo, from which it is distant almost sixty Leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great esteem for its Mines of Gold. 5. Conception de la Vega, the foundation of Christopher Columbus, for whole lake afterwards adorned with a See Episcopal. 6. Puerto de la Plata, 40 Leagues from Domingo on the Northern shore, there built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando before mentioned, by him also fortified, the second Town of Wealth and Trade in all the Island. 7. Azua, now called Compostella, a noted Haven, and resorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Island was first discovered by Columbus, (for I believe not that it was any of the Fortunate Islands, which we read of in the life of Sertorius) in the first Voyage which he made, conducted hither by some of the Inhabitants of the Isle of Cuba. Landing and gaining the good will of the Savages by gentle usage, he obtained leave of one of their Kings or Caciques, to build a Fortress in his Country, which he called Navidad or Natividad, leaving in it 36 Spaniards to keep possession: whom he found both murdered and murdered at his coming back. Being now better furnished for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Isabella, (in honour of Isabella Queen of Castile) near the Mines of Ciabo; which afterwards was deserted also, and the Colony removed unto S. Domingo: the Spaniards sending one Colony after another, till at last their number was increased to 14000. besides Women and Children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite cruelties, and exhausted the riches of their Country with as infinite Covetousness, they betook themselves to fresher Quarters, abandoning the Island to devour the Continent. Once the Islanders rebelled and fortified themselves in the Province of Baoruco; a place so naturally strong, that there was little need of the Helps of Art. Not brought to leave that Fastness but on such Conditions as made the Spaniard less insolent, and themselves less Slaves.

4. C U B A.

CUBA lieth on the West of Hispaniola, from which parted by a Frith, or narrow Channel, interposed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas, and that of Mexico, backed on the North with a Frie of Islands called the Lucayos, and some part of the Peninsula of Florida; extended towards the East to the extream point or Foreland of Jucatan, called Cape de Cotache, from which distant about 50 Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Isle of Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West, that is to say, from Cape Maxie towards Hispaniola, to the Cape of S. Anthony, 230 leagues; in breadth where broadest hardly 40, and but 15 in others. For the fertility of the soil contending with Hispaniola for the pre-eminence; but in the temperature of the Air a great deal before it. It being covered with woods of Cedar and other Trees, which makes it more easy for the Traveller, the shade abating the heat of the Sun. Liberally stored with Ginger, Cassia, Mastick, Aloes, Cinamon, and Sugar, (not reckoning such commodities as are common unto this with others) besides great plenty of Flesh and Fish, and of Fowl no scarcity. The Gold more droffie in the Mine than in Hispaniola, but the Brass more perfect. Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but those Mountains clad with divers Trees, some of which drop the purest Rosin, and the Hills sending to the Valleys many notable Rivers, that do all abound in Gold Sand, and in short, it wants nothing but Inhabitants, the Spaniards having left it for the Lucre of getting more Gold on the Continent. These Rivers are pestered with many sorts of Serpents, not so much out of any ill condition of the soil and air, as by an old superstition of the Savages, in former times not suffered to kill them when they might, (this being a Dish reserved for the higher powers) not able afterwards to destroy them, when it would have been suffered.

What other Savage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they should not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may add in memory of the first Inhabitants, that an old man of 80 years, one of the Caciques of the Island, addressed himself unto Columbus at his first coming hither, advising him to use his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the souls of men have two journies when they leave this world, the one foul and dark, prepared for the injurious and cruel person; the other delectable and pleasant, for the men of Peace. It is said also of them, they knew not the use of money, nor understood the niceties of Meum and Tuum; Tenants in common to the Blessings which the Earth brought forth, and Coheirs of Nature.

Amongst the Rarities of this Island, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy substance, which is found frequently on the Seas into which it falleth, excellent for the calking of ships. Secondly a navigable river (but the name not told us) the waters of which were so hot, that a man could not indure to hold his hand in them. They tell us also, thirdly, of a Vally 15 leagues from S. Jago, which produced stones exactly round, as if made for pleasure; but yet meerly natural. But these are no greater rarities than in other places, nor altogether so great as in Hispaniola. In which they tell us of a fair river whose waters are salt, and yet none but fresh streams fall into it. Of another Lake (three leagues in compais) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of these so strange or rare as the Cucayo, a kind of Scarabe or Beetle; the eyes and whings whereof, when opened, give so great a light in the darkest places, that a man may see to read and write by it, as well as by a Candle. This Island was infinitely peopled when the Spaniards discovered it; but they have destroyed all the Inhabitants, and not able yet to people it themselves, so that the greatest part of it is Desolate. This Hispaniola and Jamaica were the first places of America which Columbus discovered in the year 1492. There are six Cities in this Island, the principal S. Jago on the South side, and Havana a noble and well fortified Sea port on the North side, which is under the Tropic of Cancer.

Rivers of most note, 1. Cante, much annoyed with Crocodiles, (a Beast not common in these Islands, nor elsewhere in this) exceeding dangerous to such as repose themselves on the Banks of the River. 2. Arimao, which disburdeneth it self near the Port of Xagua. 3. Rio de Porcos, full of Rocks and Quick sands at the entrances of it. 4. Rio Escondida, passing betwixt Havana and the Port of Marcanas. 5. Marien, and 6. Tanne, of less note. Besides these there is Xagua, a safe Station and Road for Shipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and spacious when once entred; above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all sides from the Winds, that Ships lie here in safety without any Anchor. Some other Bays there be as useful though not so considerable. The Dutch traded safely to Cuba till the year 1606. when the Spaniards, after a severe Proclamation fell upon them with a Fleet, and a bloody fight ensued, in which the Spaniards prevailed, but not without great loss.

Towns of most consequence, 1. S. Jago, in the South part of the Island, situate about two Leagues from the Main, but in the bottom of a large and capacious Gulf, the most noted Port of all these Seas. Built by Don Diego de Velasquez, Anno 1514; afterward made a Bishop's See: beautified with a Cathedral, some Religious Houses: once not inferiour unto any for numbers of people; though now few enough, 2. Caracao, 30 Leagues on the East of S. Jago; the same foundation as the other, and neighboured by great quantities of Eben-wood. 3. S. Salvador, by some called Baymo, according to the old name of the Province in which it standeth; built by Velasco in the most pleasant and richest part of all the Island, but not so fitly as the other for Trade and Merchandise. S. Porto del Principe, an Haven-town in the North parts: not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchy or bituminous Liquor, spoken of before, which I conceive to be much of the same nature with the Fountains of Naphta in the East. 5. Trinidad another of Velasco's foundations, nine or ten Leagues Eastward of the Port of Xagua: once well frequented, but now now forsaken, and meer nothing. 6. Havana in the North parts, opposite to Florida, a noted and well traded Port; so strongly situate and fortified both by nature and Art, that it seems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Castles; a greater then either opposite to the mouth of the Haven; all so commodiously built and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and scatter the greatest Navy. Near one of them standeth an high Tower, from the top whereof, notice is given unto the Guards of every Ship that cometh within view of the Watchmen. The best assurance not only of this Island but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the most part with the Seat of the Governour, and the greatest Trade of all these Seas, the Ships which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Gulf carrying here for one another till all meet together, and setting sail from thence by the Streights of Bahama, amongst the Isles of the Lucaios. This is the Harbour to which all the Fleets from Spain direct their Course; here they unlade their European Merchandizes, and here again they take in Plate and other Riches of the Spanish West Indies, in order to their Transportation into Europe; so that it is one of the most frequented Ports in the West Indies. And whilst all this Wealth passeth too and fro through it, much must stick here, so that it is become very rich and populous, and the Spaniards to secure this Important place, have built a strong Castle, and settled here a Governour, and a good Garrison of Spaniards. It is able to receive and secure 1000 sail of Ships, the shore defending them against the Sea, and the Mountains from the winds, without any Anchors. It has about 300 families of Spaniards, and many Portugesse. The Neighbouring Woods affords it plenty of Timber for Ships, and Houses, but they have no Iron to turnish and finish them, but what is brought from Spain. The time of the building this City is not mentioned, but was after S. Jago, and grew up insensibly, as that decay'd. A Fleet went hence for the discovery of Florida in the year 1539. In the Year 1568. Chilton an English-man saith, it was the chief Port the Spaniards had then in the Indies. The entrance of the Harbour is so narrow, that two Ships can hardly come in together; Yet it is six fathom Deep in that narrow place. In his time it had but 300 Spanish Inhabitants, and 60 Soldiers, who lived in the Castle, that was then newly built. Hackluit. T. 3. p. 458. Yet after all this caution, the Buccaneers in our time surprized these Castles, and the Town, and could have kept it, if our King would have consented to it, to whom they sent for Protection.

This Island was one of the first which was discovered by Columbus: who having almost tired the Spaniards with the expectation, first fell upon the Island of Guabanani, one of the Lucaios, to which he gave the Name of S. Savours. From thence he sailed to Baracoa, on the North of this Island, which he caused to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholick King of Castile and Arragon, at whose charge, and the encouragement of Isabella his Heroick Queen, he pursued this enterprize. Landing, he asked the people if they knew Cipango, (by which name Paulus Venetus calls the Isle of Japan:) and they conceiving that he inquired after Cabao, (of great note for the richest Mines in Hispaniola) pointed towards Haity; some of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba was by this means laid aside, and all the thoughts of Spain bent unto Hispaniola, where they found many Golden Provocations to invite their stay; till hungering after more Gold, and some new Plantations, they passed over hither, and in few years, by the prudent conduct of Velasco, got such footing in it, and made that footing good by so many Colonies, that their Title and possession was beyond dispute, and so continues to this day.

5. JAMAICA.

JAMAICA lieth on the South of Cuba, from which it is distant 20 Leagues, and as much, or very little more from Hispaniola. Discovered in the second Voyage of Columbus, by whom named S. Jago; that name changed afterwards to Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West about 50 Leagues, and in breadth 20; the whole compais estimated at 150; the middle of it under the 18 Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich soil, abundantly provided of all things necessary; well stocked with Cattle, and no less plentifully stored with most sorts of Fruits, which either industry or Nature have supplied it with. Great store of cotton-wool, and such abundance of Juca (a Root whereof the Savages once made their Bread) that it is deemed the Granary of the neighbouring Island. And were it not dis-furnished of Convenient Ports, (which is all the want of it) it would be as much frequented by sea-faring men, as any other in those parts. Once very populous, now destitute of all the natural Inhabitants; this Island, and that of Porto Rico, losing in few years 60000 by the Spaniards Cruelties. Cruelties which not only raged upon the Men, but destroyed Posterity: the Women here and elsewhere, so abominating their sad condition, that they strangle their Children at the Birth, so that they might not live to serve such a Cruel Nation.

Chief Towns hereof, (for though it be well watered it hath no great Rivers,) 1. Sevilla, in the North part of the Island, beautified with a goodly Monastery; the Abbot whereof hath all Episcopal Jurisdiction, and is privileged to wear a Mitre: in nothing more ennobled, than that Peter Martyr the Historian (to whose Decads all succeeding Ages are beholden for the Chorography and History of these parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2. Millilla, a small Town; but memorable for the unfortunate Shipwreck of Columbus on the Shores adjoining. 3. Oristan, on the South of the Island, fourteen Leagues from Sevil. 4. De la Vega, now a Ruine only, once a Spanish Colony; and of great fame for giving the Title of Dukes to Christopher Columbus, and his Brother Bartholomew. Since whose time nothing happened prejudicial to the State of this Island, by the hands of any but the Spaniards, till conquered, but not held by Sir Anthony Sberly, Anno 1596. In 1638. One Jackson an English Man, with a Fleet of English Privateers, surprized and plundred S. Jago, and then left it to the Spaniards again. The time being come when the Spaniards were to pay for their ingratitude to Columbus, and their cruelty to the Natives (some millions of which they had barbarously murdered) the English under Pen and Venables landed here, about 20000 strong, being most ruined Royalists, and Necessitous persons, who had been undone by Our then Tyrant and the times, May 3 1655. And the Spaniards being unable to resist so great a Force, retired into the Woods, and other fastnesses, hoping to have retrieved what they thus left, by a Treaty, but it proved otherwise, for part of the English fell to plant, and the rest to Privateer upon the Spaniards, by which they got Wealth; the same of this so encreased, that many going over to them, it became in a few years a very powerful Colony, and is now able alone to manage a War against all the Forces the Spaniards have in the West Indies. This Island is situate between 17. and 18 degrees of Northern Latitude, within the Tropicks, in the Mare del Noord 140 Leagues North of the main Continent of America, 15 South from Cuba, 20 West from Hispaniola, 160 North from Bello Porto, and 140 from Carthagene Nova. It is of an Oval from 170 miles long, and 70 in breadth, and contains four or five Millions of Acres, 900000 of which were planted in the year 1675. In the middle of it there is a lofty chain of Mountains, which run the whole Length of the Isle from East to West, from which spring great plenty of pleasant and useful Rivers, to the great refreshment and convenience of the Inhabitants.

The

The Soil is very rich and fat, which is black and mixt with Clay, except in the South-west parts, where it is generally a more loose Earth, but then it every where answers the Planters Care and Cost. The Air is always serene and clear, and the Earth in her Summer Livery here being a perpetual Spring. It has frequent showers of Rain, and constant cooling Breezes of Wind, which blow from the East, and the Dews which fall in the Night, quicken the Growth of what is planted; so that it is the most delightful temperate healthful pleasant Island, of all those in the West-Indies, and will be extremely considerable, when it comes once to be thoroughly peopled. John de Laet, saith, that for the Fertility of the Soil, the Pleasantness of the Woods, and the Plenty of all things, it is equal to the best of the Islands about it, but by reason of the want of Ports, and difficult access, infamous for Shipwrecks; otherwise it being seated in the midst of the other Island, between them and the Continent, it would be the most useful of them all to sail in the Bay of Mexico. Thus far he who wrote in 1633. Since that the English having obtained the Dominion of it, it is indeed more considerable, Strong, Rich, and Populous, than all the other Islands put together, and the most thriving Plantation we have in all the West-Indies.

The English being possessed of the Island, began to build Port Royal, upon an excellent Harbour, on the South-side of the Island, very commodiously seated for Trade, but upon a loose Sand, that neither yielded any firm foundation for the Houses, nor so much as fresh water for the life of Man; yet it became very large and populous, containing above 1500 Houses, and extending 12 miles in length upon the Harbour, and yet the Houses were as well rented as those in London. It became hereupon rich and well-traded from all parts, and was every day encreasing when in the year 1692, it was overtaken by one of the most dreadful Earthquakes that had been heard of, many of the Houses and Inhabitants being swallowed up alive by the Earth. Since that the Town is removing to the opposite Shore of the Harbour, where they have better foundation for their Houses, and many conveniences they had not before, though they will want some others.

This Town is a kind of Center of Trade, not only to the whole Island, but in some sort to all the Countries and Islands upon the Gulf of Mexico; The Riches that thus flowed in upon them, corrupted their manners, and may justly be thought to have hastened and encreased their calamities. The securing and encouraging this Great Emporium, is of infinite use and consequence to the Crown of England, there being no place to which a greater or more profitable Trade is driven.

Thus having took a short survey of the several parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government is committed chiefly to two great Vice-Roys; the one of Nova Hispania, who resides at Mexico, the other of Peru, who abideth at Lima, the principal City of those Kingdoms. The first hath Jurisdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Gallicia, Nova Hispania, Guatemala, Castella Aurea, and the Provinces of the Mexican Islands; the other over those of Peru, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the new Realm of Granada. Such scattered pieces as they hold in Guiana, Paria, and the Caribes, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to some of these. Of these the Vice-Roy of Peru is of greatest power, because he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government; which in the other are reserved to the King himself. But that of New Spain is counted for the better preferment, because of its nearness unto Spain, (in respect of the other) the Beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the People. For the administration of Justice, and ordering the affairs of the several Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lieth no appeal; that is to say, 1. Guadalajara, for Gallicia

Nova; 2. Mexico, for New Spain; 3. S. Domingo, for the Province of the Islands; 4. Guatemala, for the Division so named; 5. Panama, for Castella Aurea. Then for the other Government, 6. Quitos, 7. Lima, and 8. Charcas, in the Realm of Peru, 9. Imperiale, for Chile; 10. S. Fay, for the New Realm of Granada. From these though no appeal do lie in matter of Justice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Roys, an appeal may lie in affairs of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a standing Council in the Court of Spain, which is called the Council of the Indies, consisting of a President, eight Counsellours, two Proctors Fiscal (which we call the Solicitors general) and two Secretaries, besides other Officers; to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of these Countries, to appoint the Vice-Roys, to dispose of all the great Offices (except those of the Government of Peru) and spiritual dignities, to appoint Visitors to go into those Provinces, for the examining the actions of all Officers, hearing the Grievances of the People, and to displace or punish as they find occasion, but with the Kings privity and consent.

As for the Estates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalties from the Crown of Spain, hold them but for life, (except it be the Marquess of Valla in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their death returning to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldest son, or the next of blood; but so, that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not for any right of theirs. And though they have many times attempted to make these Commanderies and Estates hereditary, and offered great sums of money for it, both to Charles the fifth, and Philip the second, yet they could never get it done; the Kings most prudently considering, that these great Lords having the command of the Estates and Persons of their several Vassals, would either grind them to powder without any remedy, or upon any Inquisition into their proceedings take an occasion to revolt. Both dangers of no small importance; both by this uncertainty of their present Tenure exceeding happily avoided.

The Revenue which the King received hence, is said to be three Millions of Ducats yearly; most of it rising out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and Silver; the rest by Customs upon Manufactures and all sorts of Merchandise, and the acknowledgments reserved upon Lands and Royalties. But out of this there go great Exits: that is to say, to the two Vice-Roys 12000 Ducats; to the President and Officers of the Council of the Indies in Spain, 20000 Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the several Courts of Judicature very liberal Pensions; to every Archbishop and Bishop, of which there are 29 in all, 2000 Ducats at the least, and to some much more, to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite charges in maintaining Garrisons, and entertaining standing Bands both of Horse and Foot, in several parts of this Estate, and the continual keeping of a strong Armada to conduct his Plate Fleets to Spain; there must be made a great abatement, and the sum will bear it. For howsoever at the first his Revenue came from thence without any great charge, more then the keeping of a few Soldiers to awe the Savages; yet after he fell foul with England, and startled the Hollanders to Rebellion, he was compelled to fortifie all his Havens, and secure his Ports, and to maintain a strong Armada at the Sea, to convey his Treasures. Before which time the English (as is instanced in several places) did so share in his Harvest, that they left him scarce enough to pay his workmen; which if they should attempt again upon any Breach, they would find it very difficult, if not impossible, to effect any other way, but by making themselves too strong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from coming to him to supply his needs.

And so much for the AMERICAN Islands.

Having

Having thus travelled over (with Gods Blessing) the Known Parts of the World, and sailed through the most difficult Seas which embrace the same ; we should now man our Barque again, and try what Discovery we can make of the Parts Unknown, or not fully known to us as the others are.

atque
Quò properas, mea cymba ? redi, satis ardua ponti
Navimus : ecce Aulter pluvias jam cogere nubes
Incipit, hic tutum non est (mibi crede) morari.
Dum licet, in Portum tendamus, nubila clarum
Reddiderint ubi pulsa diem, revocabit ab alto
Nos Triton Scopulo, atque iterum tentabimus Aequor.

That is to say,
But whither goes my Bark ? Return : for we Have slic'd the Capering Brine enough : see, see,
The South wind 'gins to gather Clouds apace ;
'Tis no safe tarrying in so fierce a place.
Whilst thou hast time, retire, thou wearied Bark,
Into safe Harbour ; when the Clouds which dark
The World's Bright Eye shall be dispell'd away,
And shining Phæbus make a lightsome day,
Triton's shrill Trump shall thee recal again,
From the safe Harbour to the toaming Main :
And we with all our Powers will boldly try
What of this UNKNOWN WORLD we can descry.

An Advertisement to the Reader.

There is nothing of Greater Advantage to the World than the discovery of new Countries, and yet there is nothing goes on with more difficulty, for which many reasons may be given; but to make them throwly understood, they must be divided between Princes and Merchants, and those that are common to both.

Our Princes have of late been so engaged in Wars, and other such Avocations, that they have had no time or money to spend in things of this nature, which are Works of Curiosity and Grandure, rather than of Necessity and Policy. Secondly, All the Nations that are famed for Navigation, have found the lately discovered Countries in Africa and America, have so exhausted their Countries of their Inhabitants, that they have no desire to give a Temptation to more of them to leave their Kingdoms to their Ruine.

As to the Merchant, his design is profit, and nothing else, and these discovery Voyages will certainly for some time be driven to loss, and when they are once found certain and profitable, then others that had no share in the charge or hazard, will as certainly be putting in for their Shares of it, without any regard to the first Discoverer; nor can this be prevented, without the Princes will grant them Charters, to restrain the Trading thither for some time.

Both Princes and Merchants do very hardly pursue those things which they can never so Appropriately, as to exclude others from partaking with them in the thing so found; yet it cannot be denied, but the first Finder has always been well paid, but men are not satisfied with this, but envy all other men the least advantage they may make from their labour and experience. And it is impossible to hinder this, without sending potent Colonies, which in the present State of Affairs, are not to be spared out of any of our Maritim Kingdoms or States.

Thus the Dutch East-India Company having found the Terra Jassi, to the North of Japan, and the parts of the South Continent over against the Islands of the East-Indies, would never suffer either of them to be any further discovered or discoursed of, for fear the States of Holland should Erect a new Company to Trade in this new discovery, and take from them some part of their profit: And the same humour without doubt possessed our East-India and African Companys, and kept from endeavouring a perfect discovery of this South Continent, and also from giving any good account of that which they Accidentally met with.

The best way to promote it is, to erect a Company for that purpose; and in the mean time, let not any Man complain that there is want of Trade in the World, when it is apparent, that not one fourth part of that which is known is Traded to, and there is as much more to be discovered as is now known. Above half the North Hemisphere, and all the South, being either not known, or not Traded to. And 'tis the cold Countries that want most things, and Consequently do afford the best Trades. But in the South Continent there is both hot and cold Countries, and Men may take their choice as they think fit.

How much Trade may be enlarged by new discoveries, will appear to any man that compares the State of England as now it stands with what it was when Julius Caesar entered the same Country, about fifty years before the Birth of our Saviour; when the Britans went naked, and lived by hunting, and had no Towns but great Woods fenced in. Yet had the Greeks and Phenicians been here before him, and taught them to fight in Chariots, and to make use of Iron for Weapons, and to till the Ground. The same observation will be made good in Germany, Holland, Denmark and Sweden, and all the parts upon the Baltick Sea, and more Northward.

Such as the Romans found these Northern Nations, such were the Greeks, Italians, Spaniards, and Africans when when the Phœnicians first discovered them, and sent Colonies to civilize them ; and as civility and knowledge spread, so commerce followed, and being once began, it seldom or never fails to go on. And there is no doubt but the Company of Hudsons Bay, that Trades with the Northern Americans, is one of our best Companies, and doth deserve the greatest encouragement for that cause amongst many other, because they have opened a Trade where none was before, which will encrease and grow greater every year, as those people came to learn the use of all our Manufactures, and to value them, and they will as certainly spread the knowledge of them to their Neighbour Nations, which will enlarge the Trade every year.

The great design of God has ever been the Civilizing mankind, and that of the Devil has ever been the making them more barbarous; and those Men that promote that work of God, and behave themselves well in it, shall find the effects of his favour, in the prospering their affairs; but then they must deal civilly with the barbarous Nations, as far as is possible bearing with their simplicity and folly, and use no Treachery or Cruelty against them, and further than is necessary to their own defence, as to the last, for the first is never necessary or useful.

An Appendix to the former work, Endeavouring a Discovery of the Unknown Parts of the World

AN D here we are upon a new and strange Adventure, which no Knight Errant ever undertook before. Of things unknown, as there is commonly no desire, so less Discourse can probably be made upon them. By unknown therefore we must understand less known, or not well discovered; and in that sense we may as well endeavour to say somewhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the Discovery. And to say truth, even in the known parts of the World there is much unknown; as in the best and most flourishing Kingdoms of the Earth, there is some vast ground, either not cultivated at all, or not so well inhabited as the rest of the Country. For besides many vast Tracts of ground in the North and North-west parts of Lararia, and as such parts of India as lie North-wards towards Delanguer Nancrocot; the East-parts Caucasus and the Realms of Cathay it is conceived that the greatest part of the Midlands of Africk are undiscovered to this day, or the knowledge of them so imperfect, as comes near a Nescience; and for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders, (which are in part to be the Subject of this Enquiry) it is affirmed of the Midlands by John de Laet, (who hath made the most exact description of it that ever was extant) minima sui parte perlustratum esse, that the least part of them hath been discovered hitherto to any purpose. Leaving these therefore as before without farther search, we will divide the UNKNOWN WORLD into these two parts: 1. Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2. Terra Incognita Australis: which with their subdivisions we will now pursue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS is that part of the Unknown World which lieth towards the North; and is to be considered in these three Notions. 1. As directly under the Pole, which for distinction sake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2. as lying to the North-east on the back of Europe and Asia; or 3. on the North-west on the back of America.

1 ORBIS ARCTICUS is that part of Terra Borealis Incognita which lieth under or about the Arctic Pole; the situations and dimensions of which being taken with the Astrolabe by an Oxford Frier, are by Mercator thus described out of the Itinerary of James Cnoxe of Bois le due, or the Boische, a Town of Brabant.

“Under the Arctic Pole (saith he) is said to be a black Rock of wondrous height, about 33 Leagues in compass, the Land adjoining being torn by the sea into four great Islands. For the Ocean violently breaking through it, and disgorgeing it fell by 19 Channels, maketh four Euripi or fierce Whirl pools, by which the Waters are finally carried towards the North, and there swallowed into the Bowels of the Earth. That Euripus or Whirl-pool which is made by the Scythick Ocean hath five Inlets, and by reason of his streight passage and violent course is never frozen: the other on the back of Greenland, being 37 Leagues long, hath three Inlets, and remaineth frozen three months yearly. Between these two there lieth an Island on the North of Lappia and Burmia, inhabited, as they say, by Pigmies, the tallest of them not above four foot high. A certain Scholar of Oxford reporteth, that these four Euripi are carried with such furious violence towards some Gulf, in which they are finally swallowed up, that no ship is able with never so strong a Gale to stem the Current, and yet that there is never so strong a Wind as to blow a Windmill: The like is reported by Giraldus Cambrensis in his Book De mirabilibus Hiberniæ. So far and to this purpose he. But Blundevil our Countryman is of another opinion, (as indeed who not?) neither believing that Pliny or any other of the Roman Writers came hither to describe this Promontory; or that the Oxford Frier, without the assistance of some cold Devil of the middle Region of the Air, (and consequently able to endure all Weathers) could approach so near, as to measure these cold Countrys with his Astrolabe, or take the height of this black Rock with his Jacob's staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucian's Dialogues, then any serious Discourse: we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

2. The NORTH WEST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the back of Estotiland, the most Northern Province of America: by which it hath been much indeavoured to find out a passage to Cathay and China, and not to go so far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the Streights of Magellan. Attempted first by Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1497, at the charge of Henry the seventh of England. But having discovered as far as to the 67. Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutiny of his Mariners he was forced to return; when finding great preparations for a war with Scotland, that business for the present was laid aside. Resumed by Gaspar Corterialis a Portugal, Anno 1500, and after by Stephen Gomez a Spaniard, in the year 1525; but neither of them went so far to the North as Cabot. The Spaniards notwithstanding would not so give over, but first with five Ships from the Groyn, and afterwards by two from New Spain, sent out by Cortez, pursued the enterprize: which proving as successless as the former had been, occasioned Charles the fifth then preparing for Italy, on the payment of 35000 Ducats by King John the third, to suspend the Prosecution of it. Followed with greater industry, but as bad success, by Sir Martin Frobisher, who made three Voyages for these parts, (the first of them in the year 1579) and brought home some of the Natives, a Sea Unicorns horn, (still kept in the great Wardrobe of Windfor Castle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Country, found upon trial, when in England, not to quit the Cost. A great Promontory which he passed by he called Queen Elizabeth's Foreland, in whose name he took possession of it; and the Sea running not far off he called Frobisher's Straights. The Seas full set with Icy Islands, some of them half a mile about, and eighty Fathoms above Water: the People like the Samoeds, the worst kind of Tartars, in their lives and habit. John Davies followed the design Anno 1585, at the encouragement of Sir Francis Walsingham, then principal Secretary of estate: and having in three Voyages discovered to the Latitude of 73, by reason of the many difficulties which he found in the enterprise, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over; leaving unto a narrow Sea on the North of Estotiland the name of Fretum Davies, in the Latitude of 65 and 20 Minutes, by which name it is still called. After him followed Weymouth, Hall, Hudson, Button, Baffin, Smith; all English. The result of whose Endeavours was the finding of some cold Isles and points of Land, which they named King James his Cape, Queen Ann's Cape, Prince Henrie's Foreland, Saddle Island, Barren Island, Red-goose Island, Diggs his Island; all of them betwixt 80 and 81: and the imposing on some passages and parts of the Sea the names of Hackluyt's Headland, Smith's Bay, Hudson's Straights, Maudlin's Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and monuments of their Undertakings. Nothing achieved of publick moment, but the Discovery of an Island called Cherry Island in the Latitude of 74. and the Shores of a large piece of the Continent, which they caused to be called King James his New Land, most commonly Greenland; where they found many white Bears, with white, gray and dun Foxes, Partridges, Geese, and some other Provisions. Sea Unicorns Horns, great store of Morses, (or Sea-Horses) the Oil and Teeth whereof yield no small Commodity. But most considerable for the Trade of Whale-fishing, which our men use yearly upon those Coasts; of whose Oil, Bones and Brain (this last supposed to be the true Sperma Ceti, now used as Medicinal) they raised very great profit.

3. The NORTH EAST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the North of Russia and Tartary, by which the like passage towards Cathay and China hath been oft attempted; and hitherto with like success. Endeavoured first by Sebastian Cabot, the son of John Cabot, so often mentioned before, by him trained up in the Discovery of the North-east parts of America. His Employment failing here in England, he betook himself into the service of the King of Spain; and coming out of Spain, Anno 1549, was by King Edward the sixth made Grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Pension of 166 l. 13. s. 4. d. In the year 1553, he was the chief Dealer and Procurer of the Discovery of Russia and the North-east Voyages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellor, Burrough, Jenkinson; and after prosecuted by Pet and Jakman. Some of which perished in the Action, and were frozen to death; their Ship being found the next year hemmed about with Ice, and a particular account of all things which had happened to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Russia (since that time made a common Voyage without dread or danger) and passing down the Volga to the Caspian Sea, and by that to Persia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophie. The Hollanders in the year 1594, and in some years after, tried their Fortune also, under the Conduct and Direction of one William Barendson their chief Pilot; but went no farther then the English had gone before them; yet gave new names unto all places as they passed, as if they had been the first Discoverers, with Pride and Arrogance enough. Nothing since done of any note or consideration for the opening of the North-east passage, or giving us any better account of the North of Tartary, or any Country beyond that, but what we had many Ages since out of Paulus Venetus: so that we are but where we were, in a Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly discourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant Undertakings, yet when I look upon the natures of those Shores and Seas, those tedious Winters of ten months, with no Summer following, the Winds continually in the North, and the main Ocean paved with Ice so long together; I cannot chuse but rank the hopes of these Northern Passages amongst those adventures which are only commendable for the difficulties presented in them.

A great part of this attempt has miscarried, by the supposal that Wigats Streight between Nova Zembla and Russia was a thoroughfare lying in the Latitude of 70. and thereupon they have entered it, and been driven about by the Winds and Ice, till they have with great difficulty found the Way out again: Charles the second thereupon sent a Letter to the Czar of Russia to have it examined by Land, and it was found Nova Zembla was Joined to the Continent by a neck of Land on the East side, and that this Sea was nothing but a Lake. This is confirmed by the experience of our Mariners, who could never find any Tyde in that Sea. The Dutch on the contrary, who have kept the high Sea, have passed to 75. degrees of Latitude on the coast of Nova Zembla, and discovered Spitzberg to 81 degrees of Latitude, without any difficulty, of equal greatness. Now the greatest height of Nova Zembla is but 75. Though there be some small Islands on the East of that Cape, that reach to 80; so that the Cape of Nova Zembla may certainly be doubled, as has been found by experience. But in the next place, men fright themselves with another vast promontory in Tartary, called by the Ancients Cape Tabin. For it is agreed by all, that after Nova Zembla is passed, the Shore bendeth to the South. To which I reply that Nova Zembla is their Cape Tabin, but placed by information too much to the East by Ptolemy, and that it is wonderful in those dark Ages, they should ever be able to gain the knowledge of it, and of the Ryphean mountains, which butt upon it, beyond which they knew nothing, as neither did the Russians till of late, they found a passage above it to the South, but called it the Belt or Girdle of the World, and thought it unpassible. So that upon the whole we may safely conclude, there is a passage beyond Nova Zembla, and that it is most probable, this is the most Northern Cape they can meet with; and consequently that there is a passage this way to China. But if it should be otherwise, there are certainly Inhabited Countries beyond it, in which a Trade might be raised that would be more profitable than any of our other Trades are, and would open a passage by some of the great Rivers beyond that Cape to China, which would afford a more profitable Trade than that upon the Sea Coast usually is.

The way to discover this is, to send some Ships that shall Winter at Arch Angel, and set out in the opening of the Summer in May or April upon the discovery, and so pass straight away for the Cape of Nova Zembla, and in probability the Ship will be able to effect the discovery that Summer; if not the men must be furnished with provisions and materials to build an house to subsist anywhere, the want of which was the loss of Sir Hugh Willoughby on the Coast of Lapland.

To encourage this Discovery the more, there ought to be a Charter granted to a certain number of men, that they only shall use the passage by them so to be discovered for twenty, thirty, or forty years, as shall be thought fit, and to Trade by it to any part of the Eastern or Western World, but not exclusive of others. The profit of this Discovery is so great and well known, that I need say nothing of it, the World being already well satisfied of it. As

As for any passage by the North-west, it has been so well searched, that we may conclude it highly improbable, if not impossible.

There is two other ways besides that I mentioned, to discover the North-east Passage; one is to send some Marriners and Ship Carpenters by Land to the River Obb, and there to build a small ship, and go down that River, but this will be found hard, for want of Iron Work. The other is to send a ship from the East-Indies, to search the shores of the Corea, cutting North on China, and so to pass North-east as far is possible. This is more easy than the other, and perhaps more profitable; because at the worst, it will open a Trade between the hot and cold Countries on that side, which do most need each other, to the great profit of the Discoverer.

England is the Country in the World that is the most concerned to find this out, for a place to vent our cloaths and other manufactures, which are more saleable in the cold, than in the hot Countries.

But whatever be the Event of this, what I have added here, is all that has been discovered in these Northern parts of the world since the Author wrote, and has come to my Knowledge.

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA.

With better hopes we may go forwards on the next Discovery, and try what may be done on Terra Australis, or the Southern Continent, though hitherto Incognita also, almost as much unknown as the Artick Islands, which none but my good Frier of Oxon had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our Learned Brerewood to be as large as Europe, Asia, and Africa: and that upon such strength of Reasons, as cannot be easily overborn by any opposite. His Arguments in brief are these. 1. That as touching Latitude, some parts thereof come very near to the Aequator, if they come not also on this side of it: and as for Longitude, it keepeth along, though at several distances, the whole continual course of the other Continents. 2. It is clearly known, that in the other two Continents the Land which lieth on the North side of that Line, is four times at the least as large as that which lieth South thereof; and therefore, since the Earth is equally poized on both sides of the Centre, it must needs be that the Earth in answerable measure and proportion must advance it self in some places above the Sea on the South-side of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By consequence, what is wanting in the South parts of the other two Continents to countervail the North-parts of them, must of necessity be supplied in the Southern Continent.

To these two Reasons, with the Readers leave I may here subjoin a third from experience, all Marriners that in dubling the Cape of Good Hope, have by contrary winds been driven to 40 or 45 degrees of South Latitude, have by experience found the Southern Winds exceeding cold, though they were then in the height of Spain, or at most equal with the South parts of France; which proves, that those Winds come off a vast Tract of Land to the Southward, and not very remote neither, for all Winds that come off the Land, are colder and more piercing than those that come off the Sea.

The Country being so large, so free from the Incumbrances of Frosts and Ice and endless winter, I have oft marvelled with my self, that no farther progress hath been made in Discovery of it: considering chiefly by the Sites and Position of the Country, especially in those parts which lie nearest Asia, that there is nothing to be looked for, else where, either of profit or pleasure, but may there be found. Whether it be that there is some Nihil ultra put to humane endeavours, or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Gospel, or that the great Princes of the Earth think it no good Policy to engage themselves in new Discoveries, till the old be thoroughly planted and made sure unto them; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerful influence, thinks his hand full enough already, and being settled in so many and so wealthy Factories, will not adventure upon more: Which of all these, or whether all these together be the cause of the Stop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that here is a large Field, enough for Covetousness, Ambition, or desire of Glory, to spend themselves in, enough to satisfy the greatest and most hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth and Worldly pleasure; besides the Gallantry and Merit of so brave an Action. Most which hath hitherto been done in it, hath been by the encouragement of the Vice-Roys of New Spain and Peru: by the first of which we came acquainted with the Coast of Nova Guinea; by the latter, with those Countrys called the Islands of Solomon, but whether Continent or Islands, not yet fully known.

And yet we must not rob Magellanus of his part of the Honour, who, passing through the Streights which now bear his name, discovered those parts of it which, from the Fire thence seen, he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James le Maire to be an Island. Nor do the English or the Dutch want their parts herein, though what they did was rather accidental than upon Design. For in the year 1593, Sir Richard Hawkins, being bound for the Streights of Magellan, was by a cross wind driven on some parts of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Hawkins his Maiden Land; a Promontory of it shooting into the Sea with three Points he called Point Tremontain; and a pleasant Isle not far off by the name of Fair Island. Sailing along these Coasts in the 50. Degree of Southern Latitude, for the space of sixty miles and upwards, he found the Country as he passed to be very pleasant; and by the Fires which he saw in the night, to be well inhabited. By the like accident, Anno 1599, Sibald de Weert, a Hollander, in his return from the Streights of Magellan, fell upon some Islands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of fifty Degrees and forty Minutes, which he caused to be called Sibald's Island. And besides these, we owe to the Portugals the Discovery of such parts hereof, as they fell on in their way to the Eastern Indies, of which we have little but the names: as 1. Psitacorum Terra, so called from the abundance of parrots which they saw on the Coasts over against the Cape of good Hope; 2. Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and possessed by Idolaters, with the two Kingdoms of, 3. Lucach, and 4. Maletur; all three against the Isles of Java, from which little distant.

But the greatest light we have to see by into this dark business, is by the Voyages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Vice Roys of Peru and Mexico, as before was said. For in the year 1543, the Governour of New Spain, then being, sent Villa Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccas, who in that Voyage made a Discovery of a rich and flourishing Country, which he named Nova Guinea, by others since his time called Terra de Piccinacoli: and in the year 1563, Castro the Licentiate, then Vice-Roy of Peru, sent a Fleet from Lima, which under the Conduct of Lopez, Garcia de Castro, discovered the Islands of Solomon. To which if we subjoin the success of the Hollanders in the discovery of Fretum le Maire, and the Land adjoining, the best Description we can make of this Southern Continent must be in the Chorography and History of their Adventures; viz. 1. Terra del Fogo, 2. Insula Solomonis, 3. Nova Guinea: beginning first with Terra del Fogo, because nearest to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO lies on the other sides of the Streights of Magellan, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now discovered to be an Island by one Jacob Maire of Amsterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Schouten of Hloorn, both Hollanders. They began their Voyage on the 15 of June, Anno 1615, and on the 19. of January following they fell even with the Strait of Magellan. On the 24. of the same month they had the sight of another Strait, which seemed to separate this

Terra

Terra del Fuego from the rest of the Southern Continent; and on the 25 they entered into it. That part of the Land which (being entred into the Streights) they had on the West, they called Terra Mauriti de Nassau; that on the East, Statenland; the Streight it self, Fretum le Maire. The entrance into the Streight they found to be in 55 Degrees of Southern Latitude and 50 Minutes; the water running into the North Sea with so violent an Eddy, ut adversum maris aestum difficulter superare possemus, saith he who in the way of Journal or Ephemerides hath described the whole course of this Voyage. In the whole course thereof nothing so much observable (besides the Discovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had lost a Day, (as must needs happen unto such as in so tedious a Voyage had travelled Westward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders and the rest of Europe; though they had calculated the Days since their going out with all exactness. So that if there were any such Morality in the Sabbath, as some men pretend, these men must either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the rest of their Countrymen, or otherwile, to comply with them, must be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath all the rest of their lives. But of this more at large elsewhere. To return therefore to this Streight: it is said to be seven Dutch miles or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentiful of good Fish, especially of Sea-Calves and Whales. About the inferting of which Streight into the third Edition of my Microcolm, I receiv'd a Letter at such time as the Parliament was held in Oxon Anno 1625. subscribed G. B. and a little under that, Sub granda floridus, which whether it were the Gentlemans Motto, or the Anagram of his name, I am not able to say, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his desire were satisfied in the next Edition of that Work. For my encouragement wherein he gave me this direction following, "The news (saith he) of this New Streight coming into Spain, it pleased the King, in the year 1618, "to send and search whether the truth were answerable "unto the Report. And finding it to be much broader "then the other, and not above seven Dutch miles long, "he decreed, that being the more easie and compendious "way for Navigators, and less subject to dangers, his "Auxiliary Forces should be sent that way into the East-Indies to defend the Phillipine and Molucca Islands, and "the way by the Cape of good Hope to be left. In regard "that every such Voyage requireth twice as much time; "besides the variety of Winds, and often change of the "Air, not only troublesome, but full of diseases, confu- "meth the one half of the men before the return. "Whereas this way gaineth time (and, if need be, they "may dispatch business in the West as they travel into "the East) without any extraordinary danger or loss of "men. So far the very words of my Letter. The Intelligence given me in this Letter I find confirmed in a Relation of the Voyage made by Captain Don Juan de More, Anno 1618, at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who presently arm'd and furnish'd eight tall Ships to send this new way unto his Philippines and Molucca's, under the conduct of Petrus Michaelus de Cordoelen. Since it hath been found by experience that even from our parts to the Molucca's through this Fretum de Maire, is but a passage of eight months, sine ulla insigni navigantium clade, saith the Narrator. But of this Streight enough to satisfy my unknown Well willers Request, and inform my reader, being extreamly sorry that the Gentleman was not pleased to impart his name, that so his memory might have lived in these Papers, if they themselves be destinate to a longer life.

Now for the nature of the Soil, it is said to be very full of Mountains; but those Hills apparalled with Woods, intermixt with Valleys; the Valleys for the most part full of little Brooks, which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good pasturage; the Sea-coasts well provided with Bays and Roads, not unsafe for Shiping; though the Air every where, but chiefly near the Sea, be much subject to Tempests. As for the People, they are said to be of a white Complexion; but their Faces Arms and Thighs, coloured with a kind of Oker. of full Stature and well proportioned, their Hair black, which they wear long, to seem more terrible. The Men most generally naked, the Women only shaded on their secret parts with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deserve the name of Houses: so that the most which we can do is to coast the Island. In which we find towards Mare del Noordt, 1. A large Arm of the Sea called Entrado de S. Sebastian. 2. The Cape of S. Ives. 3. Mauritius Land. 4. Promontorio de Buen Suceso, or the Cape of Good Success. Opposite whereunto in another Island, is the Cape of S. Bartholomews, and betwixt them the Streight called Fretum le Maire. Then in the New South-Sea, as they call it, there are, 5. Barnard's Island. 6. The Islands of S. Ildefonso: 7. Cape Horn, on a fair Promontory, in the South-west Ande, which doubled, the Country goes along with a Streight Shore, on which I find some Bays and Capes, but no names unto them: till we come to the Western entrances of the Streight of Magellan, opposite unto Cape Victoria, then mentioned.

2. INSULAE SOLOMONIS, or the Island of Solomon, are situate on the West of Terra del Fuego, 11 Degrees on the South of the Aequinoctial. Discovered in the year 1567, by Lopez Garcia de Castro, sent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to find out new Countries. By him thus named, in hope that man would be rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from these Lands of Ophir.

In number they are many, but 18 the principal, some of which 300 miles in compass, others 200, and others of them less, till we come to fifty, and beneath that none. All liberally furnished with Dogs, Hogs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinamon, and some Veins of Gold. The chief of these eighteen are, 1. Guadalcanal, supposed to be the greatest of them; upon the Coast whereof the Spaniards sailed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and sacked, because the people of it, by a sudden surprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2. S. Isabella 150 Leagues in length, and 18 in breadth; the inhabitants some black, some white, some of brown Complexion. 3. S. Nicholas, 100 Leagues in compass, inhabited by a People which are black of hue, but said to be more witty then the other Savages. All of them situate betwixt the Streights of Magellan and the Islands of Thieves; and yet not well agreed upon amongst our Authors, whether to be accounted Islands, or a part of the Continent; the Spaniards having sailed 700 Leagues on the Coast hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they pass generally in account for Islands, and by that name are under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governours, let them pass so still.

3. NOVA GUINEA lieth beyond the Islands of Solomon in respect of us, proceeding, as we have begun, from the Land of Fire. Discovered, as before was said, Anno 1543, by Villa Lopus, (Herrera attributes the Discovery of it to Alvarez de SAVEDRA, and sets it higher, in the year 1527.) more perfectly made known, if I guess aright, by Ferdinando de Quirs, who being sent with two Ships to make a more full Discovery of the Islands of Solomon, and taking his course about the height of the Magellan Streights, discovering a main Land coming up close to the Aequinoctial, on the Coast whereof he sailed 800 Leagues, till he found himself at last in the Latitude of 15 Degrees, discovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purposed to settle a Plantation, and to that end presented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Country I conceive, by the Site and Position of it, to be Nova Guinea, coming up close as that doth to the Aequinoctial; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Maletina. And

And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I shall afford the Reader this Description of it, out of his Memorial; in which it is soberly affirmed to be a Terrestrial Paradise for Wealth and Pleasure. The Country is plentiful of Fruits, Coco-nuts, Almonds of four sorts, Pome-citrons, Dates, Sugar canes and Apples; plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Partridges, and other Fowl, with some Kine and Buffals. Nothing inferiour (as it seemeth) to Guinea in the Land of Negroes, and from thence so named. For as he saith, he saw amongst them Silver and Pearls, and some told him of Gold; the Countrys on the Coast seeming to promise much felicity within the Land. The Air he found to be wholesom and temperate, the Sea-shores to be full of Bays, Havens, and the exits of Rivers, making shew of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, some white, some like the Mullattos, others like the Negroes; diversified in Habit as well as Colour. Their Bread made of three sorts of Roots: without Government, but not without Religion; for they had their several Oratories and places of Burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in daily Wars with one another: their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other Weapons, but all made of Wood. Of this Country, whatsoever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took possession in the name of the Catholick King, and set up both a Cross and a Chappel in it; the Chappel dedicated to the Lady of Loretta.

The precise time of this Discovery I have not yet found, but that the time spent about it is by him affirmed to be fourteen years, to the no small endamage of his Health and Fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing else done by others in pursuance of his Propositions. Whether it were on any of the Reasons before laid down; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Bays or Promontories as he passeth along; but he either took such names as were given before, or found not any thing worth the naming. And for such names as were given before, (still taking Ferdinando Quir's new Country for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontory called Cape Harmosa, in the East parts hereof, near the Island of Solomon, and not far from the Aequator. 2. Another in the Western part, but as near the Equinox, called Point Primiro. 3. A third in the first bending of the Coast towards the South, called Capo de Buena Deseada, or the Cape of good Desire. 4. Rio de Valcanes. 5. Rio de Lorenzo. 6. Rio de S. Augustine, on the East of Cape Formoso towards the streights. 7. The Rivers of S. Peter. 8. S. Paul. 9. S. Andrew, and 10. S. James, betwixt Cape Formoso and Primiro.

But being there is little certain of these last Discoveries, and the greatest certainty we have of that little is nothing but a list of names without any thing observable in the state and story of the same, they may still retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore try my Fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Roys of Peru and Mexico, or taking out Commission for a new Discovery, will make a search into this Terra Australis for some other Regions, which must be found either here or no-where. The names of which are, 1. Mundus alter & idem, 2. Utopia, 3. New Atlantis, 4. Fairy Land, 5. The Painter's Wives Island. 6. The Lands of Chivalry, and 7. The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, Another world and yet the same, is a witty and ingenious Invention of a Learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger days, (but well enough becoming the austerity of the gravest Head) in which he distinguisheth the Vices, Passions, Humours, and ill Affectious most commonly incident to mankind, into several Provinces; gives us the Character of each, as in the description of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it: and sets them forth to the Eye in such lively Colours, that the Vicious man may see therein his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own Imperfections. The Scene of this Design is laid by the Revorend Author in this Terra Australis, the Decorum happily preserved in the whole Discovery; the stile acutely clear, in the invention singular. Of whom and his New World I shall give you that Eulogy which the Historian doth of Homer, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, neque post illum qui eum imitari posset, inventus est.

2. UTOPIA is a Country first discovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellour of England, and by him made a Scene of a Common-wealth, which neither Solon, nor Lycurgus, nor any of the Legislators of former times did ever dream of; nor had been fantasied by Plato, Aristotle, Tully, or any who have written the Ideas of a Form of Government, though not reducible to practice. Some of his Plots we have taken notice of already: viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt, by making of those Metals Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans, of Close stool, Chamber-pots and Vessels of such unclean use; by imposing it as a penalty on infamous persons, to wear Gold-rings upon their Fingers, and the like devices: as also his device to prevent mistakes and dislikes in Marriages, by giving the parties a full view of each other naked. Many more projects of this nature, some of them possible enough, but so unpracticable, so beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Common-wealth, that we may reckon this device amongst those strange Fancies, que nuncquam antea spe concepta, nedum opere tentata erant. The man indeed (considering the times he lived in) was of rare abilities; but this Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continent, this Terra Australis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place else.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Island of this Southern Continent discovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the Learned Viscount of S. Albans; one of Sir Thomas More's Successors in the place of Lord Chancellour, but far before him in the excellency and fecibility of his Invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Island of the Western or Atlantick Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato, both alike invisible. But for his falling into this Island, his description of it, the City of Ben-salem, and the manner of his reception there, such handsome probabilities, and so fairly carried, that to one not acquainted with the state of the World it would seem a Reality. But above all things, the Inventions and Designs of Solomon's House; for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving Nature to the best advantages of Life, and the benefit of mankind, are beyond comparison. The man I must confess had his personal errors, (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded: Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtissimi, as Paterculus once said of Piso, not one amongst many thousand (to pursue that Character) qui aut otium validius diligeret, aut facilius sufficeret negotio. A man of a most strong Brain, and a Chymical Head, who, if he had been entertained with some liberal Salary, abstracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature; and furnished with sufficiency both of means and helps for the going on in his Design, would, I am confident, have given us such a Body of Natural Philosophy; and made it so subservient to the publick good, that neither Aristotle, or Theophrastus amongst the Ancients, nor Paracelsus, or the rest of our later Chymists would have been considerable.

4. FAIRY-LAND is another part of this Terra Incognita, the habitation of the Fairies, a pretty kind of little Fiends or pigny Devils, but more inclined to sport than mischief; of which old Women, who remember the times of Popery, tell us many fine Stories. A cleaner and more innocent Cheat was never put upon poor ignorant People, by the Monks and Friers. Their habitation here or no where, though sent occasionally by Oberon and their other Kings, to our Ports of the world. For not being reckoned amongst the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils, (but such a kind of midling Spirits as the Latines call Lemures, or Larvæ) we must find out some place for them, neither Heaven nor

nor Hell, and most likely this. Their Country never more ennobled then by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem called the Fairy Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greatest persons in her Court: but shadowed in such lively colours, framed so exactly by the Rules of Poësie, and presenting such Idea's of all Moral goodness; that as there never was a Poem more artificial, so can no Ethical discourse more fashion and enflame the mind to the love of Virtue. Invisurum facilius aliquem quam imitaturum, shall be Spencer's Motto; and so I leave him to his rest.

5. The PAINTERS WIVES ISLANDS, is an Island of this Tract, mentioned by Sir Walter Rawleigh, in his History of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedro de Sarmiento, a Spanish Gentleman, employed by his King in planting some Colonies on the Streights of Magellan, (which we have touched upon before) who being taken Prisoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about some Island which the Maps presented in those Streights, and might have been of great use to him in his Undertaking. To which he merrily replied, that it was to be called the Painters Wives Island, saying, that whilst the Painter drew that Map, his Wives sitting by, desired him to put in one Country for her, that she in her imagination might have an Island of her own. His meaning was, that there was no such Island as the Maps presented. And I fear the Painter's Wife hath many Islands, and some Countries too upon the Continent in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the strictest search.

6. The LANDS of CHIVALRY are such Islands, Provinces, and Kingdoms in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World, and therefore must be sought in this. A gross absurdity, but frequent in those kind of Writers, who in describing the Adventures of their Knights, in despite of Geography, (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not only disjoyned Countries, which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the description of many Islands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the ingenious Author of the History of Don Quixot merrily observeth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this sort is the Isle of Adamant, in Sir Huon of Burdeaux; the Firm Land, in the History of Amadis de Gaul; the Hidden Island, and that of the Sage Aliart, in Sir Palmerin of England; the Islands of Lindaraja, and the Devilish Fauna, with the Kingdom of Lyra, (of which the Amazonian Lady Anchisiloria was the rightful Queen) and many others of that kind, in the Mirror of knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primaleon, and Belianus of Greece, Parisimus, the Romance of Romances, and indeed whom not of all that Rabble? handsomely humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Island of Barutaria, of which the famous Sancho Pancho was sometime Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicona. And yet I cannot but confess (for I have been a great Student in these Books of Chivalry) that they may be of very good use to Children or young Boys in their Adolescence. For besides that they divert the mind from worse cogitations, they perfect him that takes pleasure in them in the way of Reading, beget in him an habit of speaking, and animate him many times to such high conceptions, as really may make him fit for great Undertakings.

7. The NEW WORLD IN THE MOON was first of Lucians discovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a conscience, apostatizing from the Faith in which he was bred. Aristophanes had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nephelococgia, or a City of Cuckoes in the Clouds. But Lucian was the first who found out this New World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that World which he there fancyed, and proposed but as a fancy only, is become a matter of a more serious Debate; and some have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by persons of divers Languages, Customs, Politics and Religions? and more then so, some means and ways proposed to Consideration for maintaining an intercourse and Commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other world is supposed to be? Certainly there are stronger hopes of finding a New world in this Terra Australis then in the body of that Planet, and such perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleasure the later Discoveries of America.

But I am no discourager of Industry and Ingenuity, which I love and honour wheresoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been started upon less presumptions. Nor would I be mistook, as if in my pursuit of this Terra Incognita I put scorn on any of sublimer thoughts, or that I would have any man so much in love with the present world, as not to look for another world in Heaven above. It is reported, that in some Controversie betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Moscovy, the King of Poland sent the Moscovite a curious Globe, representing the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each several Sphere. To which the Moscovite returned this unworthy answer, Tu mihi Cœlum mittis, ut redde mihi Terras de quibus contendimus; You send me Heaven, saith he, but that will not satisfy, unless you give me back those Lands which are now in question. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not lose their part on earth for all Heaven it self: whom I desire, if any such peruse these Papers, to consider, that as much as the most flourishing Country which is here described doth fall short of that Paradise wherein God placed our Father Adam, so much, and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradise fall short of the unspeakable Glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and careful search of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of God which are here presented, and that vicissitude of humane Affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to some serious thoughts of that mighty God who made all these Works, in whom is no shadow nor shadow of change to whom he given all Glory both in this World, and that to come.

*Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variâque vices, trepidoque tumultu
Æstuat, & nunquam sentit pars una Quiescentem
Nam ruit in sese, & civili vulnere semper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; alioque renascitur ore,
Rursus ut intereat: sic non est omnibus unum
Partibus Ingenium, non vis nativæ. Sed Orbis
Astriferi, & nixidæ sublimis Regio Cœli
Immunis semi, & vultu immutabilis uno,
Perpetuum servant solida & singera tenorum.*

The Verses are G. Buchanan's in his Book De Sphæra, which I thus Translate, and therewithal conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon its shapes doth vary,
And change from this to that; nor can it tarry
Long in one state, but with it self doth jar,
Kills and is kill'd in endless Civil War.
Now form'd again, 'tis but to die; the frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Minds the same.
But that above the Sphæras, the Heavens on high,
In which GOD Reigns in glorious Majesty,
Free from old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Always presents it self in equal Grace.

Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, sed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.
